Men succeed who work; they fail who will not work. Mr. William H. Ridgeway says: "When you read the life of any successful man you will never find he started his career in an eight-hour job. Most of our ablest men came off the old farm where nothing regulates the hours of work but milking time." We do not agree with him as against the eight hour day, but we do insist that it is work that counts, and work that does not watch the clock, work that is not afraid of overtime. It is true in the work of the Kingdom as much as anywhere else. Let the church be filled with people who are willing to work, willing to work in unmeasured quantity and without thought of or comparison with what another may or may not be doing and the progress of God's kingdom will go forward at an unheard-of rate.

The church school ought to rally to something new in the conduct of its program of worship. Rally Day should bring us out of the rut and with a plan to keep us out, and not to fall into the old monotonous grind for another fifty-one Sundays again. It should be the beginning of something more varied and worthwhile. If we want people, especially the children, to love the school, its sessions must be bright, alive and varied; it must be made really interesting. Set the standard on Rally Day and let the school know that it is a promise of what is to come and the pupils will keep coming back as long as you make good. It will take time, thought and effort, but it will pay.

Rally Day should mean the kindling of zeal for those untouched by the church of its school of religious education. God's people must reach out with concern for others if they are to keep spiritually alive. That outreach is called evangelism, it is missionary endeavor, it is getting new members and bringing them in touch with the Word of God. And it requires a willingness and readiness to go wherever and whenever opportunity calls. Zinzendorf said to a brother at Herrnhut, "Can you go as a missionary to Greenland?" "Yes." "Can you go tomorrow?" "If the cobbler has finished my shoes I can go tomorrow." Such quick, willing-hearted response is what the church needs in every city and hamlet. It needs more of the spirit that Wesley coveted when he said: "If I had three hundred men who feared nothing but God, hated nothing but sin, and were determined to know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified, I would set the world on fire." May God make of us such men. May he cause us to become such men as the heathen convert prayed for when he said, "God send us men with hot hearts." Rally Day should start the kindling of such zeal.

Rally Day should result not merely in the speeding up of the activity of the church and school, but should mean an increase in efficiency and persistency, a getting set for a long, steady, determined pull throughout the months ahead. Frederick W. Taylor, the inventor of scientific management, maintains at all times that his great idea is the idea of doing work more efficiently, and in no sense the idea of mere hurrying to get more work done. But that is not the idea of efficiency that commonly prevails among our Sunday schools and churches; it is nothing but "speeding up." It is mere rush and noise and fussy maneuvering, with little well-directed effort and less patient continuance and accomplishment. We need not mere speed, but more persistent "pressing on." It is not spurts and starts that win, but persevering steadily, determinedly, efficiently on unto the end that gains the crown of success. Let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season we shall reap if we faint not. Rally Day will do us a world of good, if it sets us forward with a new grasp of that truth.

Wayne B. Wheeler, Prohibition Exponent

The dry cause has had many great advocates and noble defenders, but only one whose spirit and activity have so completely dominated the movement as to have practically identified Prohibition with himself, and that was Wayne B. Wheeler. His entire life since his graduation from Oberlin, thirty-three years ago, was devoted to the fight against the liquor traffic, but it was during the last decade that he had become a national figure in position and in power. The larger part of his work, in point of time, was accomplished in Ohio, where he was advanced step by step until he was made superintendent of the state Anti-Saloon League and where he built up an organization that became as effective in delivering dry votes as he had been in pleading the dry cause. And it was the prohibition efficiency of Ohio that in many respects proved to be the backbone of National Prohibition. Since the World War Mr. Wheeler had been general counsel of the Anti-Saloon League with headquarters in the nation's Capitol, from which he directed the destiny of the Prohibition cause with a skill and a certainty that was almost uncanny. He was keen, resourceful, practical, undiscourageable and never-yielding, a great leader with a great faith in a great cause. He was thoroughly convinced of the evil of the drink traffic and he fought it with all his versatile powers and fearless life. He never was unmindful of the character of the enemy he fought, that it was the organized liquor traffic, and as such, was capable of any measures however foul or shameless to protect its business and that it was in league with every sort of vice and crime with which the land was cursed. But he never faltered with fear nor flinched in the face of danger. Misrepresentation, infamy and malignment were heaped upon him, but he never winced nor allowed himself to be nettled by it. He kept a clear head and a steady nerve and with uncommon sagacity and superior generalship, he was able to outwit his opponents at almost every turn. No one was so widely and thoroughly feared nor so bitterly hated by leaders of the liquor traffic as he, and that fact is in itself as great a tribute as could be paid to the power and uprightness of his personality and to the force and effectiveness of his leadership.

Wayne B. Wheeler is dead, but he fought a good fight and kept the faith to the very end. Prohibition was his constant burden; it occupied his every waking thought. When his life went out on September 5, 1927, he made every lover of sobriety, law-enforcement and national welfare greatly his debtor. He left a place among the temperance forces that will be hard to fill and laid down a burden too heavy for any one man to carry on successfully, for he himself broke under it. His duties have already been divided and placed upon various shoulders, and may require further shifting before they are satisfactorily placed, though his associates and successors are splendid men, all of them. However we should not be discouraged, for though God removes his leaders, he continues his cause, and we have faith to believe that the cause of Prohibition will not suffer more than a temporary shock. It will go on to greater completion of victory and the enemies of temperance who may be breathing a sigh of relief will find that their real enemy is the great Jehovah, who never falls in battle, neither slumbers nor sleeps.

But God works through human agencies and men need to be aroused to a feeling of responsibility for their task. They need to be kept alert and warned of the danger, and to that end we quote words we recently heard from the lips of Mr. Wheeler at Winona Lake, Indiana, possibly the last speech he ever made:

Nullification is a cowardly, a sneaking form of treason and should be fought as vigorously. Weakness resorts to treachery only when in the face of overpowering strength. The wet appeals to nullification are a confession of the lack of the numerical strength to obtain by legal and constitutional methods what they seek to gain by improper and dangerous means.

The nullificationists, whether they be intellectual highbrows or back-alley lowbrows, are enemies of this nation, and every good citizen should fight their indefensible doctrine wherever it is expressed, whether it be in the home, at a social function, a public gathering, or as a practice of the government.

The strength of the Anti-Saloon League has been the organization of the dry forces to do whatever is necessary to accomplish its task honorably. Those opposed to the saloon and the beverage liquor traffic were organized and public sentiment was educated to realize the evil effects of alcohol on the individual. Then the law was secured to abolish the vile traffic. This educational work must be continued with two million new voters who are added to the electorate each year and who know little or nothing of the saloon and why it was outlawed. Unless the majority remain convinced the wisdom of the prohibition policy, it will be repealed or nullified.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Ohio Conference is announced by the Secretary-Treasurer, Brother M. L. Sands, to convene at Canton, Ohio, October 4 to 7.

An interesting and well-balanced program for the Mid-West District Conference to be held at Hamlin, Kansas, October 11 to 13 is published in this issue.

Brother R. Paul Miller, pastor of the First church of Philadelphia, where the Pennsylvania conference is to be held gives some instructions in this issue as to how to reach his church.

Mrs. Orville D. Jobson, missionary to French Equatorial Africa writes a letter to the children telling them that prayer has been answered and a new mission school has been opened in Bassai, and that its advantages are sought most eagerly by the native boys and girls. At the time of her writing forty children were living on the mission grounds and engaged in school work, and twenty-one of those children had accepted Christ.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports an endowment gift of $1,000 to Ashland College in the form of an annuity. He very properly urges that more of our Brethren who have money shall consider this means of disposing of a portion of their possessions. The advantage of this method is that one may be sure that his property will go where he wishes it to go and yet he may have the benefits of its income to the last.

We called attention last week to the newly elected president of the Brethren National Christian Endeavor Union. This week he gives us another brief message. Also Brother Vanator, the Boosters' Committee chairman, calls for the support of the Endeavorer's Kentucky program. Make your pledge and mail it at once. They are courageously launching out on the support of the Krypton work. It's worthy and it's your job. "Now then do it."

Brother J. L. Bowman, pastor of the churches at Vinco and Munday's Corner in Pennsylvania, reports progress at both points. At Vinco every department is given creditable mention because of its activity. The Sunday school is nearing the one hundred mark. At Munday's Corner (The old Pike church) the Sunday school is trying for the two hundred mark, a commendable goal for a rural church. Five were recently added to the church roll at this place. A revival meeting is in contemplation here following the one now in progress at Vinco, with Brother I. D. Bowman as evangelist.

Dr. C. F. Yoder makes a very favorable report concerning our mission work in Argentina. Progress is being realized at every point and the various missionaries are proving themselves splendid workers. The birth of two little sons to two of our missionary families is reported and we extend congratulations to them in behalf of the Evangelist family. It is not difficult to see the wisdom of Brother Yoder's observation regarding the expediency of training a native leadership, it is in accord with the widely prevailing attitude in other mission lands, but the events to which he alludes as having cooperated to bring about such public sentiment in South America are a sad commentary on the selfishness and aloofness of our own national life.

After a long absence the Business Manager is back in his "Corner" again and he announces a most attractive offer to pastors desiring to promote the circulation of the Brethren Evangelist more widely among their people—ten or more copies of the Evangelist sent to one address for three months for ten cents per copy. This is an opportunity that no one should miss whose church is not now on the Honor Roll and who believes in the value of the church paper to his congregation. If you cannot see to the distribution, appoint some responsible person to do it in your stead, but do not neglect to order the required number of papers. Do it now. We add our word of appreciation of the fine loyalty of our Honor Roll churches.

Brother A. B. Cover gives us his first report as pastor of the First church of Los Angeles where he was warmly received and has found very loyal support. His reception was almost a district affair as the pastors of most of the churches were present on the special occasion set apart for that purpose and assisted Brother A. P. Reed in the welcoming program. Brother N. W. Jennings, the former pastor, was present on the first Sunday and kindly introduced the new pastor to his people. Brother Cover reports a number of special and successful events since his taking charge of the work, the one of outstanding importance being the Easter service with its generous offering to Foreign Missions and its eleven decisions for Christ.

The Pastor as a Leader in the Spiritual Life of His Church

By Charles W. Mayes

(Address at the late General Conference at Winona Lake, Indiana)

One of the pastor's greatest responsibilities is attaining and maintaining the proper spirituality in his church. Since there is a vast difference between a church member and a real Christian, the pastor's obligation goes far beyond the work of making church members. It is a sad truth that today many in our churches know very little about salvation, consecration, and the life guided by the Holy Spirit. One of two things is the matter, either they have not been fed the proper spiritual food, or they did not partake when it was before them. The responsibility for nourishing spiritual food lies at the door of the preacher and this is the aspect of the question which we intend to discuss.

If the pastor is to be the leader in the spiritual life of the church, let us ask first, WHAT IS MEANT BY THE SPIRITUAL LIFE OF A CHURCH? Does it refer to the size of the Sunday school with little attention given to the church? Does it mean that some church activity must take place every night? Does it mean organizing a "program of work" to hold the young people who are supposed to be so enlightened that they will not receive the "threadbare theories and outworn dogmas" said to be in the Bible? Does it mean shows and pageants and other stunts to get a crowd? Does it mean a feed, to the people there? Does it mean the biggest program of community betterment and social welfare in the town? What is spirituality in a church anyway?

We know from Biblical truth that believers are each members of the body of Christ. From the standpoint of the individual, a spiritual life is a life in whom the Holy Spirit has control. The more church members under the direction and control of the Holy Spirit, the more spiritual will be the life of the church as a whole. In 2 Corinthians 5:17 we read, "If any man be in Christ, he is a new creature, old things are passed away, behold, all things are become new."

There is no substitute for being IN CHRIST. The more new creatures, in Christ, born again, and consecrated to God's will and plan, the greater will be the spirituality of the church. True spiritual life in a church cannot be on any basis but a Biblical basis, and Christ must be exalted to his proper place as a virgin-born, dead and sacrificed lamb of God, risen from the dead, lifted to the right hand of the Father, and worshipped as only Savior and Lord, who gives the promise to return as King of kings and Lord of lords. No church can be a spiritual church and steal from the Lord Jesus Christ his place of Deity as revealed in the Bible. This leads us to say also that no church can be a spiritual church and entertain doubt for the Holy Scriptures. I am not surprised to see men deny the Bible. I am not surprised to see men slander our Lord. I am grieved, but how infinitely must the Lord Christ be grieved. I say I am not surprised, for the Word of God reveals that there will come scoffers walking after their own lusts. There will be false teachers. There will be those who have not the spirit. There will be counterfeits for the ministers of satan himself are sometimes transformed into ministers of righteousness. Hear me! There is such a thing as a counterfeit spirituality. It is this, from which we pray to be preserved.

Now let us look at the part the pastor has in the spirituality of the church. The pastor must be a teacher. His text book must be the Bible. The best kind of religious education in the world is the teaching of the whole Bible, proclaiming a whole Christ and declaring the whole council of God. In this the preacher must be the leader.

The writer has in mind six Biblical truths necessary to a spiritual church which the pastor must make clear and establish in the minds of the church people. Let us note them carefully.

First, the spiritual church must understand why Christ came into the world. The spiritual church must see Christ as the lamb of God slain from the foundation of the world who came to give his life a ransom for many, for whom it was absolutely necessary to die. He must emphasize that Christ died for our sins according to the Scriptures and only in his death and in the flowing of his blood can any man be saved. Jesus Christ was the only individual ever born into the world who was born for the purpose of dying. This is opposed by that common theory of the Bible on the tongues of so many misinformed Christians, that Jesus came to show us how to live. The fact is he came to give life and a man cannot live until he is alive in Christ Jesus.

Second, the spiritual church must understand what salvation is. Salvation is a gift of God. It is not earned by works lest any man should boast. It is the life of God in the believer. By the grace of God man is saved through faith and kept by the indwelling of the Holy Spirit.

It seems that some preachers allow their people to think salvation by works is possible in order that they may get a little more work out of the people. This is perverting God's truth and twisting his program. Salvation is by Grace through faith, and of the works of the Christian will bring rewards but never salvation. The pastor who is a spiritual leader must exercise the utmost care to show the difference between salvation and rewards. Here many Christians are untaught. When one comes to see the meaning of the redemption through Christ there is no greater incentive to work for the Lord. A glimpse at the great soul winners of all generations will show this plainly. The truth of salvation will also show how Christ is righteousness to every one who believes. Thank God! Our righteousness in the sight of God is not our own. We are made perfect in the sight of God not by striving toward ethical principles but through the work of the crucified Son of God. He was made sin for us, who knew no sin that we might be made the righteousness of God in him.

Third, The Spiritual church must understand what it means to have a Christ today. He is not dead. He is with the Father. And if any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous. How marvelous is the truth that he ever liveth to make intercession for us. This was brought to me more forcibly when a Catholic man converted to Biblical truth and to salvation in Christ Jesus told me the experience he had when he first was able to show his dear old Catholic mother this wonderful truth. What a joy to pray straight through to God with only the Son as high priest.

Fourth, The spiritual church must understand the office of the Holy Spirit. Most of us do not stop to think what a privilege it is to have the indwelling of the Spirit. When churches hear, and love this fact they will strive after God's truth. They will love the Word. They will depend upon the spirit to reveal and to guide into all truth. They will claim the promise "If any man desire wisdom, let him ask of God." Praying in the spirit will become a new privilege and an overwhelming joy.

Fifth, The spiritual church must know, and practice consecration of life and possessions. Here the pastor may become a real leader. How can the preacher lead a church to tithe if he does not tithe himself? It is doubtless true that some preachers think themselves exempt from financial obligations because of small salaries. If the Lord got his share maybe he would see fit to raise the figures a bit. Let me say a word about the Brethren church. The spread of the Gospel depends upon money. And if the financial statement of the foreign missionary society of our church shows the interest of the preachers in the spread of the Gospel and the spirituality of our church, may God have mercy on the preachers as leaders! When our preachers give, our churches will too. The old story about "Don't do as I do but do as I say" may be a popular attitude, but it will never make a pastor a spiritual leader of a spiritual church.

Sixth, The spiritual church must understand the whole council of God. This depends again of course, upon the pastor. If he does not teach the Bible, who will? There never was a time when the church needed the whole Bible as today. We are told however, that the young people do not want the Bible. The man who says that either does not know young people or does not know the Bible. The young are hungry for the Bible if they get it straight. Nine times out of ten they will see spiritual truth more quickly than the old fellows. It has been the writer's privilege to talk to many young high school and college people who have come to love the Word of God and study it diligently. They love the redemption story. And some who have not heard it before marvel at the unspeakable love shown at Calvary. There is an empty space in the heart of every young man and woman which only Biblical truth can fill. We as preachers must be careful that we do not misinterpret our young people and think that they want "high class stuff" when the Bible is the highest class of all.

In one of our own publications not long ago, there seemed to be a question as to whether or not the young people would take the old Gospel. But the answer is a short one. They will take it if they can get it. The human heart, young or old, wants the truth. And the truth is found in the Bible. If one wishes to see the interest young people have in the Bible just teach for instance the prophetic Word in connection with the "Literary Digest" of the last year. The whole plan of God will find a welcome hearing with every group of young people who have not been perverted by the false and faithless notions of older folks. The pastor who wishes to be a spiritual leader will surely teach the Word of God. He will teach it patiently and in love but never compromising with untruth. God will take care of his Word. If we pastors will but bring the Bible to the people AND TRUST GOD, he will lead the people to the Bible.

In these days it is impossible to tell how much depends upon the pastor as a spiritual leader in the church. The people trust him and take his word. What if he should fail to declare the whole counsel of God? The obligations of the pastor are tremendous today. Never was there a time when man was more unable to see a way out. Never have men needed the Bible as badly as today. Many things are taking place before our eyes which the Bible only can explain. There is the return of the Jews to Palestine, the apostasy in the professing church, the alliances between governments, known and unknown, the preparation for the rebuilding of the temple at Jerusalem, the beginnings of heavings in the earth's crust in Palestine and the revival of the Roman Empire. About these things it is time to see what the Bible teaches.

Let us search the Scriptures for God's plan and purpose for the church and throw man's programs to the winds, believe and teach the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible, and God will make our preachers spiritual leaders, and our churches spiritual churches with POWER to preach the Gospel to the ends of the earth with genuine results.

The Cross that Jesus Gives

By Dr. C. F. Yoder

The cross that Jesus gives to bear
Grows lighter every day
Until it bears the bearer up
To realms of endless day.

It is the cross of perfecting
The jewels for our crown,
The virtues that we need to learn
Before we lay it down.

It carries wings of sympathy,
The tears for others' woes,
And burdens we for others bear
Bring sure and sweet repose.

It carries wings of service sweet,
That love would have us bear,
And love makes light the heaviest load
That we with others share.

It carries wings of gratitude
That lift us far above
All thoughts of self to him whose cross
Reveals his wondrous love.

It carries wings of fellowship,
As in our pilgrim way,
We walk and talk with him who said
"I am with you every day."

It carries wings of blessed hope,
That soon he shall appear,
And those who bear the cross with him
With him a crown shall wear.

Human Personality, Nature and God

Indeed, it is plain that the world needs man's personality. The processes of Nature are incomplete until man supplies the unifying touch. The plough without the rain is a useless thing, but rain and plough are the complementary symbols of a progressive partnership. There must be fuller and fuller human personality to keep pace with an ever unfolding creation.

All the world is ever on the lookout for a man. In every department of life we know that progress tarries until he comes. In an imperfect way we strive to produce him. What else do we mean by education or social improvement? I break no law of nature if I become wiser or a better man. It is that for which my own nature pants and strives. I profoundly influence the laws of nature if I thus develop, but I do not frustrate them. When I put up my lightning rod I do not alter the lightning's law, but I guide the lightning. When I become more unselfish and public-spirited I do not tamper with the economic law, but I may make it an instrument of well-being and wider good, instead of, if I do otherwise, a divisive and discordant thing.

If I want to alter the law that swings the planet in its orbit I am foolish and futile, but if I want to alter myself, make myself wiser, braver, better, there is no fiat, divine or human, to prevent me.

If God can help me to do that, he breaks no established order, violates no law. In this realm God himself has a free field. It is the one way in which Omnipotence can mingle freely with human limitations and be not a disturbing but an unifying element.—Dr. F. W. Norwood in The Gospel of the Larger World.

The Rural Church and the Community

By Floyd Sibert

(The first installment of Brother Sibert's "Graduation Thesis" from Ashland Seminary was published in the issue of August 20, our "Rural Church" number, but it was found necessary to postpone succeeding installments till now, and we find that instead of two remaining installments, it will be necessary to divide it into four. We trust that this thoughtful effort on the Rural Church problem and the other articles recently published will result in widening the interest in and increasing serious study of this problem that is so vital to the conservation of Dunker church life.—Editor.)

Men who will till the soil are responsible for large human destinies. Rural life today may well be compared to a modern "Atlas" who bears the world upon his shoulders. How well they perform their task is a matter of supreme concern to the human race as a whole. When Ruth was troubled and forced to a decision between staying in a godless country, or perhaps a city, or going to the strange but fertile land of Boaz laden with rich bounties from God's hand, she decided by saying, "Thy people shall be my people and thy God my God." She chose God and nature's hardships rather than godlessness and ease. Hence those haughty, thoughtless folks who exhort to the music of "clanging cymbal" for the removal of the rural church to city centralization, should arouse from their mental insomnia and say with heartfelt understanding, Thy problems shall be (are my) problems and thy destiny my destiny. There was a day when the farmer's household formed a complete unit of society, i. e., the farmer's family, the maiden aunt, the hired man and the maid. With this one unit of society intact the rest of the world might have been destroyed and a new social order would have been built up from this one unit. But the days of isolation are gone forever. Today my neighbor's problems are my problems. His life affects my life.

A new world has sprung up in the country. Into this new world rural life must establish itself. IT IS THE BUSINESS OF THE CHURCH TO HELP IN THIS STABILIZING PROCESS.

Economic conditions have changed. The farmer is no longer an independent self-sustaining unit of society. Today the man of the rural section must cater to the whims of BIG BUSINESS for everything that he possesses. To the baker for bread, to organized merchants for his clothing, to consolidated trusts and combines for his machinery and building material. Likewise we could name a host of other necessities for which he is responsible to some big organization. The only thing that he has that is really his own is his farm, and the banker or loan company probably has a mortgage on that. All of these and more are vital problems of Christendom.

The rapid growth of cities has added its problems. City migration is another problem along with the scarcity of labor and wage condition. . . . Farm tenantry has become a serious factor. But if we have set forth the economic problems in terms of reality; the social, religious and educational are equally real and perplexing. The city migration has changed the personnel of the rural population. Centralizing of schools has changed the environment of the child and has brought a new atmosphere into the home. Traveling facilities and home amusement add their number to the list. These and many others go to make up the present untoward condition of society. Warren H. Wilson sums up the situation by saying that, "The decay of rural life in America is seen in four types: First, individualism; second, degenerate groups; third, speculation, and fourth, exploited land." Each one of them arises not out of the church itself but out of social economy of the country. They are all results and causes that affect the farmer in the process of getting a living. Four periods of country life are seen in these four kinds of decay: the pioneer or solitary farmer; the land or household farmer; the exploiter or speculative farmer; and the husbandman or organized farmer who at present is fighting the exploiting of land. These four great American countrymen have followed one another across the stage of the open country. They have built their churches and communities like unto themselves. The spirit of the future seems to be one of organizing the farmers and federating the churches.

Coming more specifically to the realm of rural church life we must face the problem of the complex church situation. The situation of the rural church is adequately attested by the records of a survey made by the "Ohio Council of churches" in 1920. The Ohio Christian News, in commenting on their findings said, "In this or any other county a comprehensive programme of Christian evangelism must make special provision to carry the Gospel to people of unreached territory." To the wide-awake Christian leadership of 1920 the overchurching, haphazard method of Christian activity represented a life and death issue. . . . To quote them they say, "Upon the completeness with which this work is carried on (the readjustment process) depends the answer to the question whether the passing of the church of the open country shall mean the death of religious influence in rural territory. This, perhaps, is one of the biggest problems of today; i. e., TO GET THE FORCES OF CHRISTIANITY TO COOPERATE IN SUCH A WAY THAT THEY MAY CARE FOR THE COUNTRY DISTRICTS.

The traditional view of business is based on competition. Two stores vieing with one another for trade make for a healthy community. Thus the propounders of Christian doctrines and creeds have unthinkingly attempted to force the Christian work of the church through the channels of industrial methods. Reasoning thus, to remove a Methodist church from a certain community would cause a Baptist church of the same community to die because of the lack of competition. This is the household farmer's view of competitive denominationalism. It may have been good in his day but it is out of place in this age. The chief criticism is that it is based on non-cooperative principles. Therefore, if we are to have a Christian community we must have, not Christian ascetism or division, but CHRISTIAN UNION.

THE TASK OF THE RURAL CHURCH

What then is the task of the rural church? Where is the boundary line of her influence? Is it confined wholly to the field of theology? In the days of Abraham Lincoln the boundary lines of the home were the four walls of a log cabin. Its influence radiated to the outer ring of the family circle and died for want of human conveyance. But today influence starts at the vine covered doorstep of a humble cottage and penetrates to the darkest corner of industry and the remotest situation of a complex society. The task of the church was great in that day. Indeed its task was supreme. But supreme only within the confines of a limited parish.

Today the task of the rural church is not essentially different but it has grown with the ceaseless, changing process of nature. To adequately meet the needs of an ever growing and developing community the task of a church dare not be static. Where there is no growth there is stagnation. Our present social order represents an infinite system of live wires encircling the globe, through which flows the determining current of society, industry and government. The church cannot escape from the meshes of this net-work of human contact. The live wire church will not attempt to asceticise its people. It will assume the new responsibility and become a power to step up the spiritual current in each community.

With this new medium of power the dead line of Christian influence for the rural church fades into oblivion and its past becomes one of civic and political import. The rural church cannot flourish so long as civic conditions are intolerable. Every rural church program should be planned with an apprehension of the existing nuisances to public health; of the educational level of the community; the industrial conditions and the social and the living conditions. The church should be awake to the needs of the community and seek to correct the wrongs by fostering honest politics and an every-citizen-vote campaign.

Rural christendom must send its influence into the field of economics and champion the cause of a balanced wage and better living conditions. It must, through its educating and enlightening process, help man to choose his vocation. The church should foster the conditions that would make the agricultural vocation appealing. In addition to its spiritualizing influence, its task is both educational and recreational. In many communities the people must be educated to their task. Through education their minds become pliable, alert and active. Recreation man must have and will have if he is to live. So the question is not, Will he have recreation, but Will the church direct or in some way sponsor wholesome amusement? All of these fields of activity are fields of community power which can and should be charged by the church, with Christian magnetism until their power becomes a Christian community force.

I have been driven many times to my knees, by the overwhelming conviction that I had nowhere else to go. My own wisdom, and that of all about me seemed insufficient for that day.—Abraham Lincoln.

"An eclipse of the sun is not caused by any change in the sun, but by an opaque body, the offspring and satellite of the earth, coming between the earth and the sun. And so, when Christian men lose the light of God's face, it is not because there is any variableness or shadow of turning in him, but between him and to them has come the blackness of their own sin."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Place of Power and Prayer

By Dr. J. A. McAfee

TEXT: 1 John 5:14. "And this is the boldness which we have toward him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us."

And such a boldness it is! Surely we would not dare come unto him at all, if we had not seen him revealed in Jesus Christ. Surely we would not come with any confidence, if we had not known his love, shown forth in the gift of his Son, our Lord. To come before Almighty God, the Maker of heaven and earth, is a bold thing; to come before him expecting him to hearken unto our cry is doubly bold. Yet, without fear and in all expectation, the follower of the Christ comes before the Eternal Creator.

Prayer is axiomatic in any religion worthy of the name. It is elemental in the life of every man. By whatever name it may be called, there is a yearning of every soul for companionship with the higher powers. In the Christian this natural yearning has come to its ripe fruition in communion with God, the Father.

It is not a careless statement which John makes in his letter. There are two qualifications: "And this is the boldness which we have toward him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us." Our asking must be "according to his will," and, even when so made, it does not follow that he will answer as we would have him, but only "he heareth us." Though we grow petulant and impatient, we know that it is better so.

"We, ignorant of ourselves, beg often our own harms, which the wise powers deny us for our good; so we find profit, by losing of our prayers."

We do not come to God with a fanatical belief that he stands ready to grant our slightest wish; that prayer is for us a sort of Aladdin's lamp by which we can gain our desires. We have no words of Scripture which justify such a view. "And this is the boldness which we have toward him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us."

The God revealed to us in Jesus Christ is a prayer-hearing and a prayer-answering God. Every believer should know the place and power of prayer. Better, he should give it place in his life, that he might know its power.

Prayer is communion with the heavenly Father. Prayer must never deteriorate into a mere recital of our needs and desires, a catalog of our requests. God does not heed the information which we alone can give. The Master said to his followers: "For your heavenly Father knoweth that ye have need of all these things." You and I today fail to find the power of prayer because it becomes the mere reiteration of our requests, and we do not come into communion with our Creator.

Prayer must never become the price paid for the good will of God. Divine blessing must never be a quid pro quo, with the extent of the blessing dependent directly upon the length of the prayer. The poor, ignorant woman mumbles her prayers and counts her beads, thinking that the oftener the prayers are numbered off, the more graciously God will look down upon her.

Just how easy it is to take such a view of prayer is shown by the remark of a small boy. The lad made earnest request to his mother that he be allowed to go to sleep under the bed. When pressed for a reason, he replied that if a robber came in the night he would look for him in the bed and would find him easily, while he would not think to look under the bed. The mother asked the boy if he did not pray every night that God would watch over him during the night. The child replied "Yes," and seemed to be satisfied. The mother went on reading and in a little while the youngster asked her if it were not light about four o'clock every morning. She replied that she guessed it was. Then the lad said: "Well, I just pray to God to watch over me in the night and a robber might come after four o'clock." In the thought of the child, the prayer must be altered, if God were going to watch over him after day-break. We do not put the thing quite so baldly. In many cases that is due to the fact that we do not think as clearly as the boy. We do have a feeling that the blessing of God will be in direct ratio to the amount of our prayer. To us who so think Jesus has something to say. "But when ye pray, use not vain repetitions as the heathen do: for they think that they shall be heard for their much speaking."

Prayer is the meeting-place of our spirits with him who is Spirit. It is the faith of the Christian that there is such a meeting-place, and that, not alone can we come making known our desires and our needs to him, but that, too, we can hear him speaking to us. It is for us in prayer to train our hearts to hear and to understand his voice. Our understanding must not be dulled, as was that of the boy Samuel, who perceived not that the voice which spoke to him was the voice of the Lord.

In prayer it is God who must be sought. It is not things we seek primarily, but God. When we have found him our prayers have been answered. It is communion with the Eternal that our hearts crave. It is a bold thing to say, but the Christian has that communion with the Infinite in prayer.

"Not thy gifts I seek O Lord;
Not thy gifts, but thee.
What were all thy boundless store
Without thyself, what less or more?
Not thy gifts, but thee."

Prayer has its untold influence upon our own spirits. It cannot be but that we shall come away from a time of communion with the heavenly Father changed men and women. If it were only for this reflex influence prayer would be eminently worth while. Tennyson was not using idle words when he said: Solitude is the mother-country of the strong." Great men and women have ever been the men and women who knew the power of that solitude—alone with him.

Prayer has a quieting, strengthening influence upon our spirits. An article, written by a business man, tells of the visit of a friend who asks him the secret of his serenity and freedom from worry. He in turn asks his friend if he has never met other men from whom he seemed to draw strength and courage and faith, who were as a reservoir of power. The friend acknowledges that he has met a few such, but bemoans the fact that in life there are so few. The business man says: "In this respect I am very fortunate; it's the secret of my taking things as easily as I do. There is such a Friend right here in this establishment, whose companionship has meant everything in the world to me. When things are crowding me pretty hard, I simply stop short and shut my door and talk to him for a few minutes.

"He's a very wonderful friend," he concluded. "I couldn't get through the business day without him."

"He must be," the visitor assented. "I'd like to meet him. What's his name?"

Though the other doubted if he could make his friend understand, he said: "He's the Senior Partner in this business, and his name is God!"

Prayer has a purifying influence upon our spirits. Somehow, by his greatness, our own littleness is done away; by his purity, some of our impurity is washed out. I can do no better than to put it in the words of Bishop Trench:

"Lord, what a change within us one short hour
Spent in thy presence will prevail to make;
What heavy burdens from our bosoms take;
What parched ground refresh as with a shower!
We kneel, and all about us seems to lower;
We rise and all the distant and the near.
Stand forth in sunny outline, brave and clear.
We kneel, how weak! we rise, how full of power!
Why, therefore, should we do ourselves this wrong,
Or others, that we are not always strong;
That we are ever overborne with care,
Anxious and troubled, when with us is prayer.
And joy and strength and courage are with thee?"

Prayer is a constructive force. Prayer as meditation is good, but the Christian belief does not stop with that. "And this is the boldness which we have toward him, that if we ask anything according to his will, he heareth us." Prayer has been called "The priceless human contribution to the Kingdom," and "The highest creative functions of personality." We must never come to look upon prayer as pious meditation alone. When we do that we have not yet discovered the place and power of prayer.

Very simply, the Christian belief is that in prayer the believer sets in motion spiritual forces, releases spiritual powers, that would not be set in motion or released apart from his prayers. By his prayer the Christian enables God to do things in the world that would be impossible otherwise.

There is nothing in this belief that in any way contradicts the best-authenticated discoveries of science. The scientist cannot, and for the most part would not care to deny the existence of spiritual forces. He may be blinded to them, as were the eyes of the young man with Elisha to the cloud of chariots and horsemen round about the city. The eyes of the Christian are opened and by his prayer he puts those spiritual forces in operation. It is the conviction of the Christian heart that prayer is a great constructive force—the greatest constructive force which the church or individuals have at their disposal.

What would happen if this thing, with all its implications, once became fixed in our hearts? What a change it would make!

A few days ago I was talking to a thoughtful layman. We were talking of the ever-vexatious problem of the mid-week service. He gave me it as his opinion—and I cherish greatly his opinion on any subject—that we were making a mistake in not making of those services what they are usually called “Prayer Meetings.” He felt that if our church members could be brought to the thoroughly Christian view of prayer as a constructive force, they would be found in the services. Frankly now, did it ever occur to you that in prayer you are exerting an influence that is felt around the world? Did it ever occur to you that the greatest thing you can do for the kingdom of God is to pray—not repeat some words—but pray? If we realize that, we would meet together, as a serious business to put into operation those forces which would reach to the uttermost parts of the earth.

The place and power of prayer are fundamental to the Christian faith. It is one of the golden threads in the fabric of our faith. It is a power, not alone to strengthen and purify our own hearts; but it is the “priceless human contribution to the Kingdom!”—Selected.

“The Other Side of the Street”

By S. C. Henderson

(Sermonette recently published in “The Fremont (Ohio) Messenger”)

Not long ago, I read the story of a little girl whose eyesight was found so impaired that she was taken to a noted specialist. After days of skilled and careful treatment the bandages were removed and she was taken home by her mother. As they neared the house, the little daughter stopped and cried out, “Mother, look! Look! The street has two sides.” There are a lot of folks who are much older and have better eyesight that have never discovered that a street has two sides. They see only one side—their side.

As I sit at my window on a winter day and look at my neighbor's house across the street and he sits and looks at mine, we both have different views. I see the outside of his house and he sees mine. My neighbor differs from me. He reads other papers and books than I do. His business is different than mine. He goes to another church. His political views are opposite than mine. Yet he is a mighty fine neighbor. I find much we have in common, when summer time comes, we both mow our lawns and talk back and forth across the street to each other. We discuss our gardens and boost our town together. Yes, we have so much in common, neighbor and me, and he is a mighty fine neighbor. Not long ago I found this verse. I do not know its author, yet it reflects the other side of the street:

“Each Sabbath day I love to go
And worship with the folks I know,
Yet crowds there be who do not come
To sing God's praise in my church home,
They have their own good place to pray—
God bless my neighbor 'cross the way.”

In life there are so many folks so preoccupied with their side of the street to know that there is another side. I have known persons who were so attached to an idea that all else in the world was trivial and unimportant. It may be a doctrine of religion, a political platform or a hobby. It is all they can talk or think. They become fanatics and cranks. Every street has its other side. We should learn to know it.

Someone has recently said, “Civilization is not going 200 miles an hour BUT IT IS LIVING TOGETHER BEAUTIFULLY.” In order to live together beautifully, to love and to mingle, we must see that our street has two sides.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE HEAVENLY THINGS—John 3:1-13. “If I have told you earthly things, and ye believe not, how shall ye believe if I tell you of heavenly things?” Here is suggested a condition of progress in the understanding of spiritual things, it is the acceptance of the earthly, the things that are seen, the things that are at our very feet. Dr. Jowett once said on this point: “He has glories upon glories to make known to us, but we must begin by reverencing that which we know.”

TUESDAY

THE FINAL TEST—Matt. 25:35-40. “I was hungry and ye gave me meat.” Have we found God? Is he in our lives, motivating, inspiring and directing us? Or is our profession hollow, our worship insincere, our lives and activity selfish and unsympathetic? He in whom the spirit of God prevails and whose life is filled with service, is the one who shows forth the glory of God. In such a life we find God; that is the final test.

WEDNESDAY

FEARING GOD—Psalm 111:7-10. “The fear of the Lord is the beginning of wisdom.” The note of ear is too much lacking in present day religion. We do not respect God as a factor in our lives, as we ought. If we truly feared God, we would follow righteousness in all relations of life without compromise. We fear men too much. As another has said, “We need a blazing, searching, overpowering fear of God in our modern life.”

THURSDAY

PERCEIVING THE LOVE OF GOD—I John 3:16-21. “Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he laid down his life for us.” We shall not begin to understand the love of God, until we are willing to follow him in the practice of it. He died for his enemies, but we will scarcely give our lives for our friends, to say nothing of the ugly, the unkind, the stranger and the foreigner.

FRIDAY

MEDITATING ON THE LORD—Psalm 63:1-7. “When I meditate on thee in the night watches.” If the balance of life is to be maintained, there must be quietness and meditation as well as activity and striving. And especially is the time of quiet thoughtfulness needed in the Christian life; we must meditate on God. It deepens and strengthens the soul and gives to it the true perspective.

SATURDAY

LIMIT OF HUMAN HELPFULNESS—Psalm 49:6-12. “None of them can by any means redeem his brother, nor give to God a ransom for him.” There are limits beyond which we cannot go in helpfulness to our fellowmen. David lamented over Absalom: “Would God I had died for him.” There is a sense in which we can give our lives for others, but we cannot die for the sins of others. Only the Son of God could do that. But within the limit of our possibility we should halt at nothing that will help the soul of another.

SUNDAY

MEASURE OF GREATNESS—Matt. 20:25-28. “And whosoever will be great among you, let him be your minister.” It at first seems like a paradox. We naturally expect the great to be served, but it is not actually the case. The truly great are found among those who serve. Those who do the most, who go the farthest, who undertake the most difficult tasks, who stand out on the fringes of civilization and make the greatest sacrifices, may be poorly paid so far as money values are concerned, but they make their lives count for the most and are among God's great ones.—G. Introduction

Jeroboam's vices were soon followed by punishment. In ch. 14, Rehoboam and his successor encouraged idolatry in Judah, and thus brought calamity on the people. In Israel especially the connection between sin and punishment may be clearly traced. Ahab, not content with indulging in idolatry, married a woman whose whole life had been idolatrous, and who had now firmly established the worship of Baal in the land. To rebuke this, Elijah who appears very abruptly and suddenly in ch. 17:1, is sent of God to the palace, delivers his message of terrible judgments, then as suddenly retires. It is thought that Elijah must have reproved the crimes of Ahab before this, though without effect. The denunciation of "no rain" lasted 3½ years, 18:1; Jas. 5:17. Palmer. It was time the fatal controversy should be decided. There must be an appeal to the people. Elijah dictated: "Let all Israel be summoned to Mt. Carmel"; and there he would singly meet in their presence the 450 prophets of Baal, and the 400 prophets of the Asherah. Then and there a great challenge should take place, and the question should be settled for ever, whether Baal or Jehovah was to be the national God of Israel.—Farrar.

Elijah

The inhabitants of Gilead were the Highlanders of Palestine, Israelites, but akin to the Bedouin, strong, hardy, temperate, swift; Elijah was a typical mountaineer. Elijah was, tradition tells us, a man of short stature, of rugged countenance. He was "a lord of hair"—the thick, black locks of the Nazarite (for such he probably was) streamed over his shoulders like a lion's mane, giving him a fierce and unkempt aspect. His brown limbs, otherwise bare, were covered with a heavy mantle, the skin of a camel or a sheep worn with the rough wool outside, and tightened round his loins by a leathern girdle. "He was a clean-limbed, frugal-lived man, who gathered up his skirts about him, we are told and ran straightaway sixteen miles before the chariot of Ahab, from Carmel to the entering in of Jezreel; a calm, quiet, courageous, firm-principled man; bred so in the desert with God."—Illustrated Quarterly.

Mount Carmel

Mount Carmel was specially adapted to Elijah's purpose. It is a ridge twelve miles in length. At a point four miles from its southeastern extremity is a natural plateau 1,000 feet above the plain of Esdrelon. Here great numbers could assemble. The flame of the sacrifice would be visible for twenty miles around. Jezebel could see it from the capital at Jezreel. It was a pulpit from which the prophet could preach to all Israel. Here was summoned all Israel. The king and his suite were there, though Jezebel remained at her palace. The four hundred and fifty prophets of Baal came "probably in all the bravery of their sacrificial vestments" (2 Kings 10:22).—Ibid.

The Test of Fire

And when the people, awestruck and conscious of their guilt, made no response, Elijah proposed that each side prepare a sacrifice and pray to their deity; the God who answered by fire from heaven would be the true God. The test was dignified and appropriate. Sacrifice was common to all religions. Then Jehovah claimed to be the God of nature, to have brought the famine, to have sent Elijah, to have wrought miracles for his people. He could do it now. On the other hand, it was fair to Baal, for (1) Baal claimed to be the sun-god, lord of the elements and forces of nature, and therefore, if this were true, he of all idols could send fire from heaven. (2) The attempt was to be made in the full light of the rising sun, when Baal was especially worshipped. (3) If Baal could work this miracle, then he was able to bring rain, and the famine continued from no want of power on his part.—Alice D. Adams.

What We Can Learn from Elijah

Elijah centered his thought on the main thing, obedience to God. The nation might be outwardly strong and rich, but he knew that, if it disobeyed God, it was really weak and poor.

Elijah dared to be in a minority of one—with God. He dared to confront the most powerful evil, with the Almighty on his side.

Elijah believed in the invisible. He leaned on supernatural aid. He was a man of prayer and so a man of power.

Elijah used no polite and soft terms in speaking of evil. He called a sin a sin.

Elijah was invincible while he was doing God's will. His only defeat was when he feared Jezebel, forgetting God.

Elijah was consistent because he kept close to God. His life was crowned with great honor because it was a Godlike life.

In all its essentials, Elijah's life may be copied by any reformer today. And every Christian should be a reformer.

"In drawing lessons from the life of Elijah there is no need that we should go beyond the record or the range of his vision. He lived up to the best that he knew, just as Paul tells us that he had lived in all good conscience even at the time when he was holding the garments of those who stoned Stephen and haling Christians to prison. We should not set up Elijah as a model of mercy, or as a New Testament type. It is a far cry from his way of dealing with the prophets of Baal to Christ's method of treating his enemies. As a matter of fact when James and John wanted Jesus to call down fire from heaven and consume the villagers who had treated him unhospitably, as did Elijah, he replied, Ye know not what spirit ye are of. These things, however, Elijah does represent in the fullest degree, and in them he may be to us an inspiration: 1. Faith and Decision. 2. Courage and Vigor. 3. Plainness and Democracy."—Gilroy.

WHY PREACHERS MOVE

Preachers are human.

Congregations are made up of human beings.

Every preacher has peculiarities of his own.

Every congregation has peculiarities of its own.

Some preachers are high-strung and finicky.

Some preachers love praise, but can't stand criticism.

Some preachers don't study much and soon run out of sermons.

Some congregations have spiritual dyspepsia and must have a change of diet occasionally.

Some preachers don't have very much love in their nature.

Some preachers are rather fond of going about and telling of other people's faults.

Some congregations are like bill-boards on which are pasted the little mistakes and shortcomings of their preachers.

Some preachers have been bitten by the gypsy bug and just love to move.

Some congregations are somewhat of the moving type.

To some preachers another field looks greener.

Some congregations think that the other minister isn't quite so green.

Some preachers can scarcely forgive or forget.

Some congregations can scarcely forgive or forget.

May we not sum up with our introduction, that both preacher and congregation are human?

As preachers, let's be more patient and forgiving and work a little harder.

As congregations, let us be more patient toward our ministers' shortcomings, more forgiving, and let us work a little harder that together we may uphold the banner of Christ, that the world may be turned from darkness to light and the greatest desire of minister and congregation alike shall be attained by the labors together.—World Evangel.

Salutatory

Endeavorers:

We are standing at the beginning of a new conference year. As your newly elected President, we shall from time to time offer suggestions and help. At this time we are presenting the Booster committee, who will again present our work for this year as was accepted by the Christian Endeavor staff, with a goodly number of society representatives present, who likewise have enthusiastically endorsed the same. Our chairman, Brother F. C. Vanator, who was re-elected to represent us on the Home Missionary Board, will present to you the proposition. He will be assisted this year by R. D. Barnard and W. R. Deeter, as the other two members on the committee.

We shall be glad to have any questions or suggestions from time to time, if you will just write us. May we anticipate a great year together.

Yours for a successful C. E. year,

E. M. RIDDLE,

Christian Endeavor's New Objective

At the late General Conference the need was felt for a new objective for Christian Endeavor. Our cry for the past three years has been "The Support of a Teacher in Kentucky." The cry has been far flung, but the response has not been so far reaching. Word came to us that regardless of what the Endeavorers did the teacher would be supported and the work at Riverside would go on. So the Executive Committee began to search about for some objective which would furnish the proper impulse to work. We believe we have found it in the Krypton work. So, when the Home Mission Board came to us with the suggestion that we take over this field for the present and do with it what we could, we welcomed the suggestion and it became a matter of record that this become the definite goal of Brethren National Endeavor. So instead of our appeal being for the mere support of a teacher in Riverside, it will have a wider scope and will call for the support of Brother and Sister Kinzie. We will not have much to give them this year, for the amount raised during the past year was very meager. But we are issuing a call to the various societies to pledge well and mightily for the coming year. We received pledge No. 1 at the Conference from Oakville, Indiana, in the sum of $25.00. Who will be the next?

In a short time it is our purpose to have an article on this page from the pen of Brother Kinzie, telling us in detail of the work being accomplished in Krypton. We want you to become acquainted with the field and know of some of the accomplishments. We are asking that at least $600.00 be raised before next Conference time. We are appending a pledge blank hereunto for your convenience. Fill out and return to our General Secretary, Miss Gladys Spice, 2301 13th Street, N. E., Canton, Ohio, or to the Chairman of the Booster Committee, Rev. F. C. Vanator, 1803 Fourth Street, S. E., Canton, Ohio.

Do not delay. But DO IT NOW!

Yours for the Master's Sake,

F. C. VANATOR, Chairman Booster Com.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

Going Forward. Exodus 14:15

Patrick O'Rand sat on the front row in his church every Sunday morning. He tried to listen to the sermon always as boys and girls should do. Sometimes he understood the things that were said but other times it was very hard for him to keep his mind on the words of the pastor. Patrick was one of those little boys who like very much to be doing things, so it was pretty hard to sit still. One morning as he was looking at the preacher and trying to keep from wanting to get outside and run a race, he heard some words that caught his attention. There were just three words that he noticed in particular at first, "Run the race." Now Patrick was just sitting there wishing that he might run a race and he wondered what the pastor could say about racing. That did not seem an appropriate topic for a sermon. Then Patrick noticed that the words were being read from the Bible and he thought, "Can it be possible that the Bible says anything about running races?"

Then the preacher started talking right to Patrick. He said, "Boys like to run races. They like to put all the strength that they have into a good hard race. There are numbers of obstacles that they have to overcome but they enjoy putting forth their best. They learn to control their breathing, they learn to watch for obstructions in their paths and to steer a straight course right to the goal. Now there are other races just as interesting and just as important as foot races. It seems to me that all boys who like to run races ought to enjoy races between their bodies and their spirits. Did you ever think that your spirit and body are often in opposition? The real you is your spirit, the body is only the spirit's dwelling place; but sometimes the body wins in the race with the spirit. When people go forward more in strength and outward show than they do in the development of faith and love and kindness then the body wins the race over the spirit. Maybe I am making this a little too hard for you children to understand but I would like to interest you in this race which I feel sure you have never thought of before. I want the spirit, the real you, to win in its race with the body. Suppose that Bobby Smith is playing with one of his friends. That friend gets angry and says something unkind, immediately there is a race between Bobby's body and his spirit. If the real Bobby, the spirit, wins the race, then Bobby will control his anger, but if the body wins the race, Bobby will probably get in a fight with the other boy. I do hope that the spirit may be the winner in all the races in each of your lives, my boys."

Now Patrick really did not understand all that the preacher had said, so when he got home he talked it all over with his mother. He told her that he thought it would be very funny to run a race with your own body. However, he told his mother that he was going to see if he could win in the race against his body.

Each night Patrick reported to his mother about his progress in the race on that day. If he had yielded to temptation and used his strength to settle matters, or if he had been unkind to someone instead of stopping to use his mind and spirit to decide what was best to do; then, he felt very bad. But as the days passed, Patrick had more and more victories over his body and his quick temper. When he could tell his mother that he had been kind to someone whom others had mistreated, when he could say that he had controlled his tongue while others grew angry, then both of them rejoiced over the winning of the race. So it was that Patrick went forward in faith, love and kindness and his spirit won the race which it had against his body.

The friends of Paul warned him against Jerusalem. But it so happened that their advice was not wise. They would save him from suffering, but it was God's will that he should suffer for Christ's sake. We cannot always shun suffering without losing an opportunity to achieve a purpose which is greater than any price we have to pay. It was so with Paul and it is often so with us. Our friends do not well when they would choose the path of flowers for our feet.—The Methodist Protestant.

Argentina, South America

It is gratifying to write that the missionary work of the Brethren in Argentina is prospering in all points. Letters from the other workers all indicate progress and blessing.

Brother Anton is doing colportage work with Bibles and portions and has made several long trips along the railways besides canvassing some in Buenos Aires. He has had good success and is contented in this work, although it takes him away from home most of the time, and that too when a little boy has come to bless his home.

Brother Zeche is doing splendidly as pastor of the church in Buenos Aires, or rather, as missionary, for we have really no church as yet. Being in a rented hall we recently had to move again, but Brother Zeche found a suitable place and the new hall is filled with people at each service. Recently the students in the girls' seminary with their director went in a body to attend the services in our mission. Brother Zeche also accepted the invitation of the noted preacher, Juan Varetto, to speak in his church in La Plata and made a very profitable visit there. Mr. Quarles, editor of the Baptist literature in this country wrote me the following: "You will be interested to know that we are all very much pleased with Mr. Zeche. He is a good student and a fine, cultured gentleman. He will make a good worker I am sure."

In Alejandro Brother and Sister Reina are the proud possessors of a second boy whom they have named Joel Andrew. The work is growing both in Alejandro and Gilini. Brother Reina has purchased a used Ford to use in visits to Gallini and other places.

In Cabrera there is steady growth. The auto has been a great blessing to the work as it has enabled Brother Sotola to reach out to the country and to other towns and this has reacted in new enthusiasm in Cabrera. In Tancacho the few believers are so enthusiastic that they are considering trying to build a small church themselves.

Recently Brother and Sister Sotola spent a week in Laboulaye in a campaign with Brother Iztueta. Mrs. Bendetti, a fine worker from Rufino was also present. Both halls proved to be too small for the crowds and there is such an interest in the Gospel that from being the most backward mission Laboulaye has come to the very front and is leading the rest. Brother Iztueta is now in Huinca Renanco for a campaign of a week there which Brother Yett will doubtless report later.

It is certainly gratifying to see our native workers developing so well that we can constantly increase the responsibility confided to them and know that if we should withdraw the work would go on.

Events indicate that we should develop our native ministry. Ever since the failure of Wilson's plans for a world federation with the United States as moral leader, the influence of our country has been on the decline and one event after another has happened that has increased the suspicion and even hatred of the South American countries toward the United States. This has been fanned by the Romanists and communists in their sectarian literature until a sad situation prevails. A large part of the people have come to think of the United States as the most reactionary, selfish, criminal, vicious and oppressive of the nations. That is why an event like the execution of Sacco and Vanzetti could be made to rouse the people so that the lives and property of North Americans were in danger almost everywhere. Even in Cabrera Brother Sotola, though a Checo-Eslovak was warned that he was in danger because living in North American property. Here there were orators that called to reprisals, but we have been here a long time and on friendly terms with the laboring men, having spoken a number of times in their meetings. On the day of the first strike we invited the public to come to the mission and pray, and though no one outside of our own people came, yet the Lord answered prayer and we have been constantly respected. One of our Sunday school boys was passing the plaza when the meeting for protest was at its height and heard the orator calling for cheers for the Culto Evangelico to which the crowd responded with great applause.

The significant thing to my mind is the preparation of the machinery by which the anti-Christ can manipulate the masses, especially the working classes, and inflame them to do his will. The world is more nearly ready for the great crisis than it knows.

In Rio Cuarto the Christian Endeavor prepared a program for the national holiday, but had to postpone it on account of bad weather. It was recently given with great success. Over 300 were present. New people keep coming right along. Next Sunday we will celebrate the first anniversary of the branch Sunday school in Pueblo Alberdi.

We are remembering the General Conference in prayer this week and trust that there may be a great outpouring of the Spirit, and that soon our absent workers may be back again with us.

A Message to the Children

Bozoum par Bangui, A. E. F.

June 11, 1927.

Dear Children of the Evangelist Family:

It seems like a long time since I have written you children about your little black brothers and sisters way over here across the water, but I am sure you will all be happy when we tell you how the Lord answered prayer for them.

For five long years our native Christians have prayed for a school at Bassai, that they might be able to read the Bible and take it to their brothers and sisters who have never heard about Jesus, and just two months ago we received permission from the French Government that we could open a free school at Bassai. How we praise God for answered prayer. When the children heard we were permitted to reach them they came from far and near, some from other tribes, walking seven days to get here. All wanted to have their names written in the roll book, but before they could enroll they had to pass their physical examination, as there are so many terrible diseases in Kare land.

I must tell you about two little boys who came from one of the distant villages to attend school. They came a week before school opened and waited patiently for the day to come, but just a day before the ladies examined the two little boys and found that one was a leper. Our hearts were very sad as we told this little fellow that he would have to return to his village and could not enter school. Poor little fellow, his heart was broken, all his hopes shattered, but he said I will go, but in a few weeks I will come back again to hear more about Jesus, I want to know him. So we gave him his mat which he uses for a bed and some salt for his food and he left us. I am sure you will remember these little children and pray that they may have a church and school of their own so that they too may learn about Jesus. Since then we have found that twelve more of the school children have leprosy and cannot attend school.

At present there are 37 little boys and three little girls living on the concession. I am sure you children will wonder why so many boys and only three girls. Well, it is this way. For many, many years the girls and women in Africa have been slaves for the men. They did all the work, worked hard in their gardens all day and in the evening came home carrying a large basket of food on their heads, a load of wood in their arms and many times one sees the mothers carrying their babies on their hips. With all this load they come home just in time to make a fire and prepare food for the men who perhaps have been gambling or drinking wine during the day. So you see the little girls think school is only for the boys, but the missionaries are trying to break down this heathen custom and encourage the girls and women to be educated so when they become mothers they will know how to care for their children.

Already 21 of these school children have accepted Christ as their Savior. Won't it be wonderful when these children can read the Bible and go back to their tribes and villages and tell their mothers and fathers about Jesus? I am sure you will pray for them that they may be true soul winners and missionaries for our Lord in this dark land of Africa.

In his Blessed Service

MRS. ORVILLE D. JOBSON.

Value is the measure of our desire for a thing; price, what we are willing to pay for it.

God alone is our leader, and "He sends his teachers unto every age and clime." Up and onward, then, Christian soldier!

Deal with your brother as you would have God and the angels deal with you, and I doubt not you will find him all you would wish him to be.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Another $1,000 Gift to Endowment from Indiana

This gift is from a brother at New Paris, Indiana, and is in the form of an ANNUITY. The income to the college from these annuities does not mean much in the way of income at the present, but will in time.

THESE FORMS OF GIFTS OFFER AN OPPORTUNITY TO THOSE WHO DESIRE TO GIVE WHILE LIVING AND AT THE SAME TIME HAVE THE INCOME ON THEIR MONEY DURING THEIR LIFE TIME.

This is becoming more and more the way in which people are disposing of their property that they want to see used in the Lord's work, rather than by wills. Wills are often broken, contested by legal proceedings, inheritance tax, etc.

OUR COLLEGE AND OTHER INTERESTS OF THE CHURCH SHOULD RECEIVE MORE OF THESE GIFTS.

Why not make an investment gift to Ashland College?

The Problem Solved

Many people would like to make a worth while gift, who feel that they need the income from their money for old age. Ashland College makes both possible so that the gift can be made and at the same time the giver be protected for life in receiving an annual income while living.

How This is Done

The College will issue an annuity bond for the amount of money given, which guarantees an annual income during the life time of the giver, or where husband and wife desire, a joint bond will be issued in protecting both during their life time. These bonds pay a semi-annual income during the life of the giver, equal to if not larger than any made safe by interest bearing securities.

The Rate of income

The following is the rate of interest paid on these bonds:

Age	Rate
30-34 years pays	3 per cent.
35-39 years pays	3½ per cent
40-44 years pays	4 per cent
45-49 years pays	4½ per cent
50-54 years pays	5 per cent
55-59 years pays	5½ per cent
60-64 years pays	6 per cent
65-69 years pays	6½ per cent
70-74 years pays	7 per cent
80-84 years pays	8 per cent
75-79 years pays	7½ per cent

These bonds are exempt from taxation. The banks pay about 4% and mortgage loans bring about 6%, after the taxes are deducted on these incomes they will only net you about 3%. Why not put your money to good use and receive the benefit of a larger income during your life?

Backed by Safe and Dependable Security

These investments are absolutely safe and secure. The $500,000.00 in permanent endowment, the College buildings and ground and back of all this the church. There is no chance of losing as there is in stocks and ordinary bonds.

How About Stewardship

"Whose shall these things be?" was the question Jesus raised in discussing the death of a rich man, whose plans were only for this life. God holds us accountable for the use we make of our money while living and also the disposal we make when we are through with it here in this world. When we face our God, what account are we going to give of our stewardship here on earth? Why not have the satisfaction and joy of giving while living and to know that your money will be used to extend the Kingdom of God, instead of the uncertainty of wills and litigation of courts.

For any information address Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs, President of Ashland College, or W. S. Bell, Endowment Secretary, Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio.

VINCO AND MUNDAY'S CORNER

Our work as pastor of the Vinco Brethren church began last November, and while there has been nothing of a revolutionary character to report, I am glad that we are able to report progress along all lines. I think our attendance at the regular church services has increased not as much as we would like to see but we are glad that there is a steady increase. The Sunday school, under the efficient leadership of Brother Millard Mackal has had a most splendid year. We have not yet reached the one hundred mark, but we are still striving to reach it and I believe we will. The Ladies' Aid society is very active and meets regularly with a good attendance and a fine spirit of cooperation. They have recently done some very fine constructive work that I am sure was very much appreciated by all. The Sisterhood girls maintain their regular meetings, are under Sister Blair Singer as patroness and is in a healthy condition. And last but not least the prayer meeting has new life and activity manifested on every hand. We are expecting Brother I. D. Bowman to begin special evangelistic services on the eleventh of September to continue three weeks and close with a love feast October second. The people here are very anxious to have Brother Bowman back. He made many friends while here last year and did the church a world of good. Neighboring churches are kindly asked to assist in all these services. You can do some real work by praying and helping in the work here. The work needs your help.

At Munday's Corner (The Pike) our attendance at all services under favorable conditions is always good. Recently five have been added to the church here by baptism and by letter. We welcome these good people into our midst. Here our Sunday school has long passed the one hundred mark and we are now striving to reach the two hundred mark. Our Christian Endeavor is not just as active as it ought to be. Our choir leader is getting the choir ready for Brother I. D. Bowman's meeting which will begin here on the third of October to continue two weeks and close with a communion service October sixteenth. Will write more of these special meetings later. Pray for the success of the work.

J. L. BOWMAN, Pastor.

FIRST CHURCH, LOS ANGELES CALIFORNIA

Through the earnest solicitation of our worthy Editor, we are reporting our first from our new field of labor. The reason for not reporting sooner was not that we had no news of interest to the Evangelist family, nor that we awaited the urge of our Editor, but that we desired to become acquainted to some extent at least, of existing conditions in this new, large field. An earlier report might have been planned with that first impression of enthusiasm which experience has taught is tempered by the afterglow of normalcy. So we trust our report shall be true to the general tone of what we may report in the future.

Friends advised that to drive from Falls City, Nebraska to Los Angeles, California, in the month of February was an undertaking involving too much risk. But with a certain amount of courage and faith in the abiding presence of the Omnipotent Hand, we ventured and reached our destination with mishap and were physically ready to assume the tasks that awaited. Our household effects were placed in the parsonage by willing hands and after a day's rest in the hospitable home of Brother and Sister Reed, friends of College days found us busy—preachers and their families know—busy, getting established in new house and surroundings.

The first Sunday arrived: the congregation, a splendid one, was expectant; what does the new preacher and his family look like; what is his delivery like; can he preach, etc.? Suffice to state, the preacher too has in mind some questions?—well the first day passed with no serious mishap and we are laboring together with evidence of increasing interest and fellowship. The above situation was materially soothed in that the former pastor, Brother N. W. Jennings, was present to take charge of the opening service and to introduce us. We wish to state that Brother Jennings left as a monument to his labors here, a splendid, modernly equipped church building which shall serve as a great asset to our work. So it was agreeable and fitting to have him introduce us to the congregation which he had so well served and which we shall earnestly strive to minister unto. The surprises were not over with the first Sunday, for the congregation had planned a reception for the pastor and his family. Upon a certain evening, we were invited to the church and upon entering found the main auditorium filled with people. Upon the platform were seated the pastors of Long Beach, Second of Los Angeles, La Verne, and Whittier with Brother Reed in charge. Into this assembly, we were ushered and after rendering of a fitting program, welcome was spoken, by the pastors of above churches, to which the new pastor and his wife responded. After this refreshments were served and a general social hour was engaged by all.

The membership is scattered over this large city and beyond, but their faithfulness is attested by the distance they come to worship. We did not feel strange among them for they are largely "Easterners" living in sunny California. We found more Pennsylvanians in this congregation than any we have had the pleasure of serving as pastor. The field, like any, has its problems, but in the loyalty thus far manifested and leaning upon the Mighty Hand of Our Father, we expect to glean precious fruit for his harvest. The first special day was Easter. We rallied our efforts toward two objectives: offering for Foreign Missions and Decisions for Christ. The offering was a commendable one for our people and the result in decisions was eleven. Next was Children's Day; for this we planned a program which was well executed and brought delight to the fine audience present. We wish also to call attention to an Easter Cantata given by our young people, which was a decided success. This tersely summarizes outstanding activities since our coming to the field. A city like this offers opportunity, but the work is taxing. Yet with the splendid talent we have we look to the future hopefully.

The congregation has been very considerate of our needs and among the many courtesies granted us a two weeks' vacation, which we are enjoying in the beautiful mountains. We hope to go back to our work strengthened in body and spirit and accomplish greater things for the church and God's Kingdom. Our District Bible Conference brought us help and enthusiasm for greater work. Through this conference, our own Dr. Jacobs was brought to the coast as one of the speakers and having an open date one Sunday morning, we had the privilege of having him bring us the message, which was very much appreciated by our people. His presence and fellowship of his family reminded former college students of Ashland and what our college means to the church.

We have promised the Editor to report more frequently in the future. We ask that you, the readers, remember us in prayer, in the far West, and that through your prayers and our labors, God may use us to his glory.

CONFERENCE MINUTES

Business Sessions

Next was the report of the committee on the Moderator's address. The following recommendations were offered and accepted by Conference:

1. That the message of the Brethren ministry appear in our church publications not fewer than four times each year, not necessarily each time in the same publication; the publications referred to being the Evangelist and the Youth and Adult Quarters.

2. That our pastors and editors give us at least once a year a systematic and thorough exposition of the ordinances, their form and spirit.

3. That the suggestions regarding the promotion of the spiritual life and evangelism be referred to the committee on the Spiritual State of the churches as provided for in the Manual of Procedure.

The following nominations were offered for National Sunday School officers and accepted by Conference: President, W. I. Duker; Vice-President, E. L. Miller; General Secretary, O. C. Starn; Treasurer, M. P. Puterbaugh. Divisional superintendents: Children, Miss Hazel Keiser; Young Peoples', G. H. Jones; Adult, Prof. A. B. Cober; Administration, S. M. Whetstone. Departmental Superintendents, Educational, O. C. Starn; Home, Mrs. H. M. Cook; Citizenship, Prof. R. R. Haun; Missionary, N. V. Leatherman.

The Laymens' organization presented the following: We ask that General Conference grant a Sunday other than in September for observing Laymen's Day. Conference voted the second Sunday in October as Laymen's Day.

The committee on Boys' Work presented a plan for such organization. Owing to lack of time for discussion the chair ruled that it be made the first item of business at the next regular session.

Saturday Morning

Opened by singing "Blessed Jesus." Led in prayer by R. E. Gottschall.

Minutes of previous business session were read and approved.

Report of Credential Committee was as follows: Lay 203, Ministerial 83, co-operating 2, a total of 288. Report accepted and committee discharged with thanks.

A motion prevailed to extend the courtesies of conference to Rev. L. H. Brumbaugh, Mrs. L. H. Brumbaugh, and Rev. R. H. Nicodemus.

Next was the report of the Committee on Committees. The following committees were appointed by consent of Conference: Conference Membership, W. I. Duker, M. L. Sands, H. H. Rowsey, G. L. Maus, W. C. Benschoff; Rules and Organization, Dyoil Belote, Claud Studebaker, C. A. Stewart; Finance, Ephraim Culp, E. L. Kilhefner, Geo. E. Cone; Committee on Spiritual State of the churches, A. B. Cover, J. W. Platt, J. C. Beal, L. G. Wood, H. D. Fry, E. M. Riddle, R. Paul Miller, Homer Kent.

A motion was passed to commit the matter of the proposed plan for a Boys' Organization to the National Sunday School Board to bring in a report next year.

The Executive Committee offered the following recommending recommendation: that we hold the Conference of 1928 at Ashland, Ohio on August 20-26. Accepted by proper vote.

Next was the report of the Resolutions Committee. It was accepted with an amendment dealing with the resolution in regard to war. The resolutions are as follows: Whereas, the wise Providence and blessing of God has been abundantly bestowed upon our beloved church during the past year, be it resolved:

1. That we render unto God our thanks and praise for all the blessing.

2. That we express our thanks to the Winona Assembly for the courtesies extended to us.

3. That we express our thanks to the officers and boards and committees for their untiring efforts in the planning of and executing the conference program and to those who have so splendidly rendered their respective parts thereon.

4. That we express our thanks to Dr. White for his wonderful Bible lectures and to Bishop Gray for his lecture on "The Mountaineers of the South."

5. That we re-affirm our faith in the Scriptures as the infallible inspired Word of God.

6. That we commend the continued teaching and practice of the distinctive ordinances of the Brethren church.

7. That we assert our time honored position as being opposed to members of the Brethren church going to war as combatants.

8. That we zealously pledge our support to all law enforcement.

9. That we commend Dr. Bell for his success in the Endowment Campaign for Ashland College, and pledge our continued support thereto.

10. That we commend the missionary and evangelizing effort of the church.

11. That we recommend the erection and maintaining of the family altar, and a holy regard for the Lord's Day.

12. That we express our appreciation of the fine Christian spirit manifest in all the sessions of the Conference.

The National Statistician was granted the following request: that this conference demand that each church report its total book membership.

A motion was heartily passed to approve the sending out of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Taber as missionaries to Africa; Mr. and Mrs. Romanenghi to South America.

Motion to meet at one o'clock for further business was approved.

Saturday Afternoon

Opened with song. Prayer by R. E. Gottschall.

The first item of business was the passing of the following resolution:

Resolved that this General Conference of the Brethren church of 1927 hereby makes provision for establishing a corporation under the laws of Ohio to be known as the Brethren Extension Foundation.

The purpose of said corporation shall be to receive, hold in trust and distribute, as the donors direct money and various forms of property, and to conduct business without personal profit to anyone connected therewith, for the sole purpose of the extension of the Gospel of Jesus Christ and all religious and benevolent purposes connected therewith.

There shall be nine directors for said corporation who shall be elected by the General Conference of the Brethren church under such terms as are prescribed by the laws of the state of Ohio, each director holding office for three years, three being elected each year.

This Board of Directors shall take steps to so incorporate soon after their election during the year of 1927, and shall set forth their constitution and by-laws without further reference to this Conference.

Since it is desirable that all interests of the church be represented on this board as a property holding and distributing agency, it shall not be considered a disqualification for the directors thereof to hold positions on the standing boards of the church.

In addition to said Board of Directors, provision is hereby made for counsellors who shall be selected by said Board of Directors and who may represent specially vital interests of the church and also the estates and fortunes of donors. Said counsellors shall sit with the Board of Directors at such times and places as said Board shall direct. For a period of three years Orion E. Bowman is, by the passage of this resolution, constituted legal counsellor and ex-officio member. All subsequent counsellors shall be appointed by said Board of Directors.

Resolved, the following shall be elected directors of the Board of the Brethren Extension Foundation: for three years, J. Allen Miller, Martin Shively, W. E. Ronk. For two years, E. L. Kilhefner, W. S. Bell, Ray Emmert. For one year, L. S. Bauman, E. E. Jacobs, W. A. Gearhart.

The following budget was presented by the National Sunday School Association and accepted:

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OHIO CHURCHES TAKE NOTICE

The Ohio District Conference meets at Canton October 4, 5, 6, 7. A good program has been arranged and a good conference is expected.

Credential blanks have been sent to each church in the district. Each church is entitled to one delegate for every 25 members of their enrollment and one for the Sunday school, one for the Christian Endeavor and one for the W. M. S. Each church must pay for all the delegates they are entitled to whether they send them or not. Church treasurers will please send checks along with the delegates or mail to undersigned. This is a ruling of Conference. Look at your credential blanks.

M. L. SANDS, Secretary-Treasurer,
Smithville, Ohio.

THE WAY TO PHILADELPHIA OCTOBER 4-6

Insomuch as the Pennsylvania District Conference is meeting with the First church in Philadelphia, some are asking how to get here.

Those who come by train should take the Pennsylvania Railroad and get off at NORTH PHILADELPHIA STATION. All trains will be met at this station by autos, Monday afternoon and Tuesday to take those who come to the church. Those coming on the Baltimore and Ohio railroad arrive about eight miles away on the other side of the city, and should take the elevated transit from there to York station in North Philadelphia, and transfer to the York Street street car which will take them to Tenth street, one block from the church.

Those coming by auto will find that all roads lead to Broad street in Philadelphia. Follow Broad street north to Susquehanna street and then east on Susquehanna street to Tenth street and north on Tenth street one block to church.

Arrangements are being made by the local church to provide the best of accommodations possible. Lodging and breakfast will be provided at the various homes where Brethren are being entertained. Dinner and supper will be provided in the church basement at most reasonable prices.

Any further information will appear in a later issue of the Evangelist.

R. PAUL MILLER.

Business Manager's Corner

A GREAT OFFER

At one of the meetings of the Publication Board at Winona Lake the question of increasing the subscription list to the Brethren Evangelist was discussed, and it was suggested that the pastors might be willing to distribute a reasonable number of copies among their members who were not receiving the paper at the church services like Sunday school papers are distributed at Sunday school.

At the suggestion of the Business Manager the Board authorized the special rate for the Evangelist, THREE MONTHS for TEN CENTS. We can not place the names on our mailing list three months for ten cents, but we can send the paper in rolls of ten, fifteen or twenty at ten cents per copy to one address and then the papers can be distributed.

This announcement was made at a meeting of the Brethren Ministerial Association and twenty of the pastors placed their orders for from ten to fifty copies on these terms.

Of course pastors whose churches are on the Evangelist Honor Roll are exempt from this task, but we feel that every pastor in the brotherhood whose church is not on the Honor Roll should avail himself of this offer, The Evangelist in rolls of ten or more from October first to the end of the present year at a DIME. There must be more than FIFTY pastors who should still be secured to cooperate in this good work.

Send in your order immediately so you need not miss the first number.

If your church does not feel like contributing the dollar or two dollars, as the case may be, we are sure it will be worth many times more than a dollar to any pastor to bring knowledge of the work of the brotherhood before his membership.

Send in your orders IMMEDIATELY.

This Honor Roll has passed the TENTH anniversary of its birth, it has gone through the ills of infancy, the period of mumps, measles, whooping cough and "short growth", but it still lives. A few wisdom teeth have also been cut a trifle earlier than usual in life, but none too early.

After passing through all these afflictions and the accompanying ones of changing pastors more or less frequently, it need surprise no one if we have the records just a little mixed, but we are willing to "unmix" them any time our errors are pointed out to us.

The only new church we are able to add to the Honor Roll in this report is Corinth, Indiana with Brother W. J. Johnson as pastor; but the following churches have renewed their Honor Roll lists for the year indicated after their names: Beaver City, Nebraska, ninth year; Gretna, Ohio, TENTH year. Please excuse the caps, but don't you think that the Brethren church that was FIRST to place the Evangelist in the home of every family in the church, and then to keep it there for TEN successive years, without missing a single week, deserves to be mentioned in capital letters? We have a clear remembrance of the time when we first suggested this plan at the Ohio Conference at Dayton, and two brethren from the Gretna church came forward and said, "We want our church to be the first one to be entered on the Honor Roll and we will give you the money right now and if the church won't back us up when we get home we will pay it out of our own pockets." Those brethren were E. F. Miller and J. L. Hudson, two of as good friends as we have acquired in thirty-four years' ministry in the Brethren church, though we would not take an ounce of credit from numberless other equally loyal friends, not only at Gretna, but all over the brotherhood where it has been our privilege to labor in past years. This has been a little "side trip" for which we beg your indulgence, and now we will get back on the main line, the line of churches that have renewed their Honor Roll lists. Next comes Howe, Indiana, for the fifth year; Lathrop, California, fourth year; Morrill Kansas, ninth year; Mt. Pleasant, Pennsylvania, third year; Nappanee, Indiana, ninth year; New Enterprise, Indiana, second year; Peru, Indiana, seventh year; Roann, Indiana, ninth year; Smithville, Ohio, seven year.

While this system for keeping up the subscription list of the Brethren Evangelist has succeeded better and lasted longer than many thought it possibly could do at its first suggestion, yet there are scores of churches that should be enrolled with these that have been following this plan from seven to ten years. We hope the plan for sending the paper three months for ten cents may succeed in securing MANY new subscriptions.

Importance and Aims of Education

As we witness the re-opening of schools for another year—schools from the kindergarten to the university—it is well for us to give thought to the aims of education. What is it all for? What are we aiming at in this educative process? What objectives do we have in mind, and are they worthy? We may well question ourselves in this manner.

There are many who do not take the matter seriously enough to have any conscious objective, and that is unfortunate, as it adds greatly to the burdens of those who work in the field of education. It is important that we have some objective in mind, that we be convinced of the value and advantage of an education in order that we give the proper support to our teachers and educators. Their task is difficult and their problems many and perplexing, and they need and deserve the cooperation and support of parents and friends of the pupils. Teachers are in the main a consecrated, highly devoted and well trained group of workers, but the very nature of their task makes it impossible for them to succeed in the highest degree alone. They need the ready and enthusiastic backing of patrons and friends of education, and it is in the interest of the pupils that we make this plea. They stand to win or lose most in the process. Their future is at stake. Parents who do not uphold the hands of the teachers of our schools, no matter whether they be first grade or college, are not looking faithfully to the welfare of their children.

It is important that we be fully convinced of the worth of education when we are confronted with the expense of it, that we may not give it a sparing and niggardly support and thus hamper its usefulness. We are living in a day of lavish expenditures, people exercise little or no restraint, they provide themselves with every convenience and luxury which they consider worth while. So there is no reason why education should be crippled in any quarter by a lack of proper equipment. Of course the immediate past has had little cause for complaint. Education has received commendable support. The rapid and widespread progress it has made bears witness to the favor it has found in the public mind. But the demands of education are numerous and increasing and the expenses are rising, and voices of complaint are being heard. It is beginning to cost too heavily, some feel. For the maintenance and steady improvement of our public schools the public treasuries are being drained and the people burdened with increased taxation. And for the support and advancement of colleges, technical and professional schools private funds are being called into educational channels with an abandon that causes past benevolences to seem insignificant. But all this cost of education is not large, much less staggering, in comparison with the vast sums we spend for the multiplied non-essentials and follies of our modern life. So that the continued meeting of the demands of modern education rests primarily upon appreciation of its worth and not upon financial ability. We will provide ourselves with what we want and believe we need, if we want it badly enough. It is highly important therefore that we shall seriously contemplate the unfailing value of true education and be fully convinced of the necessity of it.

We need not merely to place a high value on education, but have a clear mind as to what true education really is, so as not to be misled or diverted by the incidentals, or frills, or side-shows. It was the lamented President Wilson, who, while at the head of Princeton University, warned against permitting the side shows to eclipse the main tent. And there is real danger at that point. Social activities, literary and musical organizations, athletics, and all sorts of recreational, pleasure-seeking and amusement side shows are enlisting the time and interest of students to such an extent that it is difficult often to get any real school work into their program. More and more educators are confessing the weakness of our school system, and teachers are lamenting the fact that very often not only students but parents also are more concerned about the frills than about education itself. And those who are engaged in the field of education are not wholly blameless. In fact, they have themselves introduced many of these diversions and side-tracking interests and have failed either because of personal inclination or lack of ability to hold things in check. There needs to be a revision of our educational program somehow so that attention shall be re-focussed on the main issue. The real aim or aims of education need to be brought to the front, kept in plain view and made the main object of effort. It is important that all who share in any measure responsibility for the education of our youth shall with clear vision and strong purpose hold steady the course for the high aims of education and refuse to be diverted by the incidentals.

But what are the true and high aims of education? What does education rightly propose to do for our children and youth that we are willing to go to such ends to secure it? Some say the purpose is very practical, that it is to prepare and equip persons to do things to earn a living. Education should teach a trade, a profession, a business, or some other line of activity, in order that by such activity one may provide adequately for himself and those dependent on him. To be sure that is a part of every man's duty—to earn a living, and the better he is trained the more successfully he can do it. God decreed that a man should eat bread by the sweat of his brow, and Paul insisted that if a man would not work, neither should he eat, and it was a Jewish requirement that every boy should learn a trade. An education is certainly faulty if it does not enable one to earn a living and to secure for himself enough of the goods of this world to care for those of his own house. But it is more seriously faulty if it does nothing more for him than that. Just to earn a living without regard as to how it is done does not leave a man moral. Education should not only train one to do things, but should make him concerned about the manner in which he does them and the significance of his acts. It should give him not only efficiency but quality. It should seek to make him not only capable, but worthy. It should give him not only skill but conscience, and cause him to care not only for dollars but for morals. If education does not do that, its legitimate product may as well be a robber as a carpenter, or a gambler as a physician.

Some say that education is a mental process, that its aim is to train the mind, to provide one with a goodly store of knowledge to enlarge one's vision and to increase his appreciation of life. Education does that to the keen satisfaction of every one who secures it; that is one of its great rewards—the enlargement of life. How narrow and circumscribed is the life of him who makes no use of educational opportunities! How dull and uninteresting is his little, monotonous round of activities and concerns! How blind he is to all the grandeur and beauty of God's world and how helpless in the presence of the mighty forces of nature which he is divinely enjoined to subdue! It is foolish and a shame for one to live in ignorance when he could enjoy the riches of knowledge. It is to his discredit and disgrace who lies in the dust of stupidity when he might rise and stand in the glorious light and wisdom that becomes creatures made in the image of God. But education has not done its full task when it has merely enlightened the mind.

It has done a great service when it had given one knowledge of the forces of nature and enabled him to bring forth secrets out of the depths of the earth and to fathom the vast expanse of the heavens, but there is a higher service than imparting mere secular knowledge. Education is more than mental development and appreciation; it is soul enrichment as well. It brings not only vision and understanding, but moral responsibility. It makes one consider not only the things of beauty and grandeur on which his own soul may feast but the things he can do to bring light and enrichment to others. It enables one not only to discover the unfailing operation and harmony of the laws of the universe, but to recognize the One who stands back of the universe and by whose hands the laws are plied. Nothing less is the high aim of true education. It makes faith in providence a necessity and reverence for the Creator along with his creation inescapable.

But the highest aims of education are more than Christian intellectualism, they are to cooperate in the building of character, the establishing of personal spiritual relations and the enlistment and equipment of life for Christian service. In other words, the highest aims of education are unquestionably Christian and are inseparably linked with the Word of God as the inspiration and groundwork of character and the Spirit of Christ as the dynamic of piety and service. And to the accomplishment of this aim the Bible ought to be in the public schools, as well as in the colleges and universities, and only teachers of undoubted faith and Christian character ought to direct the work of those schools. Why we should ever have thought to build character that is true and strong, such as is so essential to the strength and permanence of our nation, by the exclusion of the Bible from our schools and the elimination of Christian idealism as a basis of a teacher's fitness is difficult to understand. Surely the time is at hand to recognize the inconsistency of our position and the ineffectiveness of our effort and take steps to correct it. And in the higher educational field we can be eternally grateful for the valuable contribution made by our Christian colleges to the moral and religious strength of our young people, and as a church we should never think of loosening our control at this point nor of slackening in our support of them. They are the greatest single factor making for national righteousness, the advancement of the program of the church and the conservation of Christian homes. In the words of Henry L. Smith: "The Christian college is the manufactory which takes the finest raw material the church can furnish, multiplies its value a hundred fold and returns it to the church in a life-giving stream of intelligent faith, trained power and consecrated leadership." Its aims are most truly Christian of any other educational agency in our land; let us stand by it.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Prof. A. L. DeLozier gives us another very interesting report of his travels in Europe, this time he finds his way into Italy. Prof. DeLozier is now at home and busy with his school work, he having arrived home almost as soon as his letter reached us.

Brother L. G. Wood, pastor at Fort Scott, Kansas, reports progress. They recently have the pleasure of Brother Sickles' visit. Dr. J. C. Beal is to hold a meeting for this church in November. Brother Wood announces an opportunity for some Brethren couple interested in farming.

Our Business Manager asks us to announce that the mailing of the Evangelist to the pastors in bundles at ten cents per copy for three months begins with this issue. The papers that were sent with the report of the Winona Conference were an extra donation, and the regular mailing begins this week.

Dr. W. H. Beachler tells of a successful Homecoming program in the Dayton, Ohio, church of which he is pastor. Dr. Charles A. Bame was the special speaker of the day and brought splendid messages. Large crowds and good music also added greatly to the success of the occasion. Brother Beachler is hopeful of a very fruitful year in the work of the Lord.

On Sunday morning, September 25, Mrs. Bell, wife of Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, passed away after a protracted illness of several years. She was buried on Tuesday. Further memorial notice will be given later. The Evangelist bespeaks in behalf of our readers the deep sympathy of Brother Bell's host of friends. We pray that God may sustain him in this sad hour.

Prof. Alva J. McClain reports a most pleasant and inspiring trip for Mrs. McClain and himself across country and their safe landing in Los Angeles where he is engaged as instructor in the Bible Institute. He reaffirms his faith in Ashland College and its future under the leadership of President Jacobs. His health seems greatly improved for which all who know him will be thankful. Those having correspondence with him will note his new address.

We have an interesting report from the Canton Christian Endeavor society, on the young people's page. It is evident that this is a wide-awake society and we trust other societies will be inspired by the reading of it to greater activity and to write of their items of interest. Let us hear from many societies. The page is at your disposal, make use of it. Miss Spice also reports the receipts to the National Brethren Union, sent for the Kentucky work.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports the results of the Endowment canvass in the Denver and Corinth churches in Indiana. Brother W. F. Johnson is the pastor of these churches. The church at Denver gave 305 dollars while the one at Corinth gave 141 dollars, making a total of $446, which added to the former total amount of the campaign makes the figures stand at $122,838.37. We are sorry for the news in an accompanying note from Dr. Bell that Brother Orion E. Bowman's health is not in a very hopeful condition. Let intercessors remember this afflicted leader in prayer if perchance God may raise him up.

We are grateful to Dr. Bame for his brief report of the "Congress of the World League Against Alcoholism", held at Winona, a part of which some of our other pastors took advantage of. We fear however that there was not the interest taken in this conference, nor is there in the work of Prohibition itself, that there ought to be. The cause of temperance and prohibition enforcement is treated too indifferently by churches in general and unless there is a re-awakening of interest at this point we shall regret it by and by.

Brother H. F. Stuckman, the new president of the General Home Mission Board, writes of the Board's decision to undertake the mission at Harrah, Washington, where the prospects of building up a self-supporting church in a short time seems unusually bright. He asks for still larger support of the Home work and also speaks a word in behalf of Sister Grace P. Srack whom the Home Board is sending among the churches to press the claims of Kentucky in particular and of general home missions and stewardship in general.

Dr. Martin Shively makes additional report of the recent educational Day Offering. Reports from the churches have not been reaching the Bursar as they ought. "Less than fifty of our congregations" is certainly not a commendable showing, nor do we believe it represents the brotherhood's interest in the college. It would be impossible to guess what has caused this tardiness in responding to the most energetic propaganda launched by Prof. Puterbaugh, but we guess that the vast majority would say it was not intentional. Still the College cannot go forward on money that remains in the various congregational treasuries.

Dr. Jacobs is advertising for a stenographer for part time work in the Seminary, an opportunity which offers a chance to some one equipped for the work to earn the major portion of a year's schooling expenses. See his announcement elsewhere in this issue. In his notes President Jacobs gives an installment of unusually interesting news items. College has opened with an enrollment of 285 for the first semester, which represents a substantial growth over last year. Aside from the increase in number of students, the campus appearance gives cause for encouragement. The new gymnasium and the well-kept lawns are physical evidences of prosperity and good housekeeping. We are glad for the opportunity of introducing the two new seminary professors, Brethren M. A. Stuckey and K. M. Monroe, who occupy the positions headed up respectively by Professors J. A. Garber and A. J. McClain, both of whom have previously been reported through these columns to have taken up positions elsewhere. The Evangelist congratulates these new professors upon the fine way in which they are entering upon their new duties.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Scripture in Schools

From the Education Standpoint

Richard Lawson, M.A., Litt.D. Professor of Education, Otago University

Education is incomplete unless it is applied to the whole of our human nature. The more obvious activities and needs of our nature are physical. But the strongest forces are those of our invisible selves. The invisible self craves for or witnesses to the reality of something beyond and above it. There is no race of men so undeveloped but it has the tendency manifested, however crudely. All forms of art and literature bear evidence of man's instinct for God. Hence any education that does not recognize this instinct, and provide sustenance and training for it, is only pseudo-education; it is a starvation of life's core which is certain to cause atrophy in the normal nature, with dire results for society. The Bible regarded merely as a human document—or, rather, series of documents—records spiritual experiences that have been for centuries, and are still of immense influence in individual and national life. Any scheme of education that excludes those experiences from its schools is deliberately excluding one of the richest provinces of knowledge, and one of the greatest sources of strength and consolation in life. A man who has not had some education in religious literature be ever so well versed in knowledge of things intellectual, is not an educated man.

Ideals of conduct, of betterment, of society, of universal peace and good will, when traced to their source will be found in the consciousness of the reality of God. This consciousness is more vivid in the Bible writers than in any others. For our boys and girls to be cut off from that central source of illumination must result in disorder, misconduct, decline in morality.

For morality, though not wholly of a religious nature, can receive its highest sanction only from ideals of a perfect diety. If we cut away the standards the morality drops. It is a common opinion of the present time, not only amongst educationalists, but also amongst business men, that there is a distinct weakening observable in moral standards, and that this weakening is partly due to the absence of the Bible from our schools. It is inevitable that if religion is omitted from the syllabus, it will retain only an enfeebled existence in the life of many pupils, and consequently will cease to have a direct influence on their conduct. Or if the teaching of religion is recognized only as a non-essential, the effect will be lessened on the pupil's mind. In the mind of a schoolboy any "subject" that is not worth a permanent and compulsory place on the time-table cannot be very important. Imagine the result if reading or writing had only such insecure position in the regular school work! Reading and writing would decline, without doubt. We are constantly told that character is the all-important product of education. Yet we do not take adequate measure to ensure high character. How can any young man, after leaving school, believe that the State cares for character, when it has never made provision for bringing him daily in his school course the literature that deals with man's relations to God? Such a young man—were it not for the instinctive prompting of the divine nature in him, and for religious teaching received otherwise would be apt to forget even the existence of a Creator. And a man without consciousness of a Creator has a dark mind.

The Bible in Education

Fortunately the Bible though written by an alien race, is essentially in its form an English work of art. It is a great literary monument of matchless strength, beauty and wisdom. This alone would justify its place in the syllabus. Ignorance of the Bible is ignorance of English literature. Those who think educationally of the welfare of the young, feel half-distracted to find that religious schisms can debar our children from the daily right to have in their class-work those hymns and poems and revelations that were turned into English in the decade when Shakespeare's greatest works were being produced. A school course of literature without the Bible is as defective as a course in arithmetic without the multiplication tables. I have tried the teaching of the Bible solely as literature; on this ground alone it can justify its title to a place in the educational system. Many children receive at school all the knowledge of great thinking and great literature they will ever receive. With those who

Religion and Education

It is of the utmost importance that educationists and religious teachers, schoolmasters, and clergymen should think of themselves as co-operators in a common task. That all education should be religious, we have often been told. It is equally true that all religion should be educational—a point that is sometimes overlooked. The two should form a partnership and there should be no attempt at domination on either side. In the new age that is dawning for both of them they will need each other's help.

Education will have much to learn from religion; but religion also will have much to learn from education. On the one hand, a religious spirit must enter into education; on the other, an educational spirit must enter into religion. This last must not be forgotten.

Education is commonly classified under three heads—primary, secondary, and higher. To these three I should like to add a fourth, highest—primary, secondary, higher, and highest. The highest education is religion. It needs to be prepared for by the three kinds which precede it. That which begins as primary education should end in religion. That which ends as religion should begin in primary education. Religion might be defined as education raised to its highest power.—Principal L. P. Jacks, in "A Living Universe."

leave school on completing the primary course, this amount of knowledge of great thinking is meagre enough. The using of well chosen Scripture extracts in the school will give our children a material for rich enjoyment, for practical guidance in conduct, and for life long reflection, for it is a characteristic of the great Bible thoughts that they are not limited to one age or people—they are susceptible of indefinite expansion and application. Even if all the churches in the land were closed, I could honestly advocate Scripture in schools, since the Scripture expresses for us, in language of surpassing loveliness, experiences which, while they transcend my own, are yet conformable to it, and confirmatory of it. The Bible is the record of the Divine Human relationship. How paltry a conception is it of our universal Creator, one and incorruptible, to receive of him as placing any restrictions on the educational employment of this book.

Will Further Concord, Not Dissension

Is the knowledge about the Creator, of all the host of heaven and all the host of men that have been and will be, to cause dissension and disagreement in the land? That bad day is gone. The Bible is a democratic book; it looks always to the one Father, it announces human dignity; it will engender unanimity and a fraternal spirit if we give it daily to all our children and do not encumber or distort it by sectarian teaching. The very objection that has been made against it—viz., that without teaching it is valueless—falls to the ground. There are many educationalists who hold that literature cannot be taught; it must be absorbed, assimilated. The language of the Bible is easy; the message is plain. Give it to our boys and girls daily, and they will take it in, provided the portions are sensibly chosen. The very absence of interpretation by the teacher will have advantages—the spirit of the child is then free to incorporate into its own life just what it can—always provided, of course, that the selections are judiciously made. Fortunately this is easy; many of the finest parts of the Bible are the simplest.

Teachers should have nothing to fear. The system of grading now in operation protects them against any undue hostility that might arise among school committees who wished for a stress on their own religious predilections. Moreover, there is a growing spirit of toleration and a more general readiness to meet on principles common to all phases of Christianity. Further, there is a growing spirit of toleration and a more general readiness to meet on principles common to all phases of Christianity. Further, there is a growing reluctance to forcing the child's mind. The Bible extracts will provide a common basis by developing a recognition of universal brotherhood under the Father of all. Parents and teachers of religion will then be able to build their own religious superstructure in their own way.

Its Beneficial Effect

As for the beneficial effects on the pupils of Bible reading in school I can speak from my own experience. It aids discipline, vitalizes the conscience, imparts a note of seriousness to the school tone. This seriousness can be carried over without discontinuity into the post-school life. Adults cannot suddenly develop serious convictions. More and more society looks to the school for the foundations of its stability. The present era is characterized by a lack of serious convictions. This leads to carelessness in conduct. Bible reading is not going to cure all the ills of society; but it will purify and strengthen.

The feeling of spirituality is diminishing in society. Universal Bible reading will help to restore it. We are talking of progress only in terms of material products and of commerce and statistics. The Scriptures will keep an ideal before us—that of a society where men will serve for good-will, where progress will be calculated by advance in honor and philanthropy and elevation to the human soul—in short, by all the high virtues and aspirations that the New Testament embodies. At present our education is appealing only to a fragment of our nature. The prayer, hymn and Scripture reading that are sought for in the present bill will restore an element without which manhood cannot grow to its full stature. The parents of New Zealand should support a bill so simple, so easy and so vitally important.

Appreciation of Teachers

It would be unjust to conclude without expressing appreciation of the fine work being done throughout New Zealand for our boys and girls in the Sunday schools, the religious societies, and in the actual teaching of the Nelson system. This work is worthy of the highest praise. The Scripture in our schools daily, and as a permanent element, is the logical outcome of all these efforts.

It would be unjust, too, and ungenerous as well, not to acknowledge the fine work being done by our teachers in all our State schools throughout the land. As a body they consistently hold up to their pupils high ideals of truth, justice and good-will. The State and the parents' notions of morality are sought only in the ever-changing are deeply in their debt.

But the teachers themselves know that, if the sanctions of men to one another, without any reference to an ideal of absolute divinely-revealed values, such sanctions tend to lose their power amid the temptations of life. The religious ideal—that of perfect truth, justice and purity—raises the standards of conduct to a new plane. Religion thus makes morality pure, as morality makes religion practical. Teachers as a whole will surely welcome specially-chosen Scripture lessons that confirm and illumine the daily percept and example devoted to the production of fine character. Without a standard there can be no permanence of quality.

The Scoflaw

By C. F. Yoder

Behold the scoflaw, prince of cheats, deceiving and deceived.

The very name that he has earned has caused him to be peeved,

And while pretending honesty he cannot be believed.

A patriot, to hear him talk, a traitor in his deeds.

The laws that do not suit his taste he treats as worthless screeds.

With such a tribe of anarchists no government succeeds.

He prates about morality and makes the law the source
Of all the villains out of jail who try to break its force,
But such as he who break the law are gentlemen of course!

He flaunts his wisdom to the winds in every public place,
And rails about fanatics who are ruining the race,
But all the while the marks of Cain are written on his face.

Behold the scoflaw, mark him well, your enemy is he.

To satisfy his appetite he'd ruin you and me,

But woe betide his lawless tribe in the judgment day to be.

The Rural Church and the Community

By Floyd Sibert

(Third Installment)

We now come to three very important obligations of the rural church. The first of these has to do with the character of homes and housings. It is the duty as well as privilege of every church to seek to create or inspire or help to provide a happy and wholesome home life for every man, woman and child of the community.

1. "Opinions as to the value of the home as the family institution, both to individual and social progress, swings wide in different directions. On the one side there are persons who look upon the family as an institution ordered of God, the upholding pillar of law and order, and the foundation of every personal and social progress, swings wide in different directions. On the one side there are persons who look upon the family as an institution ordered of God, the upholding pillar of law and order, and the foundation of every personal and social virtue. On the other side are the ultra radicals who look upon the family as the great bar to a more perfect race, a higher morality, a nobler conception of property and a finer sense of civic responsibility."*

A careful observer cannot fail to be impressed with the filial connections of the church with the home. The home is the central organization of the family. It is the unit of society that lays the foundation for development of personality to its highest capacity. But it is not able to complete this superstructure. The mother, father, brother and sister by their social contact and fellowship, if it be the right kind, can lay an eternal foundation for character and personality, but it must have the cooperation of humanity to complete the work. It is the task of the church and school to assist in the finishing process of personality and character. But a man must have a house in which to live and be protected from the cold. It must be ventilated, lighted and warm. If a flower stalk will grow pale, spindly and weak in a dark, unventilated apartment, how much more will human personality and character grow debased, fickle and unprogressive in unsanitary environments. Here there is a real task for the rural church; a task that is a bit practical but not unchristian.

The second important task is that of discovering and using rural unit forces. By utilizing rather than competing with, or fighting for supremacy over already existing organized units of society, the work may progress more swiftly and securely. The modern trend of society (rural) is toward unity and cooperation. As acting pastor of a rural community church the writer was privileged to attend a farmers' institute held in the town hall. Much to his surprise the subjects discussed, by the choice of the people, were not concerned with the growing of hogs and corn, but with the rearing and educating of healthy children, better home conditions, and ways of cooperating and working together. Indeed it seemed more like a community welfare meeting. This indeed is a healthy indication. They are coming to realize that a community serving church must live. Dr. Anderson claims, "The community needs nothing so much as the church, to interpret life: to diffuse a common standard of morals; to plead for the common interests; to inculcate unselfishness, neighborliness, and cooperation; to uphold ideals and uphold the supremacy of the spirit. In the depleted town with shattered institutions and broken hopes, in the complexity of the changing times, in the peril of degeneracy, the CHURCH is the vital center which is to be saved at any cost. In the readjustment of the times, the country church has suffered; but if in its sacrifices it has learned to serve the community it lives and will live."

The third vital task of the rural church is, discovering, training and placing workers. "We raise men here", said a hill farmer, when his farm was sneeringly compared to the rich, and fertile plains of the west. The business of the church is to discover and raise men. Their supreme effort should be to discover leaders, or the promise of leaders. To be sure she may find them in the crude, undeveloped ore of manhood, or in the bud of childhood, or in the tender growing shoot of youth. But find them she must! How then are we going to organize our church into a research party so that none shall be lost? Or that a young Luther or Moody be discovered and developed fully? Who does not recognize the paramount importance of it, the solemn obligation of it? The finding and developing of one such jewel is ample reward for years of service. Jesus tells us to pray that the Lord of harvests might send forth laborers. He himself prayed all night to his Father in heaven. Let us therefore as Christian leaders pray for God's guidance in finding these precious jewels.

They may often be found in dark, dull homes with undesirable parentage. Unusual talents are often hidden by modest personalities that only need the human touch on the secret spring of energy. It may be found in the life of a dreaming country boy, like David of old. The soul hidden by an ugly form and forbearing countenance, like Socrates, may be a most precious boon to society. They may be found in wicked homes. In the better homes the jewel may need to be rescued from overfond parents who would choose the life work of the child. Some, alas, may never be found because some church failed to recognize her task in this respect, as suggested by "Grey's Elegy in a Country Church Yard."

"Perhaps in this neglected spot is laid,
Some heart once pregnate with celestial fire;
Hands that the rod of Empires might have swayed
Or wake to ecstasy the living lyre;
Some mute and glorious Milton here may rest;
Some Cromwell guiltless of his country's blood."

Once such persons are found the church and pastor are responsible for their training. There may be preparation work in teacher training classes, etc. But above all the church should help boys and girls to find a school of preparation fitted to their needs. The minister's study should be a consultation room where problems may be discussed frankly with the pastor. Bible study courses also give the wide-awake man and woman an opportunity to try out and find out his own capacities. His ability once discovered he will place himself. Other methods of activity will be helpful in putting leaders in places for which they are fitted.

An active church is a harmonious church. Every officer should be selected with due consideration of his ability to handle the office given into his trust. As nearly as possible every one eligible for a position should be given something to do. But most of all these positions should not be filled by means of disgraceful, political, sac-religious methods so often used in churches. We would do well to follow Jesus' method in selecting leaders. Prayer and supplication was deemed necessary by him before selecting his twelve helpers. If the Son of God acknowledged his need of supreme aid in a moment like this, how shall we for whom he died be justified for lack of devotion in placing religious workers? Regular terms of office should be stipulated. Finally when an office has been faithfully filled their service should be honored.

We have in a limited way observed the task of the church. We have also observed Jesus' method of organizing his workers to discover and accomplish his task. By following his method the final and all important task of the rural church will be realized, mainly that of ushering in a new day of Christian evangelism. Christ has commanded his church to preach to every creature and to teach everything he commanded. For years the "general church" has recognized this call. Great movements have been launched. Great visions have been voiced of saving the world in one generation. But practically nothing has been done by the local church. These general movements would be great power stations if they were backed by the local church. But five-sixths of the local churches never hear of them, or if they do, never feel the thrill of the Holy Spirit working within them to accomplish the task. Therefore in the light of Christian intelligence the local rural churches must be made to feel their mission to preach the Gospel to every nation. Every member must be made to realize that Christ placed a share of world evangelization upon his shoulders. Then will Christ's chariots of triumph go forth in An endless line of splendor.

These troops with heaven for home!
With creede they go from Scotland,
With incense they go from Rome.
These in the name of Jesus
Against the dark gods stand:
They gird the earth with valor,
They heed the Lord's command.

Onward the line advances,
Shaking the hills with power;
Swaying the hidden demons,
The lions that devour.
No blood shed in the wrestling,
But souls newborn arise;
The nations growing kinder,
The child heart growing wise.

What is the final ending?
The issue, can we know?
Will Christ outlive Mohammed?
Will Kallis altars go?
This is our faith tremendous,
Our wild hopes who shall scorn?
That in the name of Jesus
The world shall be reborn.

The "Perfect" Church

By Clarence Dean Marston

(Editorial Note: Quietness and dignity to a fault is not generally characteristic of Brethren churches. We more often err in the opposite direction and we find ourselves often faced with the necessity of attempting to dignify and solemnify our public services. In some of our churches we are really rowdy and irreverent in our worship and need to learn the difference between the house of God and a theatre or amusement hall. But in our effort to correct this error, as we are even now doing in many parts, we must guard against swinging to the opposite extreme or of introducing too drastic changes, and result in driving the people from our services and the Spirit out of our worship. It is that weakness that Mr. Marston graphically points out in the following words taken from the "Christian Advocate:")

I found myself alone in the silence of an empty church, the most beautiful church I have ever seen. I stood a moment wrapped in wonder. Then I broke the silence, eternal silence.

"How beautiful!" I exclaimed. The sound of my words startled me and I could see my breath as I spoke.

"Do you think it is beautiful?" The voice seemed to come from the open Bible on the pulpit. I think it was the voice of one of the angels of the seven churches over in Revelation.

"O yes," I replied, "superbly beautiful."

Every word I uttered seemed to be shattering something. But I could not refrain.

"Is it always like this?" I asked.

"Always," replied the angel.

"Always so quiet?"

"Always," came the answer.

"No one ever whispers in church service here, do they?" I said.

"No one," came the answer.

"But your young people—do they never become noisy and disorderly?" I asked.

"Never," said the angel. "They used to, but we insisted on order, and now we have it," the angel added.

"You never have any misunderstandings in a church like this, do you?" I said.

"Never," replied the angel.

"Nor any differences of theological opinion, either?" I added enthusiastically.

"Never," replied the angel.

"Oh," said I, "this is the church of my dreams! How I would love to be the preacher in such a church!"

"Would you?" replied the angel.

"Oh, yes!" I replied. "And what a preacher, what a choir, and what a sexton you must have in a church like this!" I exclaimed.

"We have none," said the angel.

"How!" replied I in astonishment.

"We don't need any," replied the angel sadly.

By this time my teeth were beginning to chatter with the cold; my joints were stiffening so I could scarcely move, and somehow I wished to be out of that beautiful, silent, orderly, cold church.

"What has come over me?" I asked. "Is it possible, after all, that anything can be wrong in this beautiful, orderly, quiet church?" I added.

The angel replied no more.

As I was leaving the church I heard another voice from the same location. I think it was the voice of one of the elders of the seven churches. He was, as if trying to repair the damage and desecration of my presence there, slowly repeating, "Silence, order, conformity." This he gravely said over and over.

I listened a moment and called back, "Mr. Elder, you will find plenty of that in the cemetery."

At that he replied in dignified words, "Please, sir, you have quite disturbed the order, silence, and conformity of our church. Good-bye, sir." And the heavy doors closed automatically behind me.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Restraint an Element in Christianity

By President Edwin E. Jacobs, Ph.D.

TEXT: Thou knowest the commandments. Do not commit adultery, Do not kill, Do not steal, Do not bear false witness, Defraud not, Honor thy Father and thy mother.—Mark 10:9.

The man here spoken of came to Jesus seeking the way of eternal life and Jesus threw across his path, five "Thou shalt not's" to one "Thou shalt." I wonder, therefore, whether restraint is not a permanent and legitimate element in Christianity.

There are those who think of Christianity as a general good will, a mild doing good, as love, charity, a sort of an ethical uplift, emasculated of the heroic, self-denial and self-abnegation. Many say, "I follow the Sermon on the Mount," forgetting that this is by no means the first bit of good moral teaching. They say, "I follow the Golden Rule", forgetting that the sentiment of the Golden Rule was uttered many hundreds of years before Christ was born. They say, "I pay my debts", forgetting that men paid their debts thousands of years before the revelation of Christ. All of the above sentiment is good and very good and every devout Christian could wish that this sentiment might be that of every one who professes the high calling of Jesus, but still all this is not all that is required of the Christian man or woman.

1. There are those who identify pleasure with sin. Whatever one wants to do, that he should not do, just on general principles. And the more he wants to do it, the more of a sin it is when once done. I did not live in New England for three different periods not to learn something of the austerity which haunts that rugged land. Many of these people still hold, if not in word, at least in practice, that the major part of Christianity is a "not doing." It is what you refrain from that makes and stamps you as a follower of the Lord. You know the history of that sentiment,—hermitism, asceticism, separatism, Puritanism,—some of which was not so good. I readily grant that denial is a part of Christianity but may be carried entirely too far.

2. Then there are those who hold that negation is wrong; that self-expression demands that you express yourself; that in order to develop the whole personality, one must give expression to all the powers. To do less, is to be less than a man, indeed less than a human. They poke fun at the Old Testament because it consists largely in, "Thou shalt not" and in taboo, a pagan word and custom.

3. Then there are those to whom nothing is wrong. If you were to take an unselected group of a thousand Christians, you would find the most diverse standards of right and wrong. It is perfectly astonishing how men will side-step moral standards these days. Card-playing is not wrong, for certainly many church members play that highly intellectual, mystifying, intricate and brainy game, auction bridge. Swearing is not wrong, for do not some of the outstanding evangelists practice pulpit swearing? Movies are not wrong for, no matter how low, do they not teach a "great lesson?" Sabbath resecration is not wrong, there is Sunday golf, baseball, etc. Murder is not wrong for did not a very well known minister shoot down a man in cold blood, and so far as I have been able to learn his denomination did not unfrock him. And if individual murder is wrong, certainly not collective murder, for did we not bless the guns of the soldiers? Lying is not wrong, especially when practiced under that more elegant name "propaganda," especially when a great war is on, and certainly when war is to "save civilization", and to "end war." That is fine and grand!

Nothing is wrong!

Now, here is my climax and I speak with all the enthusiasm I can command when I say that if a man would really want to be a Christian today in all too many cases he would have to stand alone,—alone in education, in business, in both living and in his philosophy of living. There is still need of Abrahams, "friend of God or tried of the good."

I can see how the pagans visiting our shores may say that we do not take our Christianity very seriously. I can see how a young man just trying to find his way may be hopelessly lost when he sees how we regard our own moral standards, or how the missionary has difficulty to get the heathen to accept standards which we ourselves will not accept or accept with grave reservations.

I could go a step further and note how we deny all too often many other standards,—cardinal doctrines of the New Testament, such as the doctrine of the Holy Spirit, the need of repentance, the new birth, or the Lordship of Jesus.

I recently read some 35 reasons why young people fail in college. There were two groups of reasons, one relating to forces outside of the young person's control and one wholly within. The latter group interests me most—indifference, laziness, bad moral habits, too many outside interests, and lack of application. All of these may be summed up in one, viz., lack of the proper regimen of living, which is only another way of saying, lack of restraint. It is a sort of a mental myopia, seeing only the moment's good while the greater good lies in the distance, unseen and unsuspected.

Christianity, therefore, by the command of Jesus, by the results to be obtained, and by the tests of reason and history, must contain elements of genuine restraint. You can not do just any and everything and still be a Christian. Thou shalt not, is thrown squarely across your path again and again. Nor can life in general be lived without this wholesome element.

Stand, ye therefore and when having done all, Stand—erect clean chastened, not wavering, but steadfast, not yielding, but resolute, for in the hall of eternal fame, only those have their name writ who have been self-controlled, and who have kept the body under that the soul might live.

THE TOUCH OF POWER

Following the prayer of faith comes the touch of power that demonstrates that the pentecostal dispensation continues with all the characteristics described in the New Testament of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ. That touch is an experience. The promise of it never fails where faith is present.

Dr. Torrey Replies to an Objector

Why pray for revival? Some of God's people believe that in these days revival is impossible. They say we are in the midst of the apostasy prophesied in the Bible, and that is to be followed by the Lord's second coming.

Recently a letter was written to the editor of one of the magazines that published Dr. Torrey's article entitled, "A Powerful Plea for Prayer for Revival," and the writer apparently objected to the article on the ground that we are now passing through the period of apostasy which precedes the Lord's return, and that therefore revival can not occur. Dr. Torrey replied in part as follows:

"You give no Scriptures for your apparent position that the present apostasy, to which I plainly refer in my article, is the final apostasy. It certainly looks as though it might be, but so in the days of Martin Luther, it must have looked as if apostasy, so widespread, was the final one, and if Martin Luther and others had followed your line of reasoning, they would have been paralyzed, but, thank God they did not.

"So also in the eighteenth century in the days of Wesley, the apostasy was more general, than it is today, and if Wesley or Whitefield and others had followed your line of reasoning there would not have been the great revival which saved, for the time, civilization and the church.

"Just so in the latter part of the same century if Jonathan Edwards had adopted your line of reasoning and your assumption without the Bible warrant that the final apostasy had fully set in, and therefore there could not be any great ingathering of the unsaved, he would not have sent out his plea for prayer, and consequent results would have been appalling.

"Just so in the early years of the nineteenth century, conditions were far worse in our colleges than they are today, and so were also conditions in the church, and in other matters, and if Timothy Dwight and others had followed out your line of reasoning, and your unwarranted assumption, the great revival that shook and transformed Yale College, Princeton, and swept over the country, would not have come to pass."

Let us be encouraged by the above reminder of God's gracious dealings in the past; let us lay hold upon his promise, "Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and show thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not" (Jer. 33:3); and with increased faith let us continue to pray for revival.

WHAT GOD DEMANDS

What God demands of men is that they should possess a heart like his, a heart in every thought renewed. Nothing less than that does he require. But how is it attainable to act the part of holiness, but it is beyond our power to be able? Perfect conduct is not impossible. It is not hard so remake our nature that our perfect conduct is the expression of a perfect inward disposition. What, then, can we do? Of ourselves just nothing; but that fact provides no reason for despairing thoughts, for he who demands is always ready to give to us just that which he requires, and to all men he is willing to fulfill his ancient promise: "A new heart will I give you, and a new spirit will I put within you." That is a gift within the privilege of us all, and it is only when our hearts have been renewed that there will dwell within us the motives that will lead us on to truly perfect conduct. We shall then be no mere actors of a part when even in time we act in harmony with the abiding laws of eternity, but being heavenly-minded we shall be saved from the tyranny of the transient things which engross the earthly-minded, and so find it impossible to play our parts as perfect citizens of this passing earth, whilst all the time ready to be transferred to the enduring scenery of the world beyond, and there begin that other life. And to find ourselves on that broader stage with a heart and mind already attuned to its environment will make that other world at once just heaven.—R. A. Brown.

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE SPRINGS OF JOY—Phil. 4:4. "Rejoice in the Lord." Those words point to the secret of the Christian's joy; in him are the never-failing springs. And they are ever right at hand. We have no long journey to make, nor obstacles to overcome before we can have access to that joy; it is within our reach and is to be had for the taking. "All my springs are in thee," and when we lay hold on the Lord Jesus we are immediately at the springs.

TUESDAY

WEAK UNDER TEMPTATION—Gen. 35:29-34. "Sell me this thy birthright." Esau was tested at his weakest point—his appetite—and yielded because he had been in the habit of pampering it. He who trains himself in the little affairs of life's everyday and refuses to train himself to say no, will find himself weak and defeated in the crisis.

WEDNESDAY

SQUANDERING LIFE—Isa. 55:1-3. "Hearken diligently unto me, and eat ye that which is good, and let your soul delight itself in fatness." There are some things which we cannot afford to do, no matter how many others do, nor how much it may be urged upon us. Sin is wasteful, it squanders life, it is traitor to the highest faculties and best gifts which God has bestowed on us.

THURSDAY

UNION WITH CHRIST—John 15:5-7. Here Jesus brings his followers into the closest possible relationship with himself; they are practically identified, there is a veritable union, the two are one. But Jesus is emphasizing not merely the importance of union with himself, but a union in which human dependence upon the Lord Jesus is recognized and the necessity of fruit-bearing is understood. When we abide in him by faith we bear much fruit. Thus faith and works are essential and inseparable tokens of union with Christ.

FRIDAY

RESISTING THE HOLY GHOST—Acts 7:49-51. "Ye do always resist the Holy Ghost." That was a severe charge; and it made the people angry and they sought revenge. The truth of God may sometimes be sharp, but there is no use to show our teeth about it. When the Holy Spirit speaks to us we ought to bend our wills into submissiveness. He seeks to "guide us into all truth," but if we refuse his guidance, are we not "resisting the Holy Ghost"?

SATURDAY

THE GREAT PHYSICIAN—Psalm 103:1-4: "Who healeth all thy diseases." The primitive meaning of the Saxon word "Saviour", is "all-health", and that is what the Lord Jesus means to men. He never ignored a part of man's nature. He healed the diseases of the body while he preached the Gospel of the Kingdom. We have too often failed to emphasize and to make use of Christ's ministry of healing, and preservation of health today. He is still the Great Physician of the body as well as of the soul.

SUNDAY

LOOKING UP—Psalm 34:4-7. "They looked unto him and were lightened." It makes a difference in what direction we look; it helps to make us what we are. Whether we look up or down, whether we contemplate things that are noble and high and fine or things that are base and vile, will be registered in character and countenance. We become like our ideal. Looking unto Jesus, we gain inspiration as well as power for holy living.—G. S. B.

Introductory Note

The time was 787 B. C. Jehoshaphat was king of Judah. Ahab, the son of that Omri who propagated Jeroboam's sin, Mic. 6:16, married Jezebel a Sidonian princess and introduced Baal-worship into Israel; withstood by Elijah. To punish the Israelites' insincerity and inconstancy in their reformation, God drives Elijah their great instructor into corners. 1. Frightened by Jezebel's threat, he flees southward to the Arabian desert, vs. 1-3. 2. Amidst his wandering and weariness of life, God wonderfully strengthens him by angelic feeding at Beersheba, 4-8. 3. At Mt. Sinai God meets him; rebukes him for deserting his work in Israel; appoints him to anoint Hazael, Jehu and Elisha, and assures him that there yet remained 7,000 worshipers of Jehovah in Israel, 9-18. 4. He is scarcely returned to the land of Israel, when Elisha joins him as assistant, 19-21.—Ex.

Elijah's Flight

Did Elijah show a lack of faith and courage when he fled? Some think he did, while some insist that he was only acting wisely, that there was no reason for his staying and endangering his life. One writer gives this interesting interpretation of Elijah's conduct. He says:

So long as a true man has a work to do, he does it, as Elijah did. He counts not his life dear unto him. But when his work is done, it was, as Farrar says, "no part of his duty to throw away his life and give a counter triumph to the Baal worshipers whom he had so signally humiliated." Elijah was a brave man if ever there was one, but he was not a braggadocio. He was brave enough to let the ignorant thing he was a coward. His going was not a sign of cowardice, but of wisdom and common sense. Christ himself bade his disciples, "When ye are persecuted in one city flee ye to another"; kindle the divine fires elsewhere, and there shall be two flames instead of one. Elijah's flight was not like Jonah's to escape a dangerous task. "Elijah flies only when he has done the mighty work of God, and only when the life is in deadly peril which he would fain save for future emergencies of service."

Whither Should Elijah Flee

Jezebel would naturally look for him in Syria, where he had been hiding, and in Gilead, whence he had come originally; he turned therefore in a new direction, southward, walking and running fast for his life.

He soon got out of Israel into Judah, but Jehoshaphat, king of Judah, was in close alliance with Ahab, and Elijah did not dare stay in the Southern Kingdom. Therefore he left behind him at Beersheba, the most southern city of Judah, his disciple-attendant who had followed him to that point (the Jews say that it was the son of the widow of Zarephath whom he had raised from the dead), and himself pressed on a day's journey into the wilderness. At last, for the first time in his flight, the prophet felt safe from Jezebel's vengeance.

The wilderness to which Elijah had come was so barren that a lonely retem ("juniper") bush was conspicuous in it—the retem being the largest shrub in the deserts south of Palestine. "Though the shade it affords is but scanty, in the absence of other shrubs it is frequently used by desert travelers as a refuge from the sun's scorching rays."

Lessons from Elijah's Discouragement

Not in inspiration, but in enlightenment and warning, Elijah touches also our human weakness. He descended from his moment of triumph into the very depths of despondency—going off into the wilderness and praying to die in the very moment that he should have been vigorously following up his victory.

"Is it not human experience that deepest

A MILE AND A HALF FROM CHURCH

By George C. Degen

We're a mile and a half from church you know,
And it rains today so we can't go.

We'd go ten miles to a dance or a show
Though the rains should fall and the winds should blow.

But the church is different we'd have you know,
That's why when it rains we just can't go.

But we always go to the things we like
And we ride if we can, if we can't we hike.

We're a mile and a half from church you know,
And a tire is flat so we can't go.

We'd fix it twice to make a visit
And if there's a ball game we wouldn't miss it.

We'd mend the tire if at all we could
And if we couldn't we'd go a foot.
For hunting pleasure is all the style,
So the church will have to wait awhile.

We're a mile and a half from church you know,
And our friends are coming so we can't go.

To disappoint friends would seem unkind
But to neglect worship we don't mind,
If we may but please our friends on earth
And spend the day in feasting and mirth.

But sometime, when we come near the end of our days,
We'll go to church, and mend our ways.

depression comes almost on the heels of triumph? The minister who has preached a sermon of inspiration, lifting others to heights of new vision and endeavor not infrequently goes home with a sense of failure, baffled, disappointed and ready to give over. Does not this sometimes account for a sudden resignation sprung upon a congregation in the midst of an apparently overwhelming success?"—Gilroy.

"If God gives a command, he will give also power. In proportion as any one hopes that he has the spirit of Elijah, that is, of a servant of the living God, he should be ashamed of all doubting, fearing, desponding. We have one on our side, stronger than the strong, and whose strength is made perfect in our weakness."—Prof. Rowland Williams.

"Let each go forth and do the little that is at his hand with all his might, and God will make that little great. Do not affirm that you have no resources, for if you can call God your own you have the wealth and power and wisdom of the Innate behind you."

A Vision of God

A vision of God is necessary to all true wisdom concerning the life of the soul. If a man has lost God out of the world, so that the spring comes with its reviving flowers, its new crops in the fields, its new glory in the forests, with no recognition of anything but some brute force and power, some vague, unreal thing called nature, then man's soul is dwarfed and narrowed and he becomes but a big human ant, to toil for awhile in his ant hill and die. You cannot build up a great life, you cannot construct a happy career, without a wider vision than that. A vision of God is necessary to all real life in the soul.—Louis Albert Banks.

God's Guiding

Life does not turn out as you have planned or wished, but it brings something you have never dreamed of. It puts you into a situation where you can find what you would not otherwise have found. Throw yourself open to life's guiding and molding influences, and there will be joyful surprises sometime, somewhere. The sickness that thwarts lifelong ambitions brings a greatened and unspeakably enriched vision of life's meaning and purpose. You enter the valley of death, and—a marvelous thing!—that valley leads to the vision of glorious light. You find, through some mistake of your own or through some turn life takes, that you have missed one of earth's coveted experiences and delirious joys; but you find also that you can make disappointment and heartache lead to enlargement of the heart's life as well as the soul's, victory of the spirit, inner light and joy. It may not be outward success, or fame, or the thing your heart has long hungered for, or any such thing, that comes to you. But if you are looking for it, and receptive to it, you find in the midst of your pains, your disappointments, your loneliness, that Something comes, so that you can also say, "Behold, the Lord is in this place and I knew it not."—The Illustrated Quarterly.

Holiness lies along the lowly way and among the little daily deeds of service and kindness quite as much as on heights of splendid achievement.

Canton Christian Endeavor

The Canton Christian Endeavor society held its first post-vacation meeting Sunday evening, September 4th. While not all the members were able to attend, yet the meeting proved to be an inspiration, as all Christian Endeavor meetings do.

The topic, "The Use and Abuse of the Tongue," was one which created a great deal of discussion. Certainly all present were caused to realize anew the blessing of the gift of speech and also the responsibility caused by the gift.

Being a Consecration Meeting the leader used a lighthouse, made of card board, about three feet in height and having as many windows as there were members. As each member responded to Roll Call with a verse of Scripture a window was opened, after which the song, "Let the Gospel Light Shine Out" was sung. The service seemed to be very impressive. Miniature light-houses were used in giving out the different parts of the program.

In order to arouse more interest in Christian literature our society has purchased a number of books from the Moody Colportage Library and are endeavoring to sell them to people who come to the services. The books retail at 25 cents each, and though of small cost are certainly proving to be a blessing to the readers. Already one man has had his belief in Russellism shattered and is being grounded on the true Christian faith. The books are so saturated with Christian doctrine that they simply make the readers think things through themselves. Everyone knows that one of the prevailing sins of the day is that of being too lazy to "think" ourselves through the many controversies that are coming up. The profit realized from the sale of same shall be spent in sending Christian reading matter to the Mission stations, and other like places.

We would be glad to have other societies send in reports of ideas which have been carried out successfully.

Our most sincere greetings go out to all the other Endeavorers at this time.

GLADYS SPICE,
Vice President Canton C. E.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for October 9)

The Go-to-Church Brigade Luke 4: 16-22

If we learn to love the things that we do and hear at church, everyone of us will want to go regularly and take our friends with us.

"I don't see why that teacher is always asking us to memorize these Psalms. I don't like to memorize and I do not believe that there is any reason for doing it. It won't do me any good. I'm not going to memorize any of them." Mabel had just gotten home from Sunday school and her mother felt very unhappy when she heard her talking like that. Mabel's mother did not know just what would be the best thing to say to Mabel but she thought, "I do hope that Mabel will change her mind. I want her to memorize these Bible passages."

Mabel's sister, Marie, heard Mabel's speech, too, and she said, "Well, our teacher gave us a Psalm to memorize this week and I am going to see if I can say it perfectly next Sunday."

So as the week slipped by, Marie spent a great deal of time studying her Psalm but Mabel did not even read through the one that she was supposed to memorize. When Sunday came, Marie was so anxious to get to Sunday school because she wanted to show her teacher how well she could recite her memory work; but Mabel did not want to go at all, for she was ashamed of herself. Mabel didn't go till late and then she sat back in the corner, hoping that the teacher would forget to call on her.

On Sunday afternoon, mother sent Mabel and Marie to take some fruit to an old lady who was sick. They hurried along quite happily and soon found the sick lady. She was living all by herself and the little girls felt sorry for her when they saw her. She said to them, "I am so glad for the fruit and I am even more glad to see you little girls. It makes me happy when I see little girls who are smiling and happy. Please, sit down and talk to me a while."

Mabel and Marie wondered what they could talk about that would interest this old lady who had to stay at home all the time, but it was not hard to talk. They answered a few questions about their school and before long they were telling all about their home, their school and all the different things that they did.

The sick lady told them that she had once had some little girls whom she loved very much, but a terrible epidemic of disease came over the people and the little girls died. Her husband had died too, and so she was all by herself. Finally she said, "You little girls have been telling me all about your work and play but you haven't said a word about Sunday school. Don't you go to Sunday school?"

They told her, "Yes."

Then she said, "Since I have been sick, my eyes have gotten quite bad and the doctor says that I must not read. It makes it very hard for me. I love to read very much and the book I love best of all is the Bible. I do wonder if you little girls have been memorizing any Bible verses. I would love to hear a Psalm or some other Bible verses recited."

Marie was so glad that she had memorized a Psalm for that Sunday. She said, "I can recite one of the Bible Hymns if you want me to." Then she began and she said the whole Psalm without making a single mistake. As Marie was reciting, Mabel watched the face of the sick lady and she saw her smile. Hearing those Bible verses seemed to make the lady happier than anything that had been said all afternoon.

Mabel was so scared for she thought that she would be asked to say some verse next and that is the reason that she spoke almost as soon as Marie stopped reciting. This is what she said, "Next Sunday I am coming over to recite a Psalm and every week from now on I am going to try to memorize a Psalm or some other verses. If hearing that Psalm made you so happy, I believe that it would be a good thing to memorize a whole lot of them." So Mabel memorized many "Hymns Worth Knowing" and by doing it she was happier herself, her mother was happier, her Sunday school teacher was happier and so was the old lady to whom Mabel said her Bible verses each Sunday afternoon.

WITH MEMORY

By N. Sargent Hamilton

Over the road through yesterday,
Memory came to me.
With her—alack! I wandered back
To things, as they used to be.
Over the road through yesterday
Memory's gone away,
And in her place I'm face to face,
With things as they are today.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Denver and Corinth Churches

These two churches are located near Peru and Mexico. The church at Mexico is really the parent church of these churches as well as the church at Peru.

These churches are being served by Brother Johnson as pastor. Brother Johnson's home was originally at Berne, where he served acceptably as pastor for many years. It was a pleasure to be associated with him again. He gave me every aid and we had a pleasant time together.

The church at Denver is located in the town and has a good building. It is here where Brother Johnson lives. The church extended to me every courtesy. Some of the families have suffered big financial losses and the problems of the rural communities are very acute here as well as at Corinth. I find most of the rural churches meeting a real test at this time in keeping their work going. THIS PROBLEM WILL NEVER BE SOLVED UNTIL THEY TITHE AND GIVE GOD THE FIRST FRUITS AND NOT THE CULLS AND LEFT OVER. OUR PEOPLE EVERYWHERE NEED TO GET A VISION OF GOD'S WORK—THE RESPONSIBILITY OF STEWARDSHIP AND THE BLESSING OF BEING LABORING WITH HIM. IF WE EXPECT GOD'S INCREASE, THERE MUST BE FAIRNESS IN DIVISION OF HIS GIFTS. The gift of this church was $305.00.

Corinth

This church is located in the country about four miles from College Corner. They have a very good and well kept building and while the membership is small they are keeping up the work in good shape. The problems of maintaining their local work led them to give only small aid to the endowment. OUR PEOPLE SHOULD BE MADE TO REALIZE THE FUTURE OF THE LOCAL CHURCH AND THE BRETHREN CAUSE DEPENDS UPON THE INSTITUTIONS THAT ARE PRODUCING LEADERS AND LITERATURE. Their gift was $141.00. The total gift of both churches is $446.00.

SANTA MONICA, CALIFORNIA

The first purpose of this communication is to make known my California home address—919 Sixteenth Street, Santa Monica, California. Mail relating to foreign missionary business intended for me should be sent to this address, not to the Foreign Missionary Society's office in Long Beach. I mention this because I had been using the Long Beach office address temporarily until a permanent address could be given. For the benefit of those who, like myself, forget an address immediately, the Santa Monica address will appear on the back cover of the Brethren Missionary magazine.

Our trip from Ashland to Los Angeles by automobile was a very enjoyable experience. After a busy and pleasant Commencement week at the College, Mrs. McClain and I left Ashland on June 10th for the west. We arrived in Los Angeles on July 22nd, having driven about sixty-three hundred miles. The trip took us through the lake region of northwestern Iowa, the Black Hills of South Dakota, Yellowstone Park, the Olympic Mountains, west of Seattle, Mount Rainier National Park, and then south through Oregon and California to Long Beach. Western scenery is not new to us, but it was a new and wonderful experience to see it from the vantage point of an automobile which one can stop whenever desirable. (Upon reflection I notice that the foregoing sentence might be taken as an insinuation that some automobiles cannot be stopped whenever and wherever one desires. This undoubtedly is the case, as I observed on the journey. And others stopped when it was not desired. But I have no insinuation to fling at other drivers less fortunate than myself. Pride goeth before a fall. I drove over seven thousand miles without having a "flat tire", and was boasting about the achievement one day. The next day, right here in front of our home in Santa Monica, I picked up a ten penny nail.)

The trip undoubtedly has proven beneficial to my health, and this is to say nothing about the pleasure derived from days and nights spent in the midst of deserts and mountains.

We shall not soon forget the very gracious treatment accorded us while at Ashland College. It was difficult to leave my work there, but the pressure of ill health cannot be resisted beyond a certain point.

And I would like to repeat here that the sole reason for my leaving Ashland was ill health. I am optimistic enough to believe that under favorable conditions, climatic and otherwise, this handicap can be largely removed.

I believe firmly in the future of Ashland College, and also in its present, for it is a going concern with a fine group of trained teachers, and it offers to anyone a splendid opportunity for Christian service and a career. The written and spoken word of President Jacobs certainly leaves no room for doubt as to the attitude of the Institution toward Christian faith and life. The College deserves the hearty support of all the churches, and I believe this is being realized today more completely than ever before. Just a few days ago I talked with a group of about ten Long Beach boys, all of whom expect to be in Ashland this year, and all of them, as I recall, expect to prepare for the Christian ministry. This is encouraging for both church and College.

The need for a minor surgical operation on the throat kept me from attending Conference this year. It seems strange not to be there, for this is the first Conference missed since my ordination. It is also the first annual meeting of the Foreign Board I have missed since becoming a member. The Lord willing, I hope to be there next year, and in the years to come.

About the middle of September I shall take up my work as Instructor of Christian Doctrine in the Bible Institute of Los Angeles. This institution is known to many in the church as an interdenominational training school for Christian workers, similar to the Moody Institute of Chicago and second to it in size. It was here, thirteen years ago, that I began educational preparation for the Christian ministry.

ALVA J. McCLAIN,
Santa Monica, California.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

It is gratifying to report that the College opened under very favorable circumstances a week ago Tuesday, September 13th. All of the teachers were here, except Professor DeLozier who was then abroad, but who since has returned and taken up his work.

The enrollment for the first semester last year, after all withdrawals were counted out, was 269. This year, after eliminating the withdrawals, it is 285. This represents a very substantial gain. However I had hoped that the enrollment would total 300 as that is the largest number we can accommodate. Moreover, the Freshman class is not quite so large as usual, indicating that more of our upper classmen return, which is highly desirable. I note that in another Ohio college, the Freshman class is twice as large as the senior class which shows that the student mortality there is fifty per cent. At another Ohio college this fall, I noted that the freshman class was over 800 in a total enrollment of less than 1200. So our situation here is rather commendable and is improving, our Freshman class numbering 116.

Professor Monroe and Professor Stuckey are the two new men here and have both taken up their work with enthusiasm. While the places which they occupy are hard to fill on account of the high standards set by their predecessors, yet it seems evident that they will take up the work without appreciable loss.

Professors Anspach and Mason were in Columbus twice this past week conferring with the State office and we are now in line with their highest requirements relative to the educational work. However, we are to undergo inspection in October.

Professor Charles Anspach, as noted above, has returned from a year and a summer study in the University of Michigan and has taken up the work as Dean of the Arts College and Head of the Department of Education. In the absence of the former dean of men, Professor Mason has assumed that position. So we are completely organized again for the year.

Professor DeLozier is to go to the Pennsylvania conference and Professor Anspach to the two western conferences while some of the rest of us will represent the College at the Ohio conference in October.

The College banquet at Winona was well attended and the best of fellowship prevailed.

Homecoming here is set for October 29th, when we play Manchester College, a sister institution at North Manchester, Indiana. This is our first athletic encounter with Manchester and I hope it may prove to be the first of a long and pleasant athletic relationship.

The Gymnasium approaches completion. We are now using it and expect to dedicate October 20th, in the evening, when we will hold open house and invite in our friends and the donors of the last campaign.

We have had a very substantial increase in the enrollment in the Seminary with what appears to be a very excellent group of men.

I just received a letter posted at sea from

Mr. and Mrs. Taber. A clipping was enclosed from the paper published on the boat relating to a freak in biology. Of course, Taber noticed this, and his interest in science prompted the clipping.

Professor Haun will represent the College at the inauguration of Rev. A. A. Shaw as president of Denison University, October 21.

The remains of the old gymnasium have all been removed, and the ground graded and seeded. Returning friends will note the change with a feeling of pride.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

HOME COMING AT DAYTON

We entered into the spring and summer work in the Dayton church after a very busy winter. There was something doing almost all of the time. For the pastor, this first year has been a period of getting our bearings; getting acquainted with the people; and getting acquainted with the problems. We believe we have made some progress along those various lines.

We came through the summer months in a little better than average shape, we believe. Considering everything, our church school has held up in a way quite satisfactory. And our audiences both morning and evening for the church services compared favorably with those of the other churches of the city during the hot months.

We had our Home Coming day on September 18th, which was both a climax and a signal. It was a climax to our summer work and a signal for action for the fall and winter. We prepared carefully for this day. Our people were expectant. We had great audiences both morning and evening. Dr. Charles A. Bame of Ashland Ohio, former pastor, was the speaker of the day. His sermons were exceedingly fitting and of unusual strength. We also had great music throughout the day's program. We believe that the day was a real blessing to our people, and that it has brought us renewed impetus which will be evidenced in all departments of our work during the winter. We are greatly indebted to Brother Bame for his presence among us and his splendid contribution to the success of the event.

Elder Samuel Kiehl, the most aged member of the Dayton church, past ninety years of age, was able to take a brief part in the morning service, and he acquitted himself most admirably. Elder W. C. Teeter was able to be in both of the services of the day, for which we were very glad. Brother Orion E. Bowman could not be with us, for which his many friends in the church were very sorry.

We are looking forward to a very busy, and we hope, fruitful winter. We believe that wise, careful planning on the one hand, and on the other, prayerful and persistent cooperation between each other and our Lord and Master will enable us to do large and lasting things for him and the cause of his Kingdom.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

THE 1927 EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

It has been more than a month since my last report was made, as to receipts from this source, partly because there has not been so very much to report, and partly because of the press of other work. Up to this time, less than fifty of our congregations have sent in their offerings, which means that three-fourths or more of the congregations have not responded. I know that I shall yet hear from them, unless the congregational treasurers forget all about it, a thing which I certainly hope they will not do. Prof. Puterbaugh, who attended the publicity end of the annual appeal, gave more attention to it than has ever been done before, leaving no stone unturned which could uncover information as to the needs of your college, and the purposes to which the offering was to be applied. But somehow, the results are slower than ever in coming in to my office. It is your college, and you must look to it alone for your future leaders in the pulpit and mission fields. During the recent General Conference, Dr. L. S. Bauman declared that deep and wide as his interest in the cause of Foreign Missions is, and much as he would regret to see any backward step taken in that field of Christian Endeavor, he said that the cause of First Importance today, to and for the Brethren church, is Ashland College, and that we must make it a Standard College, and do it at once. It is for help to that end, that these annual offerings are asked for. The church has about three quarters of a million dollars invested in the school,—far too large an amount to jeopardize through the failure of proper support. Every district conference has endorsed it, and the general conference also. Every real leader in the denomination, ministerial or lay, has put the stamp of his approval upon it, and the men here in the institution, are investing their lives in it. Hurry with your offerings.

TRAVEL FLASHES

A World Conference Against Alcoholism

It happened at Winona Lake, August 17-23. Churches had an opportunity to send delegates and there were far too few from all churches. It was a rare conference. I have attended a World Sunday School Conference, World, and International Christian Endeavor Conferences, but never saw so many foreigners on a single program as were on this. I wish I could name some of the prominent foreigners, but must suffice to say that there were fifty-five (55) nations represented by personal delegates. I'd like to report some of the wonderful addresses, but do not have space for even that. Suffice to say again, that one of the four outstanding addresses I have ever heard was in this conference by a small bit of a woman from Australia. The most dramatic moment I have ever seen in an audience was when she had her audience so wrapped up in her enthusiasm that they clamored for her to go on, and she wanted to go on, and the chairman had to call her time because of the remainder of the program. I may as well say, too right here, that she doubtless voiced the sentiment of the delegates from other lands when at her climax she shouted in the excitement of the above moment, "Americans, Stand fast! See it through! We'll stand tomorrow, where you stand today!"

The Same Old Enemy

Perhaps every address of the conference proved the fact that our enemy in the program of ridding the world of alcohol is the same conscienceless, deceitful, selfish type, everywhere. Canadians told of the chicanery used to get the reversed decision there; an Icelander told how the sentiment in that cold country is unmistakably dry, but that Spain by laws of trade forced their liquor on them for the only thing they have to sell. From everywhere, came the same echo, "It is a fight against a foul, determined, conscienceless enemy."

An Impressionable Scene

To me, the most impressive scene of the whole meeting was when an Englishman and a German stood on that famed platform and, grasping each other's hands, pledged themselves and the good people of their respective countries to fight each other no more but the enemy of both, Alcoholism.

Two and a Half Million in Germany

This same German, a Prof. Halle, told a remarkable story of how Germany is turning away from liquor. Working solely among the youth in a very short time, he organized a movement and secured two and a half million signatures petitioning the Reichstag to give them a law for Local Option. It would surely seem that as millions of people look to our country as the guiding nation of the earth, so they are attempting to secure freedom from Alcoholism by the same route and method it has been secured here. I am very sorry, indeed that more of my brethren did not have the inspiration of this splendid, educative, world-visioning conference.

The Brethren Conference in Ashland

It may interest our brethren all over the country to know that Ashland at once became enthusiastic about our National Conference to be held here next year. Immediately I arrived home, I reported the action of the conference locating the next one here, and our only paper in this city of 10,000 people, the Times-Gazette, gave us the inch headline at the top of the page; I considered that very fine; but the next evening, there came an editorial of which I excerpt a part:

"Ashland should feel highly honored that it has been selected as the meeting place for the National Conference of Brethren Churches next year. The event should draw nearly double the regular attendance of the conference as it will mark the 50th Anniversary of the founding of the local educational institution.

"We are certain that Ashland's spirit of hospitality will make the Brethren visitors thoroughly enjoy their visit to our city and cause them to want the conference again in the near future.

"An indication of how useful the new gymnasium is going to be to the college, is shown already, with the announcement that sessions of the church conference will be held in the building."

That's when the Travel Flashes will be written by you people. If the Lord allows me to remain here that long, it will be the second conference I have helped to entertain and I believe the editorial tells the truth about our next one.

CHARLES A. BAME.

ESPANA PINTORESCA

As I sit this Sunday afternoon on suitcase in train shed here at Venezia (Venice) awaiting the "treno diretto" from Milano, I shall take advantage of the time to write a line to the Evangelist.

I last wrote from Marseille whence I had a hot, dusty journey to Barcelona where I lodged in a native Posada or Inn. My quarters were very meager and I am not sure that I was the lone possessor of the bed, but I preferred such accommodations at 2.30 (2 pesetas and 30 centimos) rather than pay 8 pesetas as do most Americans.

From Barcelona I had 14 hours very tiresome, hot dusty ride over a veritable desert to Madrid.

I never before knew that from Barcelona to Saragossa (Zaragoza) is much like a desert. It is quite mountainous. In fact I counted 100 tunnels from Barcelona to Madrid, 76 of which are of fair length.

In places I saw dwellings but little removed from the period of the mound builders.

Other towns consist of houses built of sun baked clay which so blends with the surrounding sun baked clay of hillsides as to constitute a genuine camouflage.

In Spain people drink water (and wine). They have oriental water jugs from which they drink as do the people of Palestine.

On the way down one fellow filled his jug at a depot during one of the usual 30 minute stops. Then I heard him say: "Ojala que tuviera una cuerla,"—"I wish I had a rope." I happened to have a piece of twine in my pocket, so I handed it to him. He hung the jug out the train window. I later had the privilege (.) of provoking considerable laughter when I too tried to drink from the stream pouring from the jug. My mouth was large enough but my aim was poor and so I felt cold at the neck (I don't mean the neck of the jug, but my neck). I should have practiced on Miss Aboud's jug.

For three days I entered into the life of old Madrid. I learned definitely the meaning of "La puerta del" Sol—the center of Madrilenian life. I spent a day in the Museo del Prado; I went out to the older sections of town and saw some very pitiful examples of poverty and misery.

I attended a bull fight where I saw four of the poor bovine creatures brutally tormented and then mercilessly stabbed to death.

I felt as though my nerves were going down hill in reverse, but by the time the fourth bull rushed in I was over it and getting ready to point thumbs down with the rest of 'em. I remembered a Spanish saying:

Quien no ha visto a Granada
No ha visto nada.

He who hasn't seen Granada
Hasn't seen anything.

But I decided that I had as good as seen Granada. Now that I have seen Genoa I am convinced that I have seen many of the features of Granada.

On the way back to Barcelona I fell in with a native from 6 kilometers behind Zaragoza. He too was on the way to France, so we "bunked" together at a still more simple native inn at Barcelona. Before retiring we washed on the towel (I know some of the good sisters, especially in Ashland, will say: "Well, I'll bet you washed on the towel more than once", to which I answer, No, this was the only time). In the morning we had breakfast and our hotel bill was 2.85 (51 cents U. S. money).

After another long day's journey I reached Marseille again. I was hoping after 16 days to hear from my family, but alas, no mail.

Here I had a hard experience. I wanted to come into Italy and yet I wanted word from my wife and two children. Also I feared some anti-American demonstrations in Italy due to the Sacco-Vanzetti execution. But I am in Europe and my circumstances aren't likely to permit another such trip, so into Italy I came. I have found Italy to be the most tranquil, industrious place I have yet seen.

I studied the life of the typical Genoese. The extremely narrow streets called vico, vicolo and vicoletto, proved to be exceedingly interesting.

Then I moved on to Rome. Here I feared that at last I should be obliged to resort to some tourist agency in order to accomplish what I planned. But I "made good" according to my usual economy plan. I found a bus running out the Appian way and passing the catacombs. The round trip was 5.70 (5 lire and 70 centesimi).

So I got to see the old Appian way, had a visit to the catacombs, explored the Fors Romano and saw the carcere (prison) Mamertino where Paul was imprisoned. I visited St. Peter's and the Vatican museum and Hadrian's tomb and many other things and did all on 1-5 what Cooks would have charged me.

Then I moved on to Naples. Here I saw old Vesuvius (in spite of Mussolini) spouting forth a heavy column of smoke which filled the horizon like a vast cumulous cloud. I explored the ancient city of Pompei and was made to marvel at the advanced state of civilization of that day. I visited the national museum at Naples and was surprised to find that it is certainly one of the outstanding museums of the world, meriting a consideration alongside the Louvre, Museo del Prado and others.

Then I moved back to Rome where I had a 3 hour wait between trains and improved the time by going out to the Porta S. Paolo—St. Paul's gate. There I saw the pyramid which I think represents the tomb of the great Apostle.

I came on to Florence, the city that has perhaps furnished more great men than any other city of the world, at least since ancient times. At every turn I found sculptured on the walls quotations from Dante. I found at my elbow also many other historic and literary references. I saw the matchless paintings in the Palazzo Vecchio. I strolled down the banks of the Arno, etc.

Then I came on to Venice. Venezia! What a peculiar place! Unique in every particular! No automobiles, no carriages, no street sprinklers.

The railroad crosses a long stretch of water to get to the depot where I now sit. Then as one steps out of the "Stazione" he faces a water front and boats to take traveler and baggage.

I soon located a modest native pension. At night I battled with the mosquitoes a

I had done in Naples (I carry the scars of many battles.) But oh! Here at Venice! I arose and turned on the light. One mosquito was 6 inches from the next on all four walls and on the ceiling of my bed room.

"Necessity is the mother of invention." So I invented. Out of my traveling equipment and the bed sheet I managed to contrive a barricade and fell asleep beneath the sweet falsetto tones of the beautiful Venice.

Let me say here that if I had any business ability I could turn it to good account. I would seek to interest France, Italy and Spain in some screens. I haven't seen a screen anywhere I have gone. But I have both seen and felt, yea heard a demand for such.

The Lord has marvelously blessed me all along the way. I have been a lone, lone pilgrim casting as it were a slowly moving silhouette across the Latin countries. Yet all has gone well.

I hope to be in Milan tonight and get mail tomorrow which will be the second letter in 30 days. I omitted to say that I received an epistle in Rome, making 19 days that I had gone without mail. The fault is mine however, and is part of the price that one must pay for individual travel, with tourist agencies one's mail is more regular.

But now I can sympathize with our missionaries way out on the field and having no word from home folks. It is a terrible experience. One feels so far, far away. While at Paris and getting my mail regularly I felt close home, but in Spain and Italy I am far off.

I shall try to say a word about religious conditions in a later letter.

I hope soon to be back in Paris.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The work here is moving along as usual, and a little more so since it has been a little cooler for the last few days.

We are adding a few children to our church school, and are getting promises of several others for the near future.

Have not launched the Young People's meeting since the summer months, but expect to in the near future. The Woman's Missionary Society is meeting every Thursday for sociability and work; this too promises better attendance since the weather is more pleasant. Brother Sickel was with us Sunday evening of September 18th and gave his stereopticon lecture on South America, to a small but very appreciative audience, and would have had a larger attendance if we could have had more time to have advertised him.

A visitor who does some reporting for the daily paper, was present and gave a nice write-up of the service in the Monday evening issue. We are already preparing for the coming of Brother Beal, perhaps some time in November.

I recently met a man and his wife, who are Brethren people and live in Eldorado, Kansas, but own a good farm about 16 miles west of Fort Scott, and he desires to rent that farm for another year, and prefers a Brethren family, and as we also are glad to get Brethren families in and near our city, we will be glad to assist in locating such a family.

If any one should read this, and has a desire to cast their lot, in the great "Sunflower State" of the Mid-west, just write me and I will put you in touch with this opportunity. We are now looking forward to district conference, the second week of October.

Remember the work at Fort Scott, when you pray.

STATEMENT BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE HOME MISSION BOARD

The Home Board has always had the hearty support of the brotherhood in all her undertakings. Our record of finances and achievements in general for the past year were made possible by this same interest on your part. In line with our policy of "Opening up a new work every year", we are sending Brother J. C. Beal to Harrah, Washington. Brother Beal already has a good nucleus of members to begin with and promises a self-supporting work in a short time. Your Board felt all the more drawn to this field by the Spokane people requesting that they need no further support. If Harrah can be established as we believe it can, it will be a great encouragement to the rest of our efforts in the Northwest. Let us not only give our financial support from time to time, but let us remember all our workers at the Throne of Grace.

Quite a number of our stations will soon be self-supporting, just as rapidly as we can get them to the point of going alone, and you increase your gifts, we will turn to new fields. We have the opportunities, they await your support to make in most instances new and strong churches soon. Our Kentucky work merits your support as never before, they are forging ahead, with every indication of having the best year in their history. Their problems are great. Let us not overlook them in our prayers and giving.

The Board is making somewhat of a departure this year in the sending out into the field Sister Shack. She will go first to Ohio churches, then into Indiana and on through the brotherhood. Brethren of the ministry don't be afraid to have her come. She will not only further the work of our own Board, but she will strengthen your local work. She stands ready to help any of your organizations in any way she can.

I bespeak for our Board your continued support, in order that we may have the best year ever for Home Missions. Not less for Foreign Missions but more for Home Missions.

H. F. STUCKMAN.

THE CLOCK OF LIFE

*The clock of life is wound but once
And no man has the power
To tell just when the hands will stop
At late or early hour.
Now is the only time you own;
Live, love, toil with a will—Place no faith in "Tomorrow," for
The clock may then be still.*

ANNOUNCEMENTS

WANTED

A stenographer for the Seminary. Part time work and an opportunity to earn most of the year's expense. Write or wire the President, E. E. Jacobs, Ashland, Ohio.

MATERIAL FOR ANNUAL

Will all secretaries of the different organizations in the church please send their minutes in promptly for publication in the Annual? Also whatever addresses they may have of National Conference that they wish published.

Further, will all District Conference secretaries send in their organizations as soon as possible. If all will be prompt the Annual can be published before Thanksgiving. Will you help?

O. C. STARN, Secretary, Gratis, Ohio.

LAST CALL TO PENNSYLVANIA BRETHREN! OCT. 3-6TH.

The time is short till our Conference opens. Handbills have been sent to every congregation for distribution. Personal letters have been written to every pastor in the district urging them to press the matter before their people that they might bring as many as possible to the Conference with them. If all these efforts have not reached each pastor and congregation it is because the mails have miscarried. In case this is so, this call will take the place of any other failure to reach everybody.

All things are ready! Preparations are completed! Come to the feast! From responses already received this surely promises to be one of our greatest conferences. All things point to a rich outpouring of the blessing of God.

Directions for those coming on trains as well as those coming by automobile were published in the last issues of the Evangelist. We will be looking for you all in Philadelphia Monday evening, October 3rd.
R. PAUL MILLER.

OHIO STATE CONFERENCE

A Few Words of Welcome from the Canton Church

On October 4th the Ohio State Conference convenes at Canton. It is a time that the Canton congregation has been looking forward to with anticipation. We want to extend a cordial invitation to the Ohio churches to be with us.

The church is situated on the corner of Hartford Avenue and Second Street, N. E., and is easily accessible by either street railway or over Lincoln Highway. Motorists from the west may follow U. S. 30 through Canton to Hartford Avenue. East Tuscarawas street cars will carry you within one block of the church. (Tuscarawas street is Lincoln Highway or Route 30 through Canton).

The housing committee would appreciate it if you would drop a line to the pastor indicating the time of your arrival and the number in your party and whether you will arrive by auto or by rail.

1803 Fourth Street, S. E.

IN THE SHADOW

FRIEDLINE—Brother John Friedline, for 28 years a member of the Dayton Brethren church, died September 6th, at 69 years of age. He was born in Somerset County, Pennsylvania and came to Dayton 28 years ago. Brother Friedline was a man of gentle and quiet manner, kind in his home and highly respected as a neighbor and citizen. Of late years sickness in his home made it difficult for him to be as active in the church as he otherwise would have been. Funeral services at the church, conducted by the pastor, and assisted by a minister of the United Brethren faith who was at one time a neighbor to the Friedlines. A widow and son remain to mourn the death of Brother Friedline.
WM. H. BEACHLER.

CAMPBELL—Anna Catherine Campbell, nine months old daughter of Brother and Sister Charles Campbell left us on the morning of July 18th, after every effort had been put forth to keep her. She was the object of fondest affection in the home and her going brought keen sorrow. Brother and Sister Campbell are deacon and deaconess in the Dayton church, loyal and highly respected, and the deepest sympathy of many friends goes out to them and their three sons in this time of their grief. Funeral at the home, in charge of the pastor, and Brother Bell assisting.
WM. H. BEACHLER.

HAZEN—Mrs. Hattie Hazen, the wife of Jacob Hazen, deceased, departed this life August 27, 1927, at the ripe old age of 81 years, 8 months and 15 days. She was a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elder John P. Ebersole and was born in Washington Township, Hancock County, Ohio. Her life was lived in the vicinity of her birth. With her husband she united with the Church of the Brethren nearly fifty years ago. When the Brethren church was organized in West Independence, Ohio, she placed her membership there, becoming one of the charter members. Again, when the West Independence congregation was transferred to Fostoria, Ohio, she was one of the active promoters of the work. She was always counted among the faithful. She suffered much, but bore her suffering with becoming Christian patience. She realized that the time of her departure was near and was ready to go. Her many years of Christian service and fellowship with Christ had ripened into a hopeful old age.

While her infirmities during recent months prevented her from attending public worship, she spent much time reading the Bible and in prayer. She will be greatly missed by her many friends and by the church. Funeral services were conducted by the writer, her pastor, H. M. OBERHOLTZER.

LACKEY—After a long and testing illness, which was characterized by remarkable Christian courage and fortitude, we had to give up Brother Samuel Frank Lackey. Brother Lackey was just a little more than 43 years of age, and just coming into the best years of his life. He was born in Virginia, but had lived in Dayton for 25 years. He was a loyal and highly respected member of the Layton church, and the efficient and greatly beloved president of our large Boethian Bible class. His wife who is a faithful member of the church, and five children, remain to mourn the death of our brother, who was to them truly husband and father. Brother Lackey's death has brought a keen loss to the church, as well as the community. His burial was from the church on July 19th. Brother Bell assisting the pastor.
WM. H. BEACHLER.

STRONG—Emma Bell Strong was born June 16, 1862 and departed this life on July 23, 1927. Besides her husband she is survived by one sister, one daughter, twelve grandchildren and a multitude of other relatives and friends.

She was one of the most faithful members of the Carlton Brethren church, near Garwin, Iowa. For the past few years, she was denied regular church attendance, on account of the sickness of her husband. Her life was lived for others. The good influence of her life shall ever live. She was a wonderful mother, a true companion and a very patient sufferer.

Funeral was conducted by the writer, whose privilege it was to be her pastor for three years, assisted by Rev. C. A. Landis. The large gathering of friends and the many beautiful floral offerings gave evidence of the high esteem in which she was held.
AUSTIN R. STALEY.

GARVER—Miss Marietta Doane was born November 8, 1877. She died August 29, 1927, aged 49 years, 9 months and 21 days. She was united in marriage to S. C. Garver, December 15, 1904. To this union three children were born, Clarence S., Ethel L., and Wayne who died in infancy, December 6, 1912. She leaves to mourn her departure, a loving husband, her two children, Clarence and Ethel, Zoe Garver Keim, Georgia and David Garver, her father and mother, brother and wife and nephew, several grandchildren, and a host of friends.

She joined the Disciple church at the age of 12 years and became a member of the Brethren church about 25 years ago. She was a member of the Homerville church but took active part in the work of other churches in Wooster where the family has lived for several years.

She was faithful to the last and was fully ready to go, having made all arrangements for funeral services before she died. Our loss is her gain.

May our heavenly Father comfort and sustain those who are left behind.

Services were conducted by the undersigned assisted by Rev. Zaugg and Rev. Younger of the Reformed church. Interment was made in the Wooster Cemetery.

MORTON L. SANDS.

LARMON—John W. Larmon was born in Stonycreek township, Somerset County, Pennsylvania, January 2, 1870, the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jerry S. Larmon. He grew to manhood in his native county, and early in life united with the Brethren church at Listie, Pennsylvania, with which congregation he remained identified throughout his entire life. He was called suddenly from the scenes of mortal ken while seated at the wheel of his car, heart failure being the cause of his demise. Death came on September 9, 1927, at the age of 57 years, 8 months and 7 days.

John W. Larmon and Cora E. Fritz were united in marriage on February 23, 1890, to which union one son, Clarence J., was born. Brother Larmon is survived by the wife and son, an aged father and step-mother, and one sister, besides a large circle of more distant relatives. His sudden and unexpected leave-taking was a severe shock to the family, but their sorrow is surrounded by the halo of the Christian assurance of immortality, and they look forward to a glorious meeting amid the unchanging scenes of eternity. Quiet and modest in his demeanor, Brother Larmon stood squarely for the right and left a fine inheritance of Christian example for the family and community. The esteem in which he was held by his friends and neighbors was attested by the large concourse of people which gathered for the funeral obsequies on Sunday afternoon, September 11, in the church which had long been his church home.

The writer has counted John W. Larmon and his family as particular friends for some twenty-five years, and it was especially trying for him to officiate at the funeral of this dear brother on that account; but the service was rendered even more trying by the fact that his son and the son's family were to have spent Sunday, September 11th, in the writer's home and at services in the Moxham church. Instead it became my sad duty to try to bring comfort and consolation to Brother Larmon's family on that day. So the providences of God change the plans of men.

Fine assistance was rendered at the obsequies by Brethren H. W. Nowak, pastor of the Listie congregation, and W. S. Baker, a former pastor of the Listie congregation. Burial was made in the Husband cemetery, near Somerset. May God temper the winds of affliction to the bereft lives, and may we all be warned of the uncertainty of life's continuity and the necessity of maintaining ourselves in a state of constant readiness to answer death's summons. The funeral discourse for the occasion was based on Heb. 2:15.

DYOLL BELOTE.

BOWMAN—Mary E. Bowman, wife of Elder J. M. Bowman of the Bethlehem Brethren church near Harrisonburg Virginia, departed this life on July 14, 1927, aged 67 years, 7 months and 14 days. She was respected and loved by all who knew her. She was loyal to her church and lived up to her convictions in the faith once delivered unto the saints. Her memory will be cherished for her devoted Christian spirit. Services by the writer, assisted by Elder P. Thompson.
E. B. SHAVER.

ROBBINS—Sarah Robbins, wife of the late Elam Robbins of Warsaw, Indiana, departed this life at the home of her daughter near Pierceton, Indiana on August 15, 1927, at the age of 80 years. Sister Robbins had been a member of the Warsaw Brethren church for many years. She loved her family, her church, her Bible and her Savior, and to these she gave her life's devotion. Among the children are to be found Brother F. E. Robbins, Superintendent of the Warsaw Brethren Bible school, and also Mrs. Fred Vanator, of Canton, Ohio. Her going was peaceful. May the God of all comfort sustain those who suffer the loss, and peace to her until that first resurrection morning when the dead in Christ shall come forth to meet their Lord.

Funeral services were held in the Warsaw Brethren church on August 18, in charge of the family pastor, using for a text the words of St. Paul, "having a desire to depart and to be with Christ; which is far better."

The BRETHREN EVANGELIST

- ONE IS YOUR MASTER AND ALL YE ARE BRETHREN -

I CAME TO THE MASTER

I came to the master at evening
After a busy day;
My heart was burdened and weary,
Too tired even to pray;
But I laid my head on his bosom
And he lifted the burden away.

I came again in the morning,—
His comforting love would cheer,—
I knew he could banish the shadows
And scatter away my fear:
And he drew my head to his bosom
And wiped my gathering tear.

I came to him at the noon time,
Hot, and thirsty, and lone;
There was no one else to comfort,
But the Savior called me his own;
And I rested there on his bosom:
How sweet his love had grown!

Now morning and noontime and evening
I hear his gentle call;
I carry him all my burdens,
Lest under them I should fall;
And he gathers me close to his bosom,
He lifts and carries them all.

Statistics Come Home to Us

Preachers and writers are still expressing concern over the loss in church membership reported in the Christian Herald of April 16, 1927 by Dr. H. K. Carroll. It needs to be said that the loss reported was not a net loss, as some hasty readers seem to have thought; on the contrary there was an actual net gain of 489,556 for 1926. The loss was a loss in ratio of gain, in other words, the gains were not as great in 1926 as they had been during previous years. The annual gains for all denominations for the last seven years were as follows: 1920—754,654; 1921—1,013,296; 1922—784,292; 1923—690,992; 1924—621,630; 1925—984,846; 1926—489,556. The comparative small gains for 1926 is the disturbing factor in the case, the small gains being due in large measure, it was stated, to the sluffing off of inactive and non-supporting members. It is not only the large loss due to inactivity and indifference, but also the readiness and matter-of-fact way in which church leaders set themselves to cut off the "dead wood" that is cause for concern. Why should there be such merciless pruning? Is the church justified in it?

It is said that this cutting off of inactive members was largely prompted by financial motives, that it was an effort to avoid paying financial quotas for non-supporting members to the general interests of the church, whose per capita apportionments have been steadily increasing during recent years. To the extent that this was the case the church was actuated by unworthy motives. It is a most natural thing for church members who pay to object to paying for those who refuse to pay, and if we were to judge by worldly standards, if we were to consider assessments of the government or other man-made organization, we would be compelled to admit that such objection was justified. But the church is built upon a higher foundation; it is measured by nobler standards. It is Christian to do more than is required, to bear with those who are weak, and to rejoice in sacrificial service. It is a narrow, worldly view of duty that a church possesses that will permit it to trim its membership to the smallest number possible in order to get off with the least payment necessary to maintain self-respect.

But many churches would not acknowledge the financial motive to be the principal factor in determining their courage. They insist that such pruning is necessary to efficiency of service and effectiveness of influence. And there is much truth to the claim. A Gideon's band of three hundred men of alertness and courage was more effective than a vast Israelitish army might have been composed of the faint-hearted and the indifferent. And it is in accordance with the plans of the Lord of the church that testings should be made and certain standards maintained. But too often we fail to follow the divinely proposed method of applying the test. Until the church has put forth every effort to win back those who have been alienated, or offended, or become unruly, or indifferent, or unspiritual, or for any other reason have ceased to be an asset to the church, it has no Christian justification in removing their names from the roll. Until a church has faithfully obeyed Matthew 18, it has not been able to wash its hands of responsibility for the fate of its inactive and unworthy members. It is true that each member owes the church his loyalty and support, but the church owes the member much also. To use a figure, the church is a fold for the protection and nurture of the sheep and the flock must be shepherded. The shepherds or caretakers of the sheep must not be satisfied when even so large a number as the ninety and nine are safe and guarded, he must go in search for the one lost and straying sheep. The restoration of those who have fallen from grace is as much a part of the church's task and responsibility as the spiritual culture of the faithful, or the conversion of those who have never accepted divine grace. This responsibility has been too much neglected; the church has not been enough concerned about the welfare of the unfaithful and indifferent; it has been too ready to abandon him and leave him to his fate. It is a serious thing to cut an indifferent and even an unworthy member off from fellowship with the church, and until pastors and deacons have gone the limit of trying to save such an one excommunication is unjustifiable.

This tendency to apply the pruning axe to our own church rolls so readily and freely, and with such little ado about it, has reacted against us. It has begun to undermine our strength and to rebound to our discredit, giving us an undeservedly poor showing before the world. We have fallen into the easy way of saying that "numbers don't count", because at some time in the past we have experienced a reaction against a certain type of evangelistic meetings where numbers were about all that did count. Of course numbers do count; we are deceiving ourselves when we say they do not. The kingdom of God is waiting for numbers—numbers of course who are truly Christian, but numbers nevertheless. Every church's aim should be numbers, not to the neglect of genuine conversion and spiritual obedience, but yet vastly larger numbers for whom Christ died.

But in our becoming too indifferent about numbers our sense of the worth of the individual has become dulled and our evangelistic passion has lost some of its intensity. We cannot afford to allow this to continue; it tends toward weakness in numbers and power. The very diminishing of the church's recorded gains is our sufficient warning. Our own denominational statistics are being thrust back at us as a message and warning to our hearts. The Department of Commerce of Washington, D. C., has just released its decennial religious census report, which shows the present status of the Brethren church, so far as is possible with the figures it was able to secure. The report shows a respectable growth, all things considered. But it is not what it might have been if we had not so generally fallen in with the common faults of the Protestant churches of America. We append the government's report for your consideration. Does it do us justice? If not, why not? And furthermore, why has not our actual growth been greater during the last decade?

The Department of Commerce announces that, according to the returns received, there were in the United States 174 churches of the Brethren Church (Progressive Dunkers) in 1926, with 26,026 members, as compared with 201 churches and 24,060 members in 1916. The total expenditures in 1926, as reported by 166 churches, amounted to $523,681, including $447,977 for current expenses and improvements and $75,704 for benevolences, missions, etc. The total expenditures reported in 1916 by 185 churches were $204,562.

The value of church property (including church edifices, furniture, etc., but not including parsonages), as reported by 166 churches for 1926, was $2,274,064, which may be compared with $896,725 reported by 184 churches in 1916.

Of the 174 churches reporting in 1926, 53 were located in urban territory (incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more), and 121 were in rural areas. Of the total membership, 12,089 were in the urban churches and 13,937 in the rural churches; and of the total expenditures 49 urban churches reported $307,996 and 117 rural churches, $215,685. The value of church property reported by 48 urban churches was $1,459,500 and that reported by 118 rural churches was $814,564.

Sunday schools were reported by 160 Churches of the Brethren Church (Progressive Dunkers) in 1926, with 2,445 officers and teachers and 22,917 scholars. The number of officers and teachers in the Sunday schools as reported for 1916 was 2,402 and the number of scholars, 23,728.

The more important data for the churches of the Brethren Church (Progressive Dunkers) are shown by states in the table below. All figures for 1926 are preliminary and subject to correction.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Remember Laymen's Day the Second Sunday in October, or the earliest convenient Sunday thereafter.

Brother Wm. H. Schaffer, pastor of the entertaining church of the Mid-west district conference, tells members of that district how to reach Hamlin, Kansas, the place of meeting on October 11 to 13.

Too late for insertion in the "Announcement" department we received notice of the communion service to be held at West Alexandria, Ohio on Sunday evening, October 9th, beginning at 7:30 P. M. Brother W. R. Deeter, the pastor, invites neighboring Brethren to enjoy this feast of love with them.

Brother W. S. Crick, pastor of the Bedford County circuit, in Pennsylvania, reports a successful evangelistic campaign which he himself conducted recently in the Yellow Creek congregation, where eleven souls were added unto the church, ten making confession of the Lord Jesus for the first time.

In this issue is to be found a suggestive program for Laymen's Day prepared by an authorized committee, J. E. Stookey and Prof. C. L. Anspach, both of Ashland. Conditions hindered the committee from getting the program out sooner but we trust it will yet be of help to many of those observing the special day. And the day ought to be widely observed. The object is worthy and the laymen are the proper ones to promote such an undertaking.

Dr. W. S. Bell's Endowment Campaign report tells of the gift of the church of Flora, Indiana, which has been a very loyal group in every good work. Brother F. G. Coleman is the capable pastor of this church, and ministers not only to the people of his parish but to the aged occupants of the Brethren Home, which is located at that place. Flora's gift for endowment was $1,213.81, which brings the present total of this campaign to $124,042.18.

Brother Herbert H. Tay, pastor of the church at La Verne, California, writes of a different but very successful evangelistic campaign in his church. For three months the work continued with an evangelistic service each Sunday evening, and personal work and special musical featuring the campaign. The Sunday school has made a remarkable growth during the last year and during the five years just closed it has doubled in membership. Two more volunteers are preparing to be added to the church's enviable list of missionaries.

President E. E. Jacobs gives us another installment of College News in which, among other items, he shows the steady progress the school has made in attendance during recent years. It is nearing the three hundred mark, which is the capacity of the school. He also tells of having attended the funeral of Dr. Bell's wife, whose decease was reported in last week's issue. It shows a praiseworthy courage and devotion to the task at hand that Brother Bell, notwithstanding his great sorrow, is determined to continue to press his campaign without interruption. The Evangelist calls again for those who pray to bear up Dr. Bell to the throne of grace that God may mightily strengthen him for his task.

A letter from the Indiana Mission Board to the churches of that district pleads for a more loyal support of the mission work of that district. Though the latter failed to reach us for publication before the Indiana conference, it is still timely inasmuch as it appears that the need for such an appeal is not likely to end with conference. The Evangelist would like to add a word of emphasis as to the importance of the support of district missions. The Indiana Brethren, with such promising mission churches making such commendable progress, ought to be on the toe in their support.

An interesting letter is received from Brother Arthur Snider, pastor of the church at Mathias, West Virginia, where Dr. Bame recently conducted a successful evangelistic campaign, resulting in an addition to the church of twenty-two, all but one coming by baptism. The pastor speaks the appreciation of the congregation and community of the services of Brother and Sister Bame, the latter having conducted with much success each morning a meeting for children. A meeting is also reported for Kinsey's Run church, which is a part of the Mathias congregation. At this place Brother G. W. Chambers was the evangelist and was used in bringing a visible victory to the number of twelve souls added to the church, and this in the face of certain handicaps on the field. Thus thirty-four are added to the congregation by means of these two campaigns and the pastor says there are indications of more coming.

Brother I. D. Bowman writes of his campaign at Gatewood congregation, near Oak Hill, West Virginia, where, notwithstanding hindrances, three were added unto the church. This was the fifth meeting conducted by Brother Bowman at this place, which fact speaks for itself of the high regard of these people for his services. The pastor of this congregation is said to be a splendid young minister of the Church of the Brethren, who is serving this church in connection with one of his own denomination. It is a happy combination, which is not unique by any means, but could well be encouraged in other places, with the same arrangement or with conditions reversed, much to the advantage of the cause of Brethrenism.

Is the Need of Temperance Instruction Past?

By Lawrence C. Ridenour

The other day I overheard a conversation between two men of the shop where I am employed. They were discussing the prohibition law. Both men were anti-prohibitionists. One of them made this remark, "Too many people now-a-days," referring to prohibitionists, "want to mind other people's business." It was said in the spirit of aversive criticism and in a forceful tone of sarcasm for the benefit of my own ears. It is needless to say that my views and theirs were not then nor now altogether harmonious.

I pondered this remark as I went to working and found myself more and more agreeable to what they had said but viewing it from a different angle. They had disclosed a truth and stressed a fact which, I suppose, we seldom think of. What impressed me most about it, was how unappreciative many of us are of the essential and imperative need of having others to mind our business. It is comforting to know that some one, day and night, is protecting me with my family and a few earthly possessions from harm, accidental or otherwise, as well as to guard my right to pursue happiness according to the dictates of my conscience. I am quite sure no right minded, intelligent, and good intentioned person would want all governmental restraint and all ordinances, imperfect as they may be, withdrawn for a single day. Our safety and well-being are made possible by others who are responsible for ministering such benefits and thereby assist us in minding our business.

In the preamble of our Constitution of the United States of America assertion is made to one of its purposes as being that of securing the blessings of liberty to both ourselves and our posterity. Certainly one cannot see much liberty for our children and our children's children, if they are to be the victims of a habit that demoralizes, weakens and destroys for no other reason than to satisfy the appetites of the unscrupulous and undisciplined element of society and to make possible selfish profiteering. Posterity includes our own children and they are the people of the future. If our fundamental law provides that they are to be regarded on equal terms with ourselves then it is our sacred obligation to mind that part of their business for it is upon us that they are dependent for the best conditions possible for an existence that is yet in their future.

Personally I do not believe the need of temperance instruction is past. I have always had a conviction which I believe is in no wise strange to thousands of others, namely, that the greatest amount of good from prohibition or temperance will accrue to our boys and girls. I believe it was this conviction that won more votes against the liquor traffic than any other conviction or argument or reason for its abolishment. And it is now for their sakes that temperance instruction should be given. It is largely for their need that it is needed. They should be taught temperance because it is commendable as a course of conduct according to reason and according to the counsels of the Divine Word of God. Let it be understood that in this article we are not referring so much to temperance in that larger sense which controls all the appetites and passions of the flesh and so governs as to avoid excesses in all things useful, but that we are referring to temperance particularly as the practice of total abstinence from the use of intoxicating drinks as a beverage. This is the kind of temperance that will help them to practice "safety first" in these days of bootlegging hazards.

There was a time when perhaps the subject of temperance was more popular and attractive. During those pre-prohibition years when temperance lectures, temperance rallies and public elections for prohibition kept alive the great contest, there was no lack of interest. But today the situation is different. Just because we have now what was so long sought for, namely, prohibition (statutory at least) we ought not become negligent or we will be inconsistent, and possibly sorry later on.

Temperance as a subject for instruction should not have been automatically dismissed from our minds upon the adoption of prohibition, nor should we now continue to leave it out of our thought and out of our program. There are many evidences of the need of instruction in temperance, and not only so, but in law observance as well. Every day we read of many arrests because of drunkenness or drinking, or because of trafficking in intoxicating liquor. The growing lawlessness with regard to prohibition indicates a sore need for instruction along this line.

Some say that the subject of temperance is so old it has lost its interest and that we have already heard enough to last a life time. It may be true for some. But we all remember so well the disastrous effects of drink? How about the young people who have grown up since the saloon was abolished? They have heard very little of the story and have very little understanding of the ravages of the liquor traffic. Besides adults soon forget and need to hear the story often repeated. And those who have never seen nor experienced the evil of drink, are more in need of the repetition. It takes time and oft telling to make a deep impression and to bring conviction. The reason why many of the youth are indifferent about temperance and take prohibition as a joke is that they have not been convinced, they have not been properly taught, they have not been made to understand the ruin that intemperance brings about. They have heard feeble remarks now and then, but no effort has been put forth to really convince them, to prove the proposition to them and to make them feel strongly about it. They will very widely accept temperance as a desirable and right policy and prohibition as just and legitimate restriction of the appetites of man if by repeated and effective instruction they are convinced and imbued with the proper attitude of mind.

Those who say temperance is not interesting because it is old, should remember that it is not the fact of being old and familiar that makes a subject disinteresting, but the way it is presented. In the store windows of our business houses we find articles displayed that have been on the market for many years, even generations. Those articles have been continually revised and improved, but they are essentially the same and for the same purpose. We do not complain because the merchants continue to display and try to sell these articles. Their show windows are not considered stale and uninteresting because of these articles. On the contrary people are continually attracted by them because of the fresh and novel methods of display. The same may be true of the presentation of temperance truth. It is not dull and uninteresting because of the subject, but because of the careless manner of its presentation. It may be made intensely interesting and impressive if thought and effort are put to it. The show window tactics which causes sales of articles because attractive displays are needed in the temperance cause. In many and varied ways we need temperance instruction. The time for it is not past.

The Rural Church and the Community

By Floyd Sibert

Fourth Installment

WAYS IN WHICH THE RURAL CHURCH MAY OVERCOME HER DIFFICULTIES

We have shown that the church is not a luxury of civilization but that it is a necessity in the expanding moral and spiritual horizon of humanity. Hence the only questions to be really faced are these: Is the church, as it now exists and seeks to function, livingly geared into the total life of the people? Is it adjusted to their economic, intellectual and moral life? The answer, as we have shown in part, is "no." Furthermore, it never will be until the rural population and rural workers really see the community as a whole. We mean by this that the country work has ceased to challenge workers because folks are not seeing it as it is. Both ministers and churches must sense the largeness of their task. The privilege of serving 32,000,000 of farm folk and 39,000,000 town people ought to make the rural field large in the eyes of all. The fact that, as a place of children, the country is, "the conservator of the head waters of religion", ought to impart a thrill to the country workers.

But in city and country life there seems to be a fixed idea that service to the country is an inferior one. Country people are largely to blame. They have always suffered from an inferiority complex, which underevaluates rural life, institutions and people. The trend just now is to make farming a secondary occupation. Young people who are preparing for work in our colleges are led to believe and often say "a country parish is a trip to purgatory", or "to have my name appear in the list of missionary pastors amounts to political suicide." First of all these views must be righted. Sentiment must be changed. I know of no better remedy for this situation than the hope I cherish in my own heart that some school of education will become "really educated" and include within its walls a rural seminary that will prepare men for rural work. One that will follow up the hero of the country side with literature and support in much the same way that the governmental experimental station informs and supports the agricultural worker and the farmer.

But since the church has not yet found a seminary with a heart big enough to include a rural workers' preparatory school, what can we do on the field now? The first and best move is to get a thorough vision of the field through surveys and parish maps. Through this survey you will be able to ascertain something of the names of people and their religious affiliation, the scope of church influence, something of the intellectual life of church and community, the people's choice of amusements, social life of the people, health conditions, vocation and business of people, and a knowledge of any other special condition that might arise in the community. Enough has been stated already to show that the first step in making an inclusive programme for the local church—indeed the basis for all the rest of the programme, is a careful, continuous, cumulative study of the whole situation to determine what needs to be done and the resources available to do it. A good text with which to set forth the value of the survey and programme of the church is, Philippians 4:11, "I have learned, in whatsoever state I find myself therewith to be content"; another version reads, "—in whatsoever condition I find myself, to meet the situation." Yes, that is it: to study, to analyze the situation and meet it with a solution.

Under the "Task of the Rural Church", we have already set forth the idea of making the church the center of the community force. To do this the church must have a definite programme. This programme would include Evangelism, Missions, Religious Education and Community service. The first two need no explanation. The third although relatively new may be made essential by solving just such problems as we are working on here. The last is also a new part of the programme, but it is not the least important one. It has to do with such questions as, What does the community need done that the church can directly do? What does it need to have done that members of the church as individuals or leaders of groups can do? What needs to be done through the creation of agencies other than the church to do it? In what way can the church cooperate with existing agencies and forces to do things that are not exclusively the function of the church? These questions should be answered in part by the survey. No stereotyped programme can be propounded for the answers to these questions. A community service committee should work out a programme.

Let me introduce briefly some methods that have been successfully used. Paul H. Sanders, a man of vision and power, entered a church consisting of 12 women and one man and within two years had enlisted all of the leading men of the community. Here is his testimony: "I now have a men's organization that is really doing things. It is not organized for the church alone but for the entire community. The whole community revolves around the church. They are now planning on building a model home, community house and setting up a community improvement plan. He also has a women's federation with spiritual dominance, a young people's discussion group, vacation Bible school and other organizations that work along the same lines. Rev. O. C. Starn seems to accomplish the feat by a Religious Education Association that includes both community and recreational interests. There is no doubt but that we must recognize this phase of Christian activity and include it in our church programme. Not that we should minimize the spiritual side but rather that we give the spirit a chance to work in a larger field. We of today are measuring the church by OUR conception of an organization rather than by what Christ said it should be and by what he intended that it should do. Would any one light a candle and call it the sun? Or hold up an umbrella and call it the firmament? No, because science has enlarged his conception of these planets. Yet there are countless church members whose conception of a church and its work extend no further than the four walls of stone or wood with few bowed heads inside them once a week. Brethren, don't forget that God is interested in the whole community. David R. Piper suggests the neighborhood membership plan. This plan is really the application of the Golden Rule to rural church membership. He argues that since we cannot have a church of every denomination represented in a community that we should make provision for members of every denomination. This would call for an extra membership list known as the neighborhood activity membership. Rev. T. Campbelle, of Beacon Falls, Connecticut, gave his men a chance to do practical Christian work and a Bible class of 135 was the result.

By a careful study of these specific examples and with due consideration to other authoritative writers upon the subject, such as Roads, Butterfield and Mills, we are convinced that if the rural church is to live and prosper it must become the center of the community force. It must come out from among them and be a beacon light set on a hill in the center of the community beckoning men to it and throwing out the lifeline to those who are drifting toward the falls. In other words the rural church must change her methods, so that, by an every-member-work programme she shall become an indispensable organization of the community. To quote Roads, "The local church is both the beginning and the finishing workshop of Christianity. It is the point of contact with the individual soul, the place where the actual evangelizing, teaching and training of men must be done. It is the source of supplies for all of Christ's work, whether men, money or spiritual power. It should be the strongest and most effective of the wheels within wheels of organized Christianity.... If a general movement for organizing in a modern way the whole local church can be started and given the enthusiasm of the present Sunday school movement, the local church can be developed into a forceful organism.... The modern organizing spirit and practical methods, which have made Christian civilization, will at last ... get into the church and she, who has accomplished wonders of accession to discipleship and influence with small fractions at work, will sweep the world when all her resources are engaged.

This is supremely important in rural christendom where the undeveloped condition is sores and yet where so large a majority of the whole church lives. Though the church there is first as the social center, and most prominent of buildings it is closed all of the week except for a few hours. It touches usually only the spiritual side of man's nature and that partially and unsympathetically. It lacks the push of business, and the interest of all other intellectual activities, though it deals with the profoundest problems of man's life from the most fascinating book of the world."

In his book the church is not only recognized as the greatest and most essential force in the social life of the community but to him it is the central force. The theory then for making the rural church function as a community serving church is to rejuvenate this power and send out newly polished live wires to every part of the community's activity.

But some object that the rural field lacks the necessary man power. They say that the country is sparsely settled. To this we answer that the country contains three-fifths of the population, and their proportion of churches is even greater. Ten years ago in the mind of the public, electrical power for country use was an impossibility. Today the magnetic fingers of electricity are knocking at the door of every farm house. Dare we say that there is less possibility for the transmission of Christian power, through contact with personality, than there is for the transmission of electrical power by means of copper and wood? Organize the dynamo (church) at the center so that she generates power (influence of the Holy Spirit in the hearts of men) and the trick is done. She will charge the universe with throbbing Christian force. Some say we don't need more organization. If that is true then we need reorganization. The dynamo needs to be reassembled and the grounded wires need to be welded into position by the burning love of Christ and Christian fellowship. We don't need a new power. We do need to eliminate the resistance found in the terminals of the rural church. When we accomplish this there will be power, a plenty and it will operate if the terminals are intact.

To the Music Teacher

By C. F. Yoder

With love and truth and beauty God formed the nascent earth,
And the wonderful earth mother to her mountain sons gave birth.
And the mountains gave the forests and the precious mines beneath,
And instruments were fashioned for the songs God would bequeath.
Not the songs that stars in glory sang upon creation's morn,
But the new creation's story that with lowly Christ was born.
Then God called for sons to sing it and the saved of earth came forth,
In one joyful choir uniting East and West and South and North.
Thus were humans joined with Heaven in the music of the spheres,
In the hallelujah chorus of the love that crowns the years.
Crowns the years with endless glory, thrills the lifeless dust to song, Crowns the race with life eternal, thrills the whole celestial throng.
Happy he to whom is given eyes to see and ears to hear,
Hands to form the chords of Heaven and to impart their wondrous cheer.
Happy pupil, happy teacher, who ascend the heavenly stair;
Each new scale of joy receiving and transmitting to the air.
Happy world when once it worships only God, the source of joy,
And its anthems are the praises that the heavenly hosts employ.

The Sympathetic Touch

By H. H. Smith

The power that one human being has to influence another for good or for evil is one of the most interesting and far-reaching experiences of life. Weak and unsteady wills, under severe test, have been made strong through the power of a friendly word or a sympathetic touch. Marion Lawrence, the great Sunday school worker, in one of his books, relates the following incident in connection with the battle of El Caney during the Spanish-American War:

"As they were entering into battle, a young, smooth-faced, girlish-looking boy about 18 years of age became frightened, and throwing himself upon the ground began to cry like a child. His comrades were ashamed of him. Some of them told him he was a disgrace to the uniform he wore, and to the company he was in. He confessed it was so, but said he could not help it. General Chaffee came riding along at that time with the great responsibility of that battle upon him; his keen eye, however, observed the boy. He dismounted and asked the boy what was the trouble. The boy plainly told him that he was afraid. The great general placed his hand upon his shoulder saying, 'Look here, my lad, I see a good soldier buttoned up in that jacket. Get up and take your gun and fall in line with the other boys, they'll not be ashamed of you when the sun goes down.' The boy turned and took the general by the hand and thanked him for his word of sympathy, then seized his gun, found his place, and held it, too. It is said when the battle was over this boy was found still firing, using but one arm, the other one being disabled by a bullet in the shoulder. It was the word of sympathy that saved him."

The sympathetic touch has also been the means of saving thousands from lives of sin and vice. When John B. Gough lay drunk in a gutter, a good man, on his way to a temperance lecture, stopped, laid his hand upon the poor drunkard's shoulder, and said, "Mr. Gough, I believe," and urged him to go with him to the lecture. Gough went, signed the temperance pledge at the close of the lecture, and became a sober man and a most enthusiastic temperance worker.

Relating an account of his reformation, Gough said that he had sunk so low that he felt he would gladly thank the dog that would lick his hand, but here was a fellow-man who gently laid his hand upon his shoulder as he lay in the gutter drunk and called him "Mr. Gough." It aroused the latent manhood within him, brought him to himself, and he became perhaps the greatest temperance orator our country has known.

Even the hardened criminal is sometimes reformed by the sympathetic touch. The Seventh Earl of Shaftesbury, who was a philanthropist and social reformer of renown, once related the following incident: "The chaplain of a jail sent to me a young man who was just out of prison for burglary, hoping I might say something to encourage him in his professed desire for a better life. He had seemed incorrigible, having been in jail twenty-two times. Rather a formidable visitor for a private interview! Sometime afterwards the chaplain told me the young man was really reformed, and had related the interview, and added, 'But it was this that broke me down—he slapped me on the shoulder and said, "Jack, we'll make a man of you yet."'"

In the hour of deep anguish and distress the touch of the human hand seems almost divine. "Abraham Lincoln, on visiting a military hospital," says a writer, "stood at the bedside of a Vermont boy about sixteen years of age who was mortally wounded. Taking the dying boy's thin, white hand in his own, the President said in a tender tone: 'Well, my boy, what can I do for you?' The young fellow looked up into the President's kindly face and asked: 'Won't you write to my mother for me?' 'That I will,' answered Mr. Lincoln. When it was finished, he rose, saying: 'I will post this as soon as I get back to my office. Now is there anything else that I can do for you?' the boy looked up appealingly to the President. 'Won't you stay with me?' he asked. 'I do want to hold on to your hand.' Mr. Lincoln at once perceived the lad's meaning. The appeal was too strong for him to resist, so he sat down by his side and took hold of his hand. For two hours the President sat there as patiently as though he had been the boy's father. When the end came, he bent over and folded the thin hands over his breast. As he did so he burst into tears."

While Christ could have healed the afflicted without touching them, he knew the power of the sympathetic touch, and frequently laid his hand upon those whom he could heal. This manifestation of his sympathy was also an aid to their faith. When he healed the leper, "He put forth his hand and touched him." When he healed Peter's wife's mother, "He touched her hand and the fever left her." Of the healing of the blind man, we read: "Then touched he their eyes, saying, According to your faith be it unto you." At the transfiguration, when the disciples fell on their faces, "Jesus touched them and said, 'Arise, and be not afraid.'"

A single word, because of the heartfelt sympathy and brotherly love back of it, may be as effective as the friendly grasp of the hand, and carry with it all the force of a sympathetic touch. When the great Russian philanthropist, Tolstoi, met a beggar in Moscow during the time of the famine, and the man said, "For the love of God, give me a few kopecks with which to get bread for my starving family," Tolstoi said, "I am sorry, my brother, but I do not have a single kopeck about me." The man's face became radiant, and he exclaimed: "You have given me more than I asked for. I asked for a few coins, and you have called me brother."

THE END OF THE ROAD

What shall I find at the end of the road—the road where the sunset lies?

Will there be more of joy and less of pain, under those beckoning skies?

Will the colors deepen as I draw near, or will they fade into gray?

For the road is long and the road is strange, that I travel day by day.

What shall I find at the end of the road when I've said my last good-by?

When I hear from far-off the silent call—the call to souls who die,

What shall I find at the end of the road—when the last long mile I've trod?

Find—I shall find all I have prized on earth, for my heart's love, home—and God.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Early Christian and the Modern

By Dr. Charles M. Sheldon

TEXT: That Christ may dwell in your hearts by Faith.—Ephesians 3:17.

The story of early Christianity is fascinating on account of the picture drawn of a type of a new human being. The advent of Jesus Christ brought into history a standard of human conduct that was unlike anything ever known. Christians were a distinct group of people, not seen before in the pagan world. It is worth while therefore to consider the characteristics of this group, and to compare the early type of Christian with the modern.

The Christians of the first century were tremendously caught up by their faith in the Resurrection. Christianity would never have started in its march across the centuries if Christ had not risen from the dead. The Christian disciples believed with exuberant faith that the rising of Jesus meant their own personal resurrection. That faith made them indifferent to martyrdom. In "Quo Vadis," the crazy Nero sees a group of Christian martyrs kneeling on the bloody sand in the Colosseum, singing a hymn, undaunted by the horrors around them, and he says, "They see something! What is it?" And the answer came from one who knew, "They see the Resurrection!"

Yes, the Resurrection was the starting-point of their faith in the eternal life. They did not question its reality; they did not debate it; they did not philosophize about it. They accepted it as the most hopeful fact of their lives, and it gave to them constant joy and the most profound satisfaction.

Does the modern Christian have that enthusiasm? If the members of our churches knew that next Sunday they would be arrested as they go home from church, thrust into prison and next day put to death simply because they professed to be Christians, would they go gladly to death, absolutely confident in another life, and glad to die for their love of him who had given them all? It is a fair question to ask as we compare the early Christian with the modern.

The early Christian gave to Jesus Christ, a place of pre-eminence in his thought that was without a parallel in the pagan world. Christ for the early Christian was above all authority and power. As the writer to the members of the church in Ephesus says, "When he (that is, God), raised Christ from the dead and made him to sit in the heavenly places, far above all rule and authority and power and dominion, and every name that is named, not only in this world, but also in that which is to come: and he put all things in subjection under his feet, and gave him to be head over all things in the church, which is his body, the fulness of him that filleth all in all."

Language could not express in stronger terms the tremendous place that Jesus had in the mind of the early Christian. He was the real ruler of every part of life. He was above Caesar and above every form of human government. That did not mean that the early Christian disobeyed government. The early Christian was a law-abiding citizen always. But it meant that in his thought there was no person in all the world so great as his Savior!

Which raises the proper question: Who is the hero for the modern Christian? Who is the greatest of all in the mind of the young man of today, yes, of many who are members of churches, and who exalt base-ball players and football players and even motion-picture actors to high places as heroes? It is a fair question for every modern Christian to ask of himself, "Who is my hero? Is it the physical athlete? Is it the scientist? Is it the man of success?" Show me the Christian who so exalts Christ that he is the hero of every part of life, and I will show you a Christian who approaches the type of the first Christians, to whom Jesus Christ was all and in all.

We in this age have in many ways robbed Christ of his regal character. We have degraded him and taken him down from his place of authority. We have even sometimes within the church questioned his authority to rule our conduct and said that his teaching was not practical, that we could not imitate his example. It is time that we put him back where he belongs, into the place of supreme power of the springs of conduct, and exalted him to the place where he and he alone shall rule the affairs of life. That preeminence that was his in the early days of Christianity was one of the greatest reasons why paganism fell before a faith that would not permit any rule greater than the rule of spiritual forces against material.

The early Christian was a type of faith in a community life. At the very beginning of Christianity, even the physical possessions of the disciples were held in common. That practice passed away with the rapid spread of the Christian faith and for economic reasons. But the illustration still remained, and must remain for all time as a principle of the Christian life. That is, with the Christian there can not be classes or divisions made on the basis of racial or national feeling. Christians were all of "the household of the faith." They were, of necessity, all of the same family. As the writer to the Colossians says: "Where there can not be Greek and Jew, circumcision and uncircumcision, barbarian, Scythian, bondman, freeman; but Christ is all and in all!"

Could there be a clearer definition of a perfect type of human? Here is the first gleam of international citizenship. Even in our churches today there are members who do not believe that international friendship is either possible or required. A member of a large church said to me only a few days ago: "All this talk about brotherhood is sham and can not ever be realized. The nations are too much unlike. They can never understand one another. And it was not meant that they should live together." That from a modern Christian! Does it sound strange to the ears of the early Christian who was taught to believe in the "household of the faith?"

Verily, it takes a long time to learn the lesson that "God hath made of one blood all nations." Yet the early Christian accepted that teaching and lived up to it with a wonderful and practical unanimity, and the modern Christian will not get far with a warless world until he accepts that teaching in all its fulness of meaning, and begins to put it into practical use.

The early Christian had a personal experience that many modern Christians do not even profess to have. It is doubtful if in the early church a disciple would be received into membership unless he could give satisfactory evidence that he had taken the Savior into his heart. "That Christ may dwell in your hearts by faith." The whole genius of the Christian life centered about the fact that for the individual, he had had an experience of forgiveness of sins and a heart-to-heart knowledge of his Redeemer that was the most wonderful and personal experience he had ever had.

How about the modern Christian? A fellow pastor said to me only a short time ago: "I am ashamed to say that I take people into my church who, so far as their conduct goes, give no evidence of ever having been born again. They never come to the prayer meeting; they are not members of the Bible school; they do not belong to the missionary society; in their living they show no difference that I can see from men who never joined a church at all. My church is full of 'nominal' members who have joined because they have thought it would help their business or their social standing, or for superficial reasons, none of which would have gained them an entrance into the early church."

Is this lack of a personal heart faith in Christ a large answer to the question why we do not have more spiritual power in our modern Christianity? Is it the reason for apathy and indifference, and the common acceptance of the charge that people outside the church are as good as those within? The early Christian was a "marked" man in the pagan world. He was different from the un-Christian or non-Christian man. He was known in the community as a believer. Is the modern Christian so known? Is the modern Christian different from the man of the world? And is it the fault of the ministry that, in its eagerness to get men into the church, it accepts as disciples those who have never really had any experience of a personal kind to fit them for membership in the greatest of all human societies?

Christianity began as an emotional religion. It felt more than it argued. It had more heart than cold intellect. Is it not true that in many of our churches there is a cold and formal acceptance of religious faith that kills the spontaneity and exuberance of the early church life? Traced to its source, we find that the reason for the marvelous spread of Christianity was the character of those who loved Jesus Christ with a passion that could not be denied.

It was the wonder of the pagan world as it looked at the people who professed the Christian life. They were the people who "turned the world upside down," and it was because they had been, first of all, turned completely around from lives of sin into lives of righteousness. They stood out as lights in the pagan gloom, and it was the heart religion that conquered the material world and turned its ways toward heaven.

Modern Christianity will never conquer the modern world until it has a heart faith, a personal experience, an emotional enthusiasm that is linked with perfect reason, similar to that which marked the early disciples.

Would to God that all the members of all our churches might have a heart experience in the faith! Then and then only shall the church triumph over the world, and bring it to the feet of its one true and only Lord.—Selected.

SUDDEN PRAYER

I have a thousand times tested the efficacy of sudden prayer in moments of difficulty, when confronted with a little temptation, when overwhelmed with irritation, before an anxious interview, before writing a difficult passage. How often has the temptation floated away, the irritation mastered itself, the right word has been said, the right sentence written! To do all we are capable of, and then to commit the matter to the hand of the Father, that is the best that we can do—Arthur C. Benson.

MONDAY

OUR BEST INVESTMENTS—Luke 19:16-24. "Thou shouldst have put my money to the bank that at my coming I should have received mine own with usury." There are two perils to which we are exposed. First, that we shall imagine that we have little or no endowment and fail to make any investment of our lives. Second, that when inspecting our talents, we shall overlook our finest treasures and so make an unworthy investment.

TUESDAY

THE SOUL'S SUBLIME MOMENTS—2 Cor. 12:1-6. "He was caught up into Paradise and heard unspeakable words." Paul's experience in the third heaven was one of the soul's overtones. His hearing was not of the ears but of the soul, and his seeing was spiritual. What he heard and saw was beyond expression. Every Christian life has its great moments of uplift, its supernal experiences. They come out of much prayer, unwavering faith and concentration upon spiritual things.

WEDNESDAY

SANCTIFIED MEMORY—2 Tim. 2:8-14. "Remember that Jesus Christ of the seed of David was raised from the dead according to my gospel." Memory brings back the experiences and faces of the past. It is a most beneficent gift and brings much satisfaction, especially to the aged. A part of the reward of righteous living is the memory of virtuous deeds. Moreover memory of God's mercy is an incentive to goodness. It vitalizes faith, stimulates courage and inspires to service.

THURSDAY

DOING THE IMPOSSIBLE—Phil. 4:8-13. "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me." David James Burrell once said, "I am a cipher, but God is the great Unit. When that Unit is put before a cipher you have the beginning of the decimal system of the universe." Paul said, "Of mine own self I can do nothing", but in Christ he was able to take pleasure even in infirmities. To hold self steady in spiritual truth, in pure thinking and in holy living is an impossible task humanly speaking, but it can be done in the strength of Christ.

FRIDAY

A WORTHY DESIRE—Rom. 1:8-12. "For I long to see you that I may impart unto you some spiritual gift to the end that ye may be established." That is the heart of the great missionary enterprise. The Christian has something to bestow that is of infinite value—the grace of God as revealed in Christ Jesus.

SATURDAY

MY WORK—Isa. 49:1-4. "My work is with God." Work is the responsibility of the Christian in this life and it will be the joy of the saint in the life that is to come. "My work is with God", and with God there is always work to be done. Work is a blessing to man, not a curse. Jesus said, "My Father worketh hitherto and I work." And we shall rejoice in the glorious future when we shall see him face to face, not in sitting in "golden chairs", but in serving God before his throne day and night in his temple.

SUNDAY

GAIN FROM LOSS—2 Cor. 12:1-10. "There was given me a thorn in the flesh lest I should be exalted above measure." A student became suddenly blind and invented the embossed type so that the blind everywhere might read. His loss resulted in the gain of many. In Christ Jesus crosses are changed to crowns, huts into palaces, weakness and helplessness into strength and power, and defeat into glorious victory.—G. S. B.

Lesson Poem

"This moment if you bend to catch the word,
A nobler thing than man has ever said,
Along the currents of God's thought is sped;
And he who speaks bravely must be heard.
This hour a grander work awaits your hands
Than any written in the treasured past:
Lay to the oar! the tide runs fast, runs fast—
Life's possibilities are yet unspanned."

Introduction

The date was 876 B. C. The king of Syria is Ben-hadad II, who besieges Samaria, but is twice defeated and forms an alliance with Ahab; denounced by a prophet, 1 K 20:13, 28. Now comes the harrowing story of Naboth's vineyard.

Although the city of Samaria was the capital of his kingdom, Ahab had a palace at Jezreel, where he resided during part of the year. This palace was situated on the heights at the western extremity of Mt.
Gilboa, on the eastern borders of the plain of Esdraelon, about 25 miles north of Samaria. One day it struck Ahab that the garden at this place would be greatly improved by an enlargement which would take in an adjoining vineyard. He therefore caused application to be made to the owner, whose name was Naboth; but Naboth, strong in his indefeasible right of property declined, somewhat bluntly it seems, to part with it.—Kitto.

Covetousness

(From Illustrated Quarterly)

Covetousness (1) is not a mere desire for more; for that desire, in some form, is ever appealed to in the Bible, and is the root of all civilization and progress. (2) Cov-etousness is the overstrong desire for more, uncontrolled by reason or conscience, or the word of God—a desire that is willing to gain for itself (a) at the expense of others,
(b) at the expense of higher and better things. It is not coveting to desire a house, but to desire it so as to deprive our neighbor of it, or to gain it by wrong-doing or neglect of duty. All true gains, all true increase, are such as benefit both parties and the community in general.

The Evil of Covetousness

Covetousness is a root of all evil. (1) Crimes, selfishness, oppressions, wrongs of all kinds, grow from this root. It stands in the way of all progress, all elevation of man, (2) It is the source of all evils to the covetous person; it is selfish; it smothers every noble feeling and aspiration; it quenches every hope of religion. "Poverty is the want of much", says Publius Syrus;
"but avarice is the want of everything." (3)
It grows worse and worse. It is in-satiableness. It is like drinking the salt waters of the sea, which only increase the thirst; or climbing higher, which only enlarges the horizon of the desires. (4) Covetousness is idolatry (Col. 3:5), and no idolater can enter the kingdom of heaven. It puts things in place of God—gold, fine houses, fine clothes, land, fame, place and power. The covetous man makes these the first aim in life, rather than to do the will of God. This is the fundamental harm of covetousness, its reversal of the true order of interest and of human pursuit. Contentment, on the other hand, gladly and humbly takes life as God sends it, knowing that his will and ways are best for his creatures. Contentment therefore is an essential Christian grace, and the discontented are wrong at the very heart of their lives.

Much of the sin and danger to our land

WHERE SHALL WE GO?

Where shall we go for guidance
In a world of strife and din?
To a cross upon a hilltop,
Where that world was saved from sin?

The cross is rather a symbol
Of courage and faith and love
It strengthens us in our weakness,
It brings us help from above.

Where shall we go for guidance
When the way is dim and far?
Follow the path of the Wise Men,
Who were guided by a Star.

A Star, a Manger, a Savior,
Shepherds, and Angels in song;
Romance, Religion and Beauty,
With these God guides us along.

Guidance, how surely we need it
To lighten our toilsome way!
The Babe of Bethlehem leads us,
His star, his cross show the way.
—John M. DeChant.

springs from covetousness. The graft, the dishonesty, the liquor selling, the bribery, the fraud of every kind, the letting abominable tenements to the poor, selling honor and uprightness to get rich, grinding the faces of the poor, dwarfing the children by overwork—all these and many more flow from the polluted fountain of covetous hearts.

A Wife's Influence

"No one can so inspire a man to noble purposes as a noble woman, and no one so thoroughly degrade a man as a wife of unworthy tendencies. All that was worth admiration in the character of Henry VII was a reflection of the heroics of his wife Margaret. William, Prince of Orange, was restored to the right path by the grand qualities of his wife Mary. Justinian, the Roman emperor, confessed that his wise laws were the suggestion of his wife Theodora.
Andrew Jackson, the warrior and President, had his mightiest reenforcement in his plain wife, whose inartistic attire was the amusement of the elegant circles into which she was invited. Washington, who broke the chain that held America in foreign vassalage, wore for forty years a chain around his own neck, the chain holding the miniature likeness of her who had been his greatest inspiration, whether among the snows at Valley Forge or the honors of the Presidential chair."—T. DeWitt Talmage.

Respecting the Rights of Others

"The politician says with a sigh, 'A good deal of dirty work goes on, and I am afraid that sometimes I get the advantage of it.'
He turns his back and shuts his eyes, lest he should see anything that might shock him."—Bishop of Peterborough. Men are often like Ahab, doing nothing themselves to get gains wickedly, but accepting them when others get them wickedly. We are responsible for every infraction of the rights of others that we might prevent, and not merely for those that we commit.

"God will surely lay the burden on the man who helped to make the burden; God will surely require part payment from the man who profited by the bargain; so keep yourselves clear from other men's sins, that you may be clear also of their condemnation."—Charles Kingsley.

"On the line of the same principle, if an employer of labor, by paying an inadequate and unjust wage, tempts his employees to supplement their scanty pittance by dishonest or unholy methods, he is held responsible, in the sight of Heaven, for the evil which he might have prevented if he had not been wilfully and criminally indifferent."—F. B. Meyer.

When and How to Rebuke

A true child of God must raise his voice in opposition to the enemies of his Father.
"God and all true souls are necessarily seeking and finding the wicked and resisting their influence, as Elijah did Ahab; and from their nature they must do so always and everywhere, except in the world of the lost. There may be a place where sinners can be let alone, but it is not in this world, and they have reason to thank God that it is not. As Christians, we should remember that the convincing power is not ours, but God's. The only thing that can unmask a sinner to himself is the Holy Spirit, and so our part is to be holy mediums of the Holy Spirit of God."—James Brand.

The rebuke of wrong must be guided by the Holy Spirit, that it may be done tact-fully, without any display of conceit or harshness, and in the spirit of true helpfulness. It is a necessary though painful service, this of the spiritual surgeon, and all Christians are likely to be called on to render it. May the rebuke be given in the spirit and power of Elijah.

"Selfishness, which, in its measure, is heartlessness, carries its own punishment in the moral death it induces; but it is also doomed, in many cases, to pay the penalty of the avenging anger of Providence, before the eyes of man."—Cunningham Geikie.

"Books are the true levelers. They give to us who faithfully use them the spiritual presence of the best and greatest of our race."

Conditions in Nicaragua

Some rich Americans have made investments in the little Central American Republic of Nicaragua. There is nothing benevolent in making investments. Americans who are down there or have money at work there are only thinking about how much richer they may become by exploiting that country. Now it happens that political conditions are rather unsettled in that little country. The people of Nicaragua prefer settling their own political differences in their own way. It may from our point of view be a very foolish way, but after all, it is no more of our business than some of our political corruption is the business of the people of Nicaragua. Of course with our feeling of superiority we think that they are rather crude. Perhaps some day we may be able to show them how to make a fine art of corrupting the ballot, but if they do not want to learn of us, we should let them go on their own way. This is what the wise Government we happen to have does not want to let them do.

With the political shake-up that Nicaragua has treated itself some of the investors in the United States find that they are losing money. The little rebellion has been smashing up American property and making it uncomfortable for the American money grabber. This is going too far to suit some people. An American mob may burn a "nigger" in Georgia or a hooded secret society may boycott the Jews in another state, while another state may refuse to enforce an item of our national Constitution that it does not like, but the National Government can or will do nothing. It assumes that such things are matters that the individual states must settle for themselves. But now that American property has been assailed in Nicaragua it becomes our patriotic duty to send marines down there to save the profits of the capitalists. It is strange that our government is so anxious about the investments in foreign lands. The sending of soldiers amounts simply to the military arm being used to guarantee the private investments of our rich men. If our benevolent government is so ready to lend its aid to investments why does it not concern itself about some of those at home? That little merchant at the corner store may be squeezed by money lenders and sold out a dozen times for all that our government cares. The farmer may see his crops rot or sell them for less than it has cost him to produce them and to help him out of his trouble on the part of the government would be denounced in Washington as entirely too socialistic.

Any thinking American who read in the papers of the warfare in which our marines are having a part in Nicaragua should blush with shame. The American marines have no business down there. Their presence has been resented by an element in Nicaragua just about in the same way as our fathers resented the presence of English and Hessian soldiers in the colonies. Naturally some one had to get hurt and it looked as though others would also get hurt and then came the terrible slaughter. Several hundred natives were blown to pieces by bombs thrown upon them from the air by American troops.

The slaughter would have been impossible if it had not been for the presence of the American marines. There was no reasonable excuse in the interest of American capitalists. We are not very well liked in South America anyway, and we wonder why, but there is a reason now that will dispel all doubt. The giant of the North who cares so little for the lives of those with whom he has no reason to quarrel can't be trusted—or at least that will be the attitude of Latin America. The blot on our honor cannot be wiped out, but if the marines are withdrawn the blot will not grow bigger as it surely will while the American military is encamped on the soil of Nicaragua.—Mennonite.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

Good Mottoes. John 9:4; Jas. 1:22

"Mother, what is a motto?" said little Jane.

"I have one up in my room," said mother. "We will go up and see it." Then mother explained to Jane that mottoes are to live by. We hang mottoes on the wall so that we will see them often and they will help us.

The motto in mother's room said, "GOD IS LOVE." After they had looked at it for several minutes mother said, "When I am very unhappy and everything seems to go wrong, I look at that motto and remember that God loves us all. That helps me to be happy."

"I'd like to have a motto, too," said Jane. "Can I have one just like yours?"

"I think that it would be nicer for you to have a different one. We will try to think of a motto that you would like. If we can think of one that you like that is different from mine we will get it. If we can't and you would rather have one like mine, you may."

For the next week they kept thinking about mottoes. Whenever they went down town they looked in the gift shops and other stores to see if they could find a motto that Jane would like. Each day when they read their Bibles, they tried to find a verse that would be nice for a motto. Sometimes they found words that they liked but the trouble was that they couldn't find any as nice as mother's. On the next Sunday, Jane sat with her mother in church and they listened very closely to the sermon of their minister. The sermon was about God being everywhere and knowing everything that happens. The preacher said, "It is such a comfort to know that when things go wrong and no one seems to understand, we can talk with God and realize that he is our Father and knows about us." The sermon closed with three words from Matthew 6:32, "Your Father knoweth."

As soon as the minister sat down, Jane whispered to mother, "I know what I want on my motto. Would it be all right to have 'Your Father Knoweth' for a motto?"

"That would be lovely," said mother.

That very afternoon, Jane and mother got out some paper and crayons and worked for a long time. When they had finished Jane's motto was very pretty and it was ready to be hung in Jane's room where she would see it every day. Mother prayed as she put Jane's motto on the wall that Jane might never do anything that she would be ashamed to realize that her Father knew.

Sometimes as the days passed, Jane told her mother how glad she was to have her Father know all that she was doing. But sometimes she wondered if he was pleased with everything that she did. Then one evening when Jane went to her room to undress, she looked at her motto and it made her feel very unhappy. She ran to her mother and said, "Mother, I was very unkind to one of my friends today. I got angry at her and I called her mean names. I am so sorry that I did it and I wish that my Heavenly Father did not know everything that I do. I don't want him to know when I am bad."

Jane was almost crying and her mother said, "Well, Jane, you have said that you are sorry. Remember that your Heavenly Father understands the feelings of your heart. He knows that you are sorry and if you talk to him in prayer, he will help you to control your temper next time. Be glad that your Father understands when you are sorry and repent."

Then Jane went back to her room and prayed to God for help. So, each night after that she looked at her motto, "YOUR FATHER KNOWETH" and was glad that her Father not only knew when she was good but was willing to help her when she was sorry for her mistakes.

The Queen of Sheba may never have existed, but the kingdom of Saba certainly did, says Dr. Ditleff Neilsen, Danish historian and philosopher.

Dr. Neilsen will shortly issue a report of several years' study with cooperation of two foreign scientists. According to this report there existed two thousand years before Christ a culture which was by no means inferior to its two great contemporary Asiatic countries—namely the Egyptian and Assyrian-Babylonian cultures.

"Science," says the doctor, "hitherto has considered Saban researches as belonging to the realm of fantasy, but now will have to reconsider its views." He brought some two thousand specimens of inscriptions and 5,573 gold and silver coins which he had found in the sand-covered ruins of ancient cities, temples, and palaces as evidence that a highly cultured people had lived in those parts.—Selected.

Another Letter from Dr. Gribble

42 Rue Pierre Nicole,
 Paris, Vme, France.
 September 9th, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Only once more, perhaps not at all, shall I have the privilege of compiling for you in France letters from our dear workers in Africa.

I have before me letters ranging in date from June 5th to July 20th, all however, received during the last two days.

Under date of June 5th from Yalohe, Miss Tyson writes:

"This is a lovely, quiet Sunday. We have decided to have just a short service (English this afternoon, mostly prayer. There is so much to pray for that one feels one must give more and more time to prayer. You are much upon our hearts as the time of parting and of coming forth approaches. We are very happy to know that soon you shall be on your way and we shall again have you with us. We trust you may have a safe journey, free from sickness, and that little Marguerite shall also reach her destination safely.

"The Evangelists' classes are growing. We now have nine, most of them quite stable. One of them (in particular) has the same battle that we all have, "dying to self," but we know that the Lord has given us victory time and time again and since he is no respecter of persons, he can and will do the same for him, if he will make an entire surrender. It is still my privilege to teach this class. The Lord gives much joy in the work. As the Spirit reveals his message to their minds and hearts. Yolo seems to be growing most beautifully. In prayer he seems to touch God, not alone for the need of his own heart, but also for the other evangelists.

"Each day I praise the Lord increasingly that I have been permitted to come to this land to tell forth the message of love and salvation. If only our young people could know the joy of service here they would never think of sacrifice nor permit anything to keep them from coming to the field, for here in the Lord's service, "There is joy unspeakable and full of glory, And the half has never yet been told."

"The other night I was looking over some of your books in the library, and I found in one of them a copy of the telegram that Brother Gribble sent to the Board, telling of the granting of permission, and I read that word "Hallelujah." I thought how much joy and praise was expressed in that one word. Then again today as I was reading some "Brethren Missionary's" telling of the founding of our work my heart was filled with abundant joy as I thought of all the Lord has accomplished through human instruments who had been wholly yielded to the Lord. Some of us are weak, yet he ordained us and sent us forth, and, oh, I want to be able to bring many, many to him!

"The hospital is nearly finished. The veranda store house must be built and the doors and shutters put on. Then it will be ready for occupancy."

From Bassai under date of June 13 Miss Myers writes: "Brother Jobson opened school June 1 with seventy students. He thought there would be a falling away but instead he has increased his roll.

"He has some Kaba and some from Bozoum. He has also a class for the evangelists from six to seven in the mornings.

"A gift of $1400 has been given by Long Beach members for a church at Bassai. The building will be commenced by Brother Kennedy as soon as the money comes."

From Bassangoa under date of June 21, Mrs. Hathaway writes:

"At last the mail has arrived after an interval of two months and four days. And you may know it was a welcome guest. We are glad to know of your proposed date of sailing. You will see quite a difference in Yalohe station as we will have three new buildings, perhaps more. (School, church and hospital.) Won't it be nice for you to have a building to work in, though? The Lord surely is blessing us in giving us all these permanent buildings and when we get brick houses for the missionaries, we will be happy indeed.

"The Lord is faithful."

"We expect to leave for Yalohe in a day or so.

"Miss Myers will come to Bossangoa for a time. She and Mrs. Sheldon will no doubt come down from Bassai together.

"A conference will be held at Bassai in July, and another, at which we hope you will be present, at Yalohe in November."

Under date of June 25th, Miss Emmert writes from Yalohe:

"Today has been prayer day and as usual a day of great blessing. But as we have so often experienced in the past, the enemy has been unusually active also. The word came up from the village this morning that Korowan's wife was very ill, so Miss Tyson went down to see her. She was unconscious and soon died. Immediately the women threw themselves upon her body and began to mourn and wail. The old men of the village persuaded Korowan (one of Yalohe's polygamous sons) that a demon had done it, so he rushed in and dragged out several of the mourning women whom he claimed had demons. We hear that he has accused no less than ten people today and I suppose some poor woman will die mysteriously in a week or two. The people were indescribably mad with grief and rage.

"Then we found out that Goumbara was also very ill, given up to die and taken out along the creek somewhere. Mr. Hathaway went to see him and found him half way to Yakobas' village. He had been ill three days. They blame his wife for his illness and also for the death of Korowan's wife. It looks very much as though it were a case of jealousy and that there have been a series of poisonings, though of course it would be impossible to prove anything.

"Goumbara was carried here to the concession. His salvation and recovery would be a great victory over the enemy. It has been necessary to guard him day and night from the witch doctor. This morning he seems better.

"It was rather rainy today, so we had only 210 at Sunday school. N— and B— made public confessions of sin, recently.

B—says "Shame takes his eyes" very much. He sent word to the evangelists here to pray for him. He is now on his way here. The work is very encouraging spiritually. Of course there are ups and downs in the lives of the best of them, but on the whole there seems to be a steady growth among the Christians. It surely will be a great day when the Scriptures are opened up to them through their own reading. I pray that not one of them may be lost to his service.

"Goumbara was taken back to his village by his relatives. They plunged him into the creek to cure him of a temperature of 104°. He grows worse and worse."

June 29th Brother Hathaway writes from Yalohe:

"Everything is moving along nicely. Building is progressing. The hospital kitchen is now being built. We find it a great blessing to be in the new church building. The atmosphere is much more spiritual, and consequently it is much easier to preach."

Miss Tyson writes July 11th: "Goumbara is dead. We still cannot believe it is really true.

"By the signs of the times the Lord's coming does not seem far away and as one sees the awful sin all around us and as we hear of the sufferings of this present time our hearts surely cry, "Lord, come quickly." But then again so much still needs to be done—Oh, I wish that we might have more workers for itineration.

"What a glorious meeting when the Lord comes. Should he come before you reach us we will only see you sooner than we had anticipated. There are some people that I am looking forward to seeing at that time. Of course my Lord and Savior is the first one I want to see, and then I want to see Brother Gribble, for I have never seen him in the flesh."

Under date of July 20th, Mr. Hathaway writes from Yalohe:

"We certainly would like to cross the Sahara, and trust that there may be a large party accepted to come back with us. The Douala route is nearing completion. One travels by railroad or steamboat from Douala to within three days' auto-ride from here. Of course if one must cover that distance in tepoys it would require longer.

"We have several orders of freight which have been on the way over a year. Boat service up the Congo is very poor. We heard recently that the Largeau went to the bottom of the river. Another boat is also unusable, thus French boats on the river are far too few to care for the situation."

Thus another picture comes to you of the manifold and complex work of our African field.

As to Paris, our Brother DeLozier returned recently from his trip into Italy and Spain. I returned September 5th from a brief trip into Switzerland where I had the pleasure of attending a "Christian Convention" of French speaking Christians.

News from Marguerite tells of their safe arrival at New York. A violent storm the first two days, an injury to the boat, stoppage in full sea, reparations—such is a brief summary of the first chapter of the voyage. Then succeeded three days of calm, with a sea of glass and a torrid temperature. And then suddenly—the third and last chapter—the violent storm of the sixth day, when waves lashed forty feet high, and when lives were despaired of. Yet God was faithful, and the little daughter hastens to write, safe in the security of the Martha Washington hotel, New York, the night following the terrible tempest: "Dearest Mother, I just want to write and tell you we were saved! ..." Hallelujah! At the hour of the storm, though I knew not of it, there was a song of praise in my heart, and I was conscious that God was mightily working for me. Over and over on this memorable night of August 26th, I repeated in the loneliness of my little apartment, the joyous words, "I will praise him forever!"

After much prayer and waiting upon the Lord, I have booked passage on the Steamship "Amerique," sailing from Bordeaux, France, October eleventh, with the intention of disembarking at Douala, but with the option of going on to Matadi it seems wiser to do so. As the date had been announced as the fifteenth a little explanation is necessary. Never having been clear as to whether I were to go forth on a French or a Belgian boat I was glad to find the September sailings coincided as to date September 27th. This date has been for some time an objective, though never announced. Then when circumstances made this date unwise, I overlooked the fact of the discrepancy in the October sailings. The Belgian boat sails October 15th, but as the Lord now leads by the French boat to Douala, I find I must go four days earlier than announced, namely October eleventh.

Friends writing after October first should address me at Yaloke.

Should this copy reach you before October 1st you may still write, if you desire, to me at 42 Rue Pierre Nicole Paris, Vme, France. Care of Mr. and Mrs. Floyd Taber.

Should any one wish to write direct to the boat, the address will be, Paquebot Amerique, Chargeurs Reunis, Partant de Bordeaux France le 11 octobre.

Anyone of you writing to the boat should add either your return or my forwarding address, "Yaloke par Boali par Bangui, Afrique Equatoriale Francaise."

So far as I know, for the first time in my life, I go forth alone. God is faithful, and will provide companionship, if not human, then his own presence in augmented degree. I hope to write you a farewell from Bordeaux.

Faithfully,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Flora Church, Indiana

The name of this place has become well known to the brotherhood on account of having here the Old Folks' Home. Flora is a well kept flourishing town of about 2,000 inhabitants.

I visited the Home twice and found it well located and being taken care of in good shape. The land is well farmed and stocked and things look good.

So much has been written about the Home, I only want to confirm that we have an elegant building here in appearance and arrangement, modern and adequate to meet the needs of the church.

Brother Coleman is the pastor of the church here and I enjoyed meeting his family and having a few close-up days with him. I found him interested in the College and willing to do all he could to help in his local church. Like most of the other places, I was given the "old story" of high taxes, poor crops and low prices.

I was given royal entertainment and good hearings and had pleasant fellowship. The total gift was $1,213.81. W. S. BELL.

LA VERNE, CALIFORNIA

September 15, 1927.

This is a report from the La Verne church for the first six months of the present year. We began the year with a new method of evangelistic effort. Instead of holding twelve or fourteen meetings within the space of two weeks, we held the same number of meetings over a period of a little over three months. Every Sunday evening service was thoroughly evangelistic in tone, and the old fashioned revival atmosphere was present at each service. A large, well-conducted orchestra opened the service by offering several selections, and playing the accompaniment for the congregational singing. Special vocal numbers were rendered, with the special purpose of bringing the gospel to those who were unsaved. Every sermon was strictly evangelistic, with an invitation at the close for sinners to accept their Savior. Special advertising and visitation work was carried on by members of the congregation during the three months.

The results were very gratifying, and many were added to the church. We feel that the plan of keeping the revival atmosphere stirring for over three months was much better than having just a short, intensive, campaign.

The Sunday school has shown a remarkable growth over last year. Although this is a small community, as far as population is concerned, yet our attendance has doubled in the last five years.

We have been extremely fortunate in having our own missionaries, Brother and Sister Sickel, with us this past year. They have been a help and an inspiration to us all, and we are loath to see them leave, yet we know that there is an impelling call coming from the lands beyond the sea. May the Lord bless them in their work and labor of love.

We feel proud to say that two more of our young people have taken up definite training for full time service for the Lord. This little church has missionaries in Africa and in South America, and a home missionary in Texas, and now two more volunteers. Surely the Lord's blessing is upon us. Our prayers and best wishes go out to all the churches of the brotherhood. May you all stand true to God and to his Word in these trying times, till Jesus comes.

Even so, Come, Lord Jesus.

A PLEA FOR INDIANA MISSIONS

(Note—This letter was evidently mis-carried or delayed in the mails, as it failed to reach us in time for publication previous to the Indiana conference as was intended by the writer.—Editor).

Your Mission Board begs leave to submit the following request to the churches of Indiana. Last year we promised to support the work at Peru, Muncie, Huntington and Fort Wayne as much as we possibly could. These points are valuable to Indiana and are worthy of our support. We as a body of believers in missions have said to these points, go ahead and we will see that you are taken care of, and those points have acted in good faith. Should we not then see that their needs are met?

We fear that we pastors who are situated in fields where the Lord has blessed us with people of sufficient financial strength to take care of our local needs, that we neglect those pastors who are laboring in mission fields. Now brethren, such needs ought to be met and we are quite sure that when the people know how badly the need is felt, they will respond to the call and meet their apportionments.

Our district conference which meets at Loree ought to be the best in the history of our Brethren churches of Indiana. That can be if we remember our covenant with God. Our treasurer informs us that we are quite a lot behind in our promise to those who are depending on the Board for help. So we are asking if our churches will not come to our relief and put our mission work over in good shape. Your Board wishes to thank you for all past support and prays God's greatest blessing upon all to the end that a ready response may be made. Listen to Malachi, that doorkeeper for God:

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse that there may be meat in mine house and prove me now herewith saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open the windows of heaven and pour you out a blessing such that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Brethren, let us take God at his word and prove him. He never fails.

W. F. JOHNSON, President,
S. M. WHETSTONE, Secretary,
J. E. COLLINS, Treasurer,
Indiana Mission Board.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The end of this week finds the enrollment complete. As noted last week, there is an increase over last year. I am giving the enrollment for the two yearly semesters for the past seven years. In every case this represents the gross enrollment before the withdrawals are counted out.

	Semester I	Semester II
1922-3	178	178
1923-4	219	220
1924-5	250	280
1925-6	279	289
1926-7	269	290
1927-8	291	***

It will be noted from the above that we have had a very steady and healthy growth. If we were to take all who applied we would not be far from 300 now, but several were rejected.

The Gospel Teams are getting under way and hope to do as good a bit of work as they did last year. I suppose we lead all other Ohio Colleges in this kind of religious work.

I attended the funeral of Mrs. Bell, wife of our Brother W. S. Bell, in Dayton last week. Also I called upon Brother Orion Bowman and found him very ill. I visited a bit with Dr. and Mrs. Beachler. It will be of interest to the church to know that Dr. Bell expects to continue his work for the College without interruption.

The first term of the Saturday work, started off well this past Saturday. There will be three terms of ten weeks each, making the Saturday year thirty weeks long. The total enrollment for this term will not be far from fifty.

The writer addressed the Mansfield teachers last Monday at their monthly meeting, using the subject, "Some Population Problems."

The first two issues of the Collegian have made their appearance. It is not too late to subscribe. Both numbers were very commendable.

We have made several small changes in the new building as we are crowded for office room. As we have it arranged now, every recitation room has its adjoining office where the teacher may prepare his work and meet his pupils for consultation. When we were last inspected by the State office, this feature was noted and commented on as being up-to-date and not always found in more pretentious college architecture.

We have formed a new organization here known as the Faculty Club. The intention is to meet once a month when some recent book is to be reviewed by some Faculty member or a paper read upon some topic related to the department in which the professor in question is interested and informed. The purpose is to keep all of us posted on the new developments outside our own departments and also to promote good fellowship and keep the scholastic standards high at Ashland.

Mrs. Martha F. Gorman presented a fine wool comforter to the College Dormitory, for which we are truly grateful.

MATHIAS, WEST VIRGINIA

Apologies are often in order, but will simply admit of being careless in reporting as we ought to report. This carelessness or apparent indifference is not due to any lack of interest in the work or even in our much loved church paper, being conscious of the fact that our people generally delight in having the news of the field, but this neglect has been due largely to being overcrowded with work.

We have experienced many things since our last communication; some things that occurred have brought joy, some sadness.

Since January several of our number have passed to the great beyond. During the early part of January, my father crossed the river which was a loss to us as well as to the church, as he was very loyal to all its work. Brother Ed. Miller of Maurertown, Virginia, was called to preach his funeral. A very large crowd was present and Brother Miller delivered a wonderful address. A few days after this a noble sister, Mrs. Simon Halterman of near Bergton, Virginia, was called away, and funeral conducted by the writer.

We have mentioned some of the sad things, we now turn to a brighter picture.

During August Dr. Bame and wife of Ashland, Ohio, came and held a two weeks' meeting for us. First it might be interesting to know what our people thought of it, secondly, what others thought or even think of it. It might be considered that we should have said what others think or thought of it first, but we take the privilege of saying first what our people think of it. Well, we think it was a wonderful meeting and we are inclined to think that others view it the same way, in fact so many statements from others convince us that it was a meeting to be appreciated.

Sister Bame met the youngsters each morning, working up an interest in them, building up an association, teaching them in a way especially along musical lines that made them ready and willing to go before the entire congregation in an interesting way, entertaining all. While they were not professional singers, yet they carried off many honors.

Then each evening Brother Bame's sledge hammer blows at Satan showed him to be a soldier of strength and one "That needeth not to be ashamed." His sermons were very, very strong, entertaining, convincing, logical and of a high order in every way.

Large crowds came to hear, many from a distance, many that could not find room. The interest increased as the meeting went on, and could it have continued another week, we believe we would have had a large ingathering, but as always it takes some time to create sufficient interest for a great ingathering, yet as a result we have already baptized twenty-one and received one excellent woman from the Church of the Brethren and still others say they are coming. We are stronger as a body of believers in a full gospel which is largely due to Brother Bame's strong and convincing doctrinal sermons which were appreciated and are still spoken of by our Church of the Brethren people. Many here believe as we do, and we feel that the situation in this particular here is no exception to other places, therefore we are wondering why more Brethren preachers do not preach more doctrinal sermons, those peculiar to our denomination shunning nothing.

The outlook for us is brighter, we are happier, and our association with the Bames has been worthwhile. We closed with a most excellent communion.

And still more, on September 4th, Rev. G. W. Chambers of Penn Laird, Virginia, came to us and began a meeting at the Kimsey's Run church which is a part of this congregation. I would hesitate in mentioning the kind of opposition set up to defeat our plans, notwithstanding the fact we had made an investigation to find out whether or not we would interfere with any other meeting by beginning at that time which assurance was given us that none whatever. Yet in the face of all this a meeting was started just one week before ours and continued two weeks and at the close of this meeting another began, so we had meetings all along with ours. But thanks be to God because of victory in many other ways, twelve confessions, two coming from the Church of the Brethren.

We closed here with another excellent communion. Brother Chambers endeared himself to these people as well as to the people of this section. Our prospects in that section are very encouraging. We have therefore thirty-four to report and every indication for more.

We thank the Bames and Brother Chambers for their good work and pray God's blessings at all times upon them.

ARTHUR SNIDER.

A Unique Event

"Jesus was living among sinning men and women and was constantly dealing with the malady at the root of human life. His analysis of character and his ability to read the inner motives of men give ample evidence of the deepest moral insight and sincerity. Yet with all this he was not conscious of sin in his own life and was willing to throw out the challenge to anyone to lay his finger on any spot or blemish. That a man should be able to state an ideal which still goes beyond the possibility of the deepest ethical thinker to improve, is an achievement unmatched in the history of ethical theory, but that this Teacher should match his ideal with his life, should live it out so that the example is more beautiful than the precept, is to raise Jesus to an unapproachable pinnacle of excellence. We must use words which cannot be applied to any other of the sons of men. That is the impression that he made then, and it is the same today. A unique event had transpired—a Being had trodden our earth of whom it could be said that he had not sinned. How to classify such an One has been the problem of problems in theology since his appearance."—From "The Religions of Mankind," by Edmund Davison Soper.

Exclude religion from education and you have no foundation upon which to build moral character.—Eliot.

NEW ENTERPRISE PA., PASTORATE

In reviewing the activities of the last three months on the Bedford County, Pennsylvania, Circuit, composed of New Enterprise, Yellow Creek, and Raystown churches, the outstanding achievement has been the successful promoting of a three weeks' revival at the Yellow Creek church which resulted in eleven making the "good confession" and being added to the church by baptism.

The campaign was begun on the evening of September the fifth, with the pastor in the role of evangelist. The weather was ideal throughout. Farmers took enough time from the rush of their fall work to attend the services. A fine fraternal spirit was shown when many members from neighboring churches were in attendance from night to night.

As a result, the Lord added unto himself eleven souls. Ten of these are from the ranks of the church school, and one, a mother, coming from another church. These confessing were baptized on the Saturday afternoon of the closing week, and confirmed on Sunday morning and formally received into the fellowship of the church. The special series closed with the Communion services in the evening with forty-one surrounding the Lord's tables. Thirty-eight of these were members of the local congregation, and this number was almost twice as many as had attended either of the four previous Communion services conducted by this writer. The number would have been even larger but six of the usual participants were absent because of sickness or school work.

This congregation is also rejoicing over the purchase of a piano by the Woman's Missionary Society. This society was organized only last October, and is deserving of much credit for undertaking this responsibility. In bringing the messages for the three weeks, this writer followed the advice of Dr. W. P. White, given at National Conference when he said, "The people are hungering for the Bread of Life; simply break it and hand it out to them!" We believe the Lord magnified our ministry because we did.

During the three months we had as a visitor, the S. M. M. Secretary, now Mrs. Raymond Gingrich, whose inspiring talk gave new vision to the Raystown Sisterhood. Also Rev. Charles H. Ashman, of

The union church school picnic was enjoyed by one hundred and seventy members from the three schools. New Enterprise deserves special mention for the splendid attendance it has maintained in its church school during the summer and fall.

Pray for these eleven souls who have just been born into God's family that they may "adorn the doctrine of God our Savior in all things." (Titus 2:10).

AN ITINERATING EVANGELIST

Dear Evangelist: We closed a three weeks' meeting at Gatewood, West Virginia, September 4. On account of conditions over which we had no control we did not have as many additions as we expected.

This was the fifth meeting we have held here and in some particulars the best one.

I gave them mostly a new series of sermons and we had a gradual increase of interest from beginning to end. The last night an overflow house.

1. The only time I could give them was a time when their pastor had to be away on account of previous arrangements. He returned home five days before I closed the meeting and was a great help at this time.

Brother Woody is a member of the Church of the Brethren, and preaches for us and his own church. He is a promising young man and universally loved.

2. The county fair came in the middle week of the meeting and many of the young people attended it instead of church.

3. It rained three Sundays at preaching time, and every other day for nearly two weeks. This was a hindrance

4. Three or four prospective additions, by a murder tragedy in the family, were kept away the last week.

The last few days of the meeting the weather was ideal, the crowds increased, and we closed with an all day meeting the last Sunday with an intense interest.

We only had three confessions. An old lady, whose son was murdered we took into the church. She is near 80 years old and has been paralyzed and unable to walk for six years. She had been baptized years ago, but since then has lived a sinful life. We took her into church in her home. A young married man and also a bright young man made the good confession. Another splendid man said he expected to go back to the Church of the Brethren because his wife was a member there.

Many of the leading members said I had to come back again. I told them if I did I would have to prepare a whole new series of sermons, as I never held more than five meetings at the same place.

I had taken a bad cold on a midnight train in Delaware, just before I began this meeting. I was unwell for ten days.

This hindered me from visiting, which was against the meeting. This meeting was not satisfactory to me but I was very glad to know all the people felt good over the meeting. Loathing to leave with such a good interest; we were compelled to do so because of other engagements.

My brother, J. S. Bowman, and his good wife came in their Ford 125 miles to attend the meeting on Saturday night and over Sunday. On Monday, September 5, we drove 250 miles mostly over the mountains to my older brother, Jacob's. We left Gatewood at 6:20 A. M., arrived at my brother's at 6:20 P. M. to the minute. We went by Sulphur Springs, West Virginia, and Hot Springs, and Warm Springs, Virginia, by B. C. Moomaw's Cress farm. (Was sorry to learn he died a few weeks ago). This was a wonderful trip amidst beautiful scenery. Here at my brother's, we were delighted to meet Brother and Sister John Gear of Philadelphia, with Brother and Sister Charles Vanlear who called to see me at my brother's.

The next day we went ten miles to see Brother J. M. Bowman, who recently lost by death his noble wife. We found him unwell and broken hearted, but his son's wife is a noble, kind woman, who enters into his sympathies and takes the best care of him. How fortunate in times of sorrow to have a friend so kind and good.

My brother, J. S. Bowman, took me to Harrisonburg, Virginia. There we separated, he leaving for Washington, D. C., to see my oldest brother and only sister. It seemed almost cruel that we had to separate and I could not go with them, but duty called me elsewhere.

I stayed in Harrisonburg with a cousin of mine, also visited my only living uncle, Isaac Bowman, 94 years old, took the 5:30 A. M. train to Delaware by way of Washington. Preached in Delaware Wednesday and Thursday night; took 12:22 night train for home. Arrived 11 A. M., Friday, Stayed home twenty-eight hours then traveled all night; arrived at Johnstown 5:41 A. M., Sunday. I arrived at Vinco, Pennsylvania, 8 A. M., where I began a three weeks' meeting. Will report this meeting later.

ISAAC D. BOWMAN,
Leesburg, New Jersey.

RESOLUTIONS OF RESPECT

As our heavenly Father has seen fit to call our sister, Mrs. Missouri Swearman, to her heavenly home, we the members of the W. M. S. at Summit Mills, Pennsylvania, feel deeply the loss of our sister who has been a faithful member of our society and church for many years. We submit ourselves to the will of our Heavenly Father who doeth all things well. Be it

Resolved, That we, the members of the W. M. S. extend our heartfelt sympathy to the bereaved husband and children who have lost a faithful wife and a kind and loving mother. Be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be sent to the family, a copy to the Outlook and to the Brethren Evangelist, and also spread upon the minutes of our local society.

If I Had Been a Layman—

Circumstances having prevented the publication of our prepared editorial on Laymen's Day preceding the time for the observance of the occasion, we are taking advantage of a little space for this purpose this week, approaching the subject from the retrospect and from the point of view of the layman. There were likely a number of churches that found it inconvenient to observe Laymen's Day on the second Sunday in October, but purpose to do so yet. To such these words may not come too late to add their mite of stimulus. While to the churches which observed the day these words will come, first to those who did their best as a confirmation of their commendable vision and loyalty, and second to those who failed to do their best as a tacit reproof and as ground for improvement. To that end, and in a very direct way, setting aside for the occasion the editorial "we", I wish to say why I would have observed the day, IF I HAD BEEN A LAYMAN.

If I had been a layman, I would have observed Laymen's Day because the movement aims to build up a fund from which worthy young men may borrow to enable them to secure the needed equipment for the Christian ministry and missionary work in the Brethren church. Such a fund is made necessary by reason of the fact that many of those young people who have the native ability and the consecration essential to the ministry and missionary work of the church are to be found in homes unable to finance their education. Without some means of overcoming this difficulty the church would stand to lose severely from lack of a worthy and well-trained leadership in the future.

If I had been a layman, I would have been moved to cooperate in Laymen's Day through sympathy for those worthy young men who have fought or are endeavoring to fight their way through an educational career in preparation for the Christian ministry. There are many difficulties; some almost insurmountable. There are not sufficient employment opportunities for all who would take advantage of them. And besides those young men who have no financial backing whatever are not able to earn their entire expenses and at the same time do justice to their school work. Every person seeking the honor of being set apart for the Christian ministry ought to be willing to help himself to the limit of his ability. But he ought not to be required nor allowed to cripple his training by the necessity of earning his entire expenses, a thing which not infrequently takes place.

If I had been a layman, I would have given my support to the high purposes of the Laymen's Movement out of sympathetic consideration for the men in the ministry who are serving the church with commendable consecration, but who were nevertheless required to make such sacrifices of time and energy in accomplishing their years of training, that they came through handicapped in health and mental vigor, in the grasp of the subjects they covered and in habits of thoroughness.

If I had been a layman, I would have given my support out of respect for those splendid, truly devoted men who are giving the church the best they have, but who were compelled to cut short their training to such an extent that they now find their ministry not a little hampered. The going is hard in the face of the rapidly advancing educational standards. They find it difficult to measure up to the requirements of leadership and with their lack of foundational training, to prove themselves workmen that need not to be ashamed.

If I had been a layman, I would have been pressed into generous cooperation with this movement by a feeling of responsibility for the absentees from the ministry, the men who had native ability and inclination and might have been shining lights in the pulpit and parish, but no one gave them any encouragement and they were not able to get started alone. And there will be other absentees of this sort if the situation is not remedied. It must be remedied, for the growth and perpetuity of the church depends largely on the efficiency and adequacy of the ministry.

Furthermore, if I had been a layman, I would have been inspired by a vision of the situation and the remedy devised to give my heartiest cooperation. It is to the credit of the laymen that they have caught the vision. It is a day of promise that we are approaching when it can be said of the laity, that the old men have dreamed dreams and the young men have seen visions. The first big thing to be accomplished is to get people to see the vision, to grasp the possibilities and to be enamored with them. People will undertake no more than they can see; they will go no farther than their faith will reach. The hope of the church lies in the broadened horizon of the laymen.

If I had been a layman, I would have felt honor-bound to cooperate by the fact of man's stewardship and God's ownership, a truth which is growing upon the consciousness of laymen and is destined to make more and more headway as they are brought to see that the Kingdom is being hindered through lack of funds, funds which by the grace of God have been entrusted to their keeping. The principle of Christian stewardship applies to minister and layman alike, and involves spiritual possessions as well as material. But while it was readily recognized that ministers were stewards of the mysteries of God, it has been a slow process by which the laity of the church have come into a consciousness of their stewardship of the wealth with which God has blessed them. When the laymen come to that point where they are willing to dedicate their wealth with as much seriousness and finality as the ministerial recruit is supposed to dedicate his life, then right speedily will the Kingdom of God come and his will be done on earth as it is done in heaven.

And lastly, if I had been a layman, I would have been given confidence in the business efficiency and consequent success of the undertaking because it is to be promoted and directed by laymen. Naturally, because of their training and experience, laymen are generally conceded to be longer-headed and wiser in business than preachers. If it is so, then this Laymen's Movement, granted the needed consecration and divine dependence, ought to be assured of success and be worthy of any layman's confidence. Here is a challenge to the noblest and best within the church. A layman's movement, conceived by laymen, promoted by laymen, directed by laymen and depending on the gifts of laymen for its working capital, and having so high and spiritual a purpose as aiding in providing the church with a more adequate and efficient ministry, ought to have a fascination for laymen that would call out their most enthusiastic support.

The Candidacy of "Al" Smith

The Evangelist has previously taken occasion to oppose the widespread propaganda in the interest of the presidential ambitions of Gov. "Al" Smith of New York, and it has done so, and is ready to continue such policy for two fundamental reasons, neither political or religious but moral. First it opposes, and believes the entire church ought to oppose, any candidate who has done as much as Governor Smith has to weaken and nullify the Eighteenth Amendment in the state of New York. What he has done is not unknown; it has not been done in a corner; there is no need of using valuable space in recounting his acts in the interest of a prolonging of the life of the liquor traffic. Every informed person knows how that under his leadership New York was brought to rescind its ratification of the Eighteenth Amendment and enforcement legislation. And his wet activity as governor is only typical of his entire political history. He is frankly wet and is publicly pledged to do what he can to rid the country of Volsteadism. The prohibition victory has been brought about at too great a cost and its inestimable benefit is too far-reaching and fundamental to permit of their being put in jeopardy by the election of a confessedly wet man to the supreme executive office of the land. Prohibition is having hard enough sledding with an ex-brewer as Secretary of the Treasury, but who is nevertheless under the restraining hand of a dry President. How much harder it would fare with a man of Al Smith's wetness in the Presidency it is not difficult to imagine. We can scarce believe that he could be nominated, much less be elected, but in view of the highly financed propaganda now being carried on throughout the land, the agencies for righteousness including the religious press and the pulpit, dare not keep quiet, but must sound the warning, lest many good people should be deceived.

There is evidence of a relaxing of concern about the wetness or dryness of office seekers that is likely to work to the detriment of Prohibition. The good citizens of our land cannot afford to be indifferent as to the kind of men who seek important positions of public trust, especially government executive positions. If such an attitude should become widely prevalent, it would make for the practical annulment of Prohibition. One of our good friends and readers of The Evangelist, in criticising our opposition to Al Smith, insisted that it made little difference whether the President was wet or dry, saying that as President "he could do little more than enforce the law", and he would be sworn to do that. But that men do not always live up to their oath of office or sworn duty, our friend himself practically admits when he says, after asserting that he himself is strong for Prohibition, "But under the present rule what are we doing?" And that executives of aggressive personality, such as Al Smith or any one of the other wet aspirants have proven to be, might "do more than enforce the law" will be admitted when one recalls the executive leadership of Roosevelt and Wilson.

The second reason for speaking out against the presidential boom of Al Smith is that the Evangelist believes it a duty to warn the people against any move that is calculated, or is likely, to enhance the power of the Roman hierarchy, and such we believe would be the result of the election of a Catholic to the Presidency. It is not a matter of religious prejudice with us, but of jealous regard for religious, political and educational freedom, which is hampered wherever Catholics are in the ascendancy. Let the pope of Rome renounce his political claims, as he has not done, and suspicion will cease to attach to Catholic aspirants to the highest office in the land. Here again our kind critic fails to get our point when he accuses us of opposing Smith's candidacy "because he didn't belong to the same church." It is not that Smith is a Catholic, so far as his religion and church relationship is concerned, that we hold unfits him for the Presidency, but the politico-religious system to which he gives allegiance, and this we say notwithstanding his evasive answers to the questions put to him in the famous Marshall letter. When one cannot without equivocation place allegiance to country above allegiance to the pope he may well be regarded with suspicion by Protestant America.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother F. G. Coleman began an evangelistic campaign in his church at Flora, Indiana, on October 9, with Brother Harley Zumbach as song leader.

Brother Leslie Lindower, pastor of the Ankenytown, Ohio, church reports a successful meeting conducted by Dr. J. C. Beal who is working under the auspices of the Evangelistic and Bible Study League. Twelve souls made the good confession and the members greatly revived.

The Evangelist office is in receipt of news of the birth of a son to Rev. and Mrs. H. C. Hammond of Vandergrift, Pennsylvania, on September 28, 1927. Mother and son are doing nicely. Brother Hammond is pastor of the Brethren church at the above named place. In behalf of the Evangelist family we congratulate Brother and Sister Hammond.

Brother G. E. Drushal writes some interesting news items from Lost Creek, Kentucky. Brother and Sister McDonald have fitted themselves into the work there in a fine way. The threatened epidemic of diphtheria is thought to have been safely checked by the use of anti-toxin. A revival is now in progress at Lost Creek with Brother James S. Cook as the evangelist.

President E. E. Jacobs wishes us to announce the dedication of the new gymnasium on Thursday, October 20th, for which occasion elaborate plans are being made. Also HOME COMING is set for October 29th, when the Manchester College football team will play the Ashland College team at Ashland. This is the first time our college has been scheduled for an intercollegiate sport with our sister college at North Manchester, Indiana. May it be the beginning of a long series of happy events between the two schools.

Brother Homer A. Kent, the capable pastor of the church at Washington, D. C., gives us an interesting report which speaks of splendid growth. At their Rally Day service three souls accepted Christ. It seems that there was not much need of a Rally Day in the ordinary sense of the term, inasmuch as this church had not experienced a slump all summer, and this, notwithstanding the pastor's absence for two months. We rejoice with his many, many friends that he was raised from his sickness and restored to his people and to his work.

Our correspondent from the church at Long Beach, California, gives us some news items from that part of the Lord's vineyard. This church is justly proud of its delegation of prospective preachers who recently made their way to Ashland College for training. Dr. Bauman, the pastor, of this splendid church was recently in Ashland visiting with his son who is counted among his church's even dozen of theologs. The North Long Beach church, which is a mission of the First church, is going forward in a fine way, having had an average attendance in the Sunday school of 130 for the summer months.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter writes an introductory note in behalf of Brother H. F. Stuckman, the newly elected president of the Home Mission Board, to which we have taken the liberty of adding the new president's picture. Brother Carpenter, who has been the president of the Board for a long period of years and who initiated the change, leaves an enviable record of Home Mission advancement behind him. He has been an indefatigable worker and the church owes much to his leadership. In Brother Stuckman he has a worthy successor. Dr. Carpenter also writes of some of his vacation experiences and local church interests. He enters upon his seventh year with Hagerstown.

Brother S. C. Henderson, for four years pastor of the church at Fremont, Ohio, brought his work to a close the last of September and with the first of October entered upon the pastorate of the church at Oakville, Indiana. During his stay at Fremont he led the church in the building of a new church and in enlarging and greatly strengthening its membership. He left the church in a splendid spirit and wishing he would have stayed longer. The Fremont people are fortunate in having secured the promise of Brother W. S. Crick to take up the work the first of January.

It is with deep regret that we announce the death of Attorney Orion E. Bowman of Dayton, Ohio, on October 7, 1927, who has been suffering for several months. No layman in the brotherhood would be more sorely missed than will Brother Bowman, who has for eight years been president of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College, has been one of the leading figures in the building and direction of the Brethren Home at Flora, Indiana, was for many years prominent in the National Sunday School Association, and has been the only layman ever elected moderator of the General Conference. Besides he is one of the main pillars of the big Dayton church and was for a long time the superintendent and key man in the Dayton Sunday school. Brother Bowman was born near New Lebanon, Ohio, October 27, 1879. The Evangelist bespeaks in behalf of its readers the most heart-felt sympathy to the sorrowing wife and son. Further memorial will be published later.

The Church Question in Mexico

By Bishop George A. Miller, Mexico City

No discussion of Mexico can deny the story of the early missionaries who took so prominent a part in the destruction of the pre-conquest civilizations and the development of the Spanish colonial religion.

Wholesale denunciations of the part played by the clergy in the history of Mexico are unfair to the facts and the clergy. Many of these early missionaries were men of real consecration to the task of saving the pagans, as they understood the matter. Among them were men of outstanding faith and devotion, under tireless toil in their efforts to rescue their followers from the wrath to come. Such men as Pedro de Grante were not numerous, but were a saving factor in the situation.

The good intentions of some of those early clerics did not save their methods from the barbarity and compromise that marked the period of the conquest. The main business was to baptize the heathen, as fast as possible. Often "the priests did not desist until they were so exhausted by fatigue that they could not lift their hands." In the course of a few years more than four millions of people were baptized. "Two priests boasted that their ordinary day's work was from ten to twenty souls."

Since the new religion retained and tolerated most of the characteristics of the old, with merely a change of names, the natives made no resistance to baptism; and as nothing else was required, it was soon evident the easiest way to escape the ruthless barbarity of the conquerors was to become a "convert."

All over Mexico stand beautiful stone churches in good condition, bearing mute witness to the energies of the Spanish priests, also to the enormous toll of toil exacted from the plodding Indian, with whom the wages paid for his work were no considerable item in his regard,—most of which was deferred for payment in the next world.

Popular education never has been one of the objectives of the Mexican church and during the pre-independence period the masses of Mexicans remained in illiteracy. The principles of mortal opportunism everywhere prevailed. In the language of one of the chief intellectual authors of Mexico today. "The chief ends of the church have always been two: the accumulation of property and the securing of political control." At the time of Mexican independence in 1826, after 300 years of education dominated by the church, one half of one per cent. of the people could read and write.

Church Property

In the accumulation of property, the hierarchy was extremely successful though claiming to be poor and all but destitute. Aside from the churches very richly furnished with enormous treasures for the glory of God, there were vast estates, valuable city properties, perquisites and prerogatives, and proceeds that baffle our protestant ideas of ecclesiastical holdings. The most conservative historians state that at the time of the disestablishment in 1857, the church owned, in one form or another, one-half of all the valuable property in Mexico. So powerful had the hierarchy become, that it seemed to the patriot Juarez that the only hope for the country lay in stripping the church of its properties.

The church was not only laying up enormous treasures on earth, but it was blocking the wheels of progress and the country was at a standstill. There was never a movement forward that the priesthood did not oppose with the resources and skill of a powerful and conservative organization. The church vigorously opposed the movement for national liberty led by the patriotic priests Hidalgo and Morelos, and gave every aid and comfort to Iturbide and Santa Ana and every other leader of revolt and opposition to the liberties of the people.

The Disestablishment

About the middle of the last century arose Bonito Juarez, the Lincoln of Mexico, a full Indian who gave his life to the struggle for the rights of the people. The Dominicans, Franciscans and the Jesuits were expelled from the country and the Constitution of 1857, with the enforcing legislation of 1859, completely disestablished the church and "nationalized" the vast holdings of valuable property. The church has had the undisturbed and tax-free possession and use of all church buildings, residences and secondary schools necessary to the carrying on of legitimate religious activities. There has never been official opposition to the exercise of the Roman Catholic or any other religion, as a religion. The issues of political activities and constant meddling in national affairs on the part of a foreign ecclesiastical organization dominated largely by foreign born priests.

The clergy has made frequent efforts to recover this lost control of the country, the most dramatic instance being the effort to overthrow popular government and establish under Maximilian a mediaeval Catholic empire in the new world. During the last quarter of the nineteenth century much property and prestige was recovered and when the ten years of political disturbance followed the fall of the Diaz dictatorship, the clergy was ready to use every opportunity to regain full control of the government.

So successful were these efforts on the part of foreign-born Roman priests to rehabilitate their cause, that when the constitutional convention met at Queretaro in 1927, the provisions of 1859 were not only re-affirmed but a new section was added making it illegal for any one not a Mexican by birth to "exercise the ministry" in Mexico. It is obvious that the makers of this law were not thinking of Protestant activities, for the sufficient reason that Protestants complied with the spirit of this law from 1917 onward, as witnessed by the public statement of President Calles in February, 1926. The Roman clergy was given nine years in which to re-adjust their activities and conform to the law. In February, 1926, the archbishop of Mexico issued a statement to the effect that neither he nor any associated with him had any intention of obeying the law of the land, but would faithfully follow the Pope rather than the constitution of Mexico. This declaration precipitated a direct collision between the state and the church and month by month the controversy waxed hotter and hotter. The Mexican government refused to recognize and permit to function peaceably within its borders an organization whose basic principles included the open defiance of the constitution of the land and whose first and final allegiance is ever to a foreign ecclesiastical potentate who claims to supersede all civil government and rule above human constitution.

The organization of a "League of Promotion of Religious Liberty" in Mexico, by the Catholic party has a curious sound when the record of an oppressive and intolerant Catholicism known in the past and set beside the bitter war at present waged on every form of Protestantism in all countries where the Roman church is entrenched in Political power as the state church. The people of the United States are apt to be misled by our eminently open-minded attitude toward faiths that differ with our own and we are apt to suppose that the Roman arm in Latin American countries wields the same gloved hand that we know here in the United States. A brief sojourn in any of these lands begets a warm sympathy with Mexico in her struggle for self-government and political liberty.

Religious Forces in Mexico

There is little likelihood that Protestant work is to be interfered with in Mexico. The Methodist Episcopal church, for example, is now almost wholly under Mexican leadership and these sons of the land are giving splendid account of their stewardship of a loyal, sacrificing, zealous church striving nobly for the evangelization of the people. Through all the excitement and controversy of 1926, the Protestants stood steadily by the constitutional government and refused to lose their heads or in any way embarrass the government.

A high government official states that the actual number of Catholics in Mexico is about three millions, or about one-fifth of the total population. If we count all who have been baptized in infancy this estimate is low, but if we include only those who faithfully and regularly attend mass and confession the number is too large. There are certainly many earnest and devout people who find in the elaborate ritual of the Roman church spiritual light and comfort and who remain faithful to the end. No one is finding fault with the religion of the Roman Catholic church. It is the tendency to "accumulate property and acquire political power", all controlled from Rome, that aroused the indignation and resentment of the government that disestablished the church.

For the faithful believers who do not think very deeply the conflict between the church and state in the year 1926 undoubtedly greatly increased the devotion and interest that had tended to grow cold. Much has been made of the "persecutions" of the situation and vigorous efforts were made to lead the world at large to believe that a veritable religious extermination was in progress in Mexico. However, it must be said in all fairness and kindness that the worst that has been done to the Catholics in Mexico was a very mild affair as compared with the ingenious intolerance practiced by the advocates of the "League of Freedom" against the followers of other faiths wherever the Catholic church has attained control of the political situation.

The Independent Mexican Catholic Church

Several attempts have been made to inaugurate an independent movement with the object of forming a church free from some of the abuses of Romanism and controlled exclusively by Mexican prelates. These beginnings have been short-lived. In 1925 an independent movement originated in Mexico City and other places and attracted considerable numbers of people. Some disturbances and rioting ensued but were soon quieted. The government conceded to the independents the use of a church which had been used as a warehouse for some time. The new movement proposed to abolish the use of dead languages in the services, the confession, the worship of saints, and the celibacy of the clergy, and advocated various reform measures. There are undoubtedly a number of people within the Catholic church who would follow a really spiritual and forward-moving reaction from Rome.

Religion and Morals

It is difficult for the foreigners, inexperienced in the ways of Latin lands, to understand the religious situation anywhere in Latin-America. Dr. Ernesto Nelson, one of the most distinguished scholars of South America, speaking at the Conference on Christian work in South America, at Montevideo in 1925, said to the delegates from the United States, "You come from a land where religion has always been identified with morality. Here religion has rather been identified with immorality. In your land, the church stands for moral character; here we find it necessary to go for character mostly to those who are farthest removed from the church. While you in the north have been bringing social effort and science nearer to religion, we have purposely been trying to remove science farther and farther from religion." This fearless student of the social order does not consider himself a Christian, but speaks from the full heart of the multitudes who have suffered, not from religion, but from a self-centered, progress-blocking, religio-political hierarchy that has constituted one of the major problems of Latin-America for centuries past.

The Rural Church and the Community

By Floyd Sibert

Fifth Installment

To do this we must have a community trained leadership. The great need of rural America is that of high grade leadership, which must be provided by a number of educational agencies. The first of these is the Christian college, and their task just now is to demonstrate that there is a difference between preparations made in such schools and tax supported universities. These colleges must and do start a goodly number of young people into the Christian ministry. They should prepare leaders, first by teaching real religion, second through the Religious Education Department, they should put out men of vision who are able to plan and organize: Thirdly through such studies as the Bible, Social Service, Sociology, and Christian ethics they should be able to repair the grounded terminals of the rural church's influence. But there is a need perhaps beyond that. Only a small minority of young folk will be ministers or missionaries, but fifty or sixty percent of young folks in western colleges come from the country and will return to begin life there as business or professional men, and as home builders. There is a crying need for an education that will train men for the country and not away from it. Rural life needs to be reinterpreted. Now rural life is in a period of transition from drudgery and isolation to scientific farming and electrical communication and amusement. If ever there was a time to plant the seed of Christian revolution in rural churches it is now. Plant the idea in the minds of future business men and a Bible class of two thousand will be your reward. A recent talk with a leading lawyer of Van Wert, Ohio, revealed the fact that he was a Sunday school teacher, deeply religious, and as sincerely interested in the spiritual welfare of his class of sixty men as he was in his profession. But he was a city man because he was trained in a city set school. Although reared on a farm he had lost the vision of rural possibilities. In answer to the question, "What would you do in a country church of twenty-five or thirty members," he hesitatingly replied, "I expect I would mildew." Here is a typical example of modern educated leadership. There is a crying need for a college curriculum that will train Christian young men and women, who will return from college, ready fitted and willing to go into the rural churches and work for their betterment. Let them change the program of the church, if they have any to fit better the needs of the community and rural life. Christ's didn't say, any way, that we should use the same method of teaching religion in every community. In fact he changed his method to suit the environment. But always he taught the same Gospel, but in a little different way. The rural church has not realized this fact. In fact she is pretty much of a century plant that has to wither for a certain period before she blossoms. We believe that the period of her blossoming forth into fruitage draws nigh just in proportion as such rural community trained young people catch the vision of rural conquest.

THE CALL OF THE COUNTRY CHURCH

Come over into Macedonia (the country) and help us

"The country church is the one institution that has done and can do the most to enrich individual character, make homes happier, and daily toil more attractive and gainful. Other societies may supplement but none can replace the work of the country church. As its steeple towers above every other building in hamlet and village, so its ideals, its inspirations, its message and ministry to men, its hopes and helps are preeminent. This presents a need, a duty, a call, and an opportunity rich in possibilities. The need is urgent and the call is commanding."*

The country side is calling (calling for men. The country side has always furnished the manhood and the food for the city. She made the city possible. But now she stands in the midst of a crisis her calls fall upon heedless ears. She has a right to call. Fifteen per cent of the students of Princeton come from the city. We cannot complain if most of them go back to the city after graduation. But when nearly all of the students of Marietta college (Ohio) come from the country and sixty-five per cent of them go to the city we have a right to ask why?

Dr. Strong's appeal, in his challenge of the city, is quite right and convincing. He says, "We must Christianize the city or see our civilization paganized. But if in a generation the city will dominate the nation, when are the men who will then dominate the city? Most of them are now in the country towns getting ready for their task. To work on the city problem in an effort to solve it is to take a life chance. But to work at the rural problem, to train rural leadership, is to help solve the city problem at its source."†

The country church calls for men of vision, men who can see through the transient things and see the real and vital issues of life. She is calling for practical men who can bring things to pass and secure tangible results.

She is calling for aggressive men who are not afraid to break with tradition, who fear God more than institutions or prejudices.

She needs trained men who are able to work out their own salvation.

She wants enthusiastic men who can withstand the froth of indolence, of habit, of pettishness, of envy, of backbiting, whose enthusiasm cannot be dampened by adversity of tottering plans—men who can work alone with God. The very need of the field constitutes a call for men, heroic men. The chance to pioneer in a work for God is a real call. But the final and supremest call is that of the abiding hunger of men and women for religion—religion interpreted in terms of daily life, daily toil, common needs, and justice. The size of the task should make its appeal to every true hearted countryman,—the task of guiding forty million rural people to live close to their Creator and keep the faith.

About the middle of the eighteenth century, John F. Oberlin, doctor of philosophy of a great university, a masterful student and courageous leader, heard and answered the call of the country side. At the age of twenty-seven this man who might have been in the center of a great church buried himself in an absolutely hopeless field among the Alsatian Mountains. His field consisted of not over one hundred families. It was a section often harried over by war. No schools, no churches, finance, in an over-taxed area,—here he located. Note the difference in that same parish a century later. The hills and valleys had become fertile. Everywhere were evidences of prosperous farming. Every homestead had its orchard and flowers. Every acre was tilled. Splendid mountain roads with bridges gave access to the great world beyond. Schools flourished. A well ordered system of irrigation had been installed. Simple but charming houses sheltered the beautiful family life. Religion served to bind them to their fellows and to their God. The recognized genius for all this transformation was Pastor Oberlin. He did it by preaching, by reading, by study and sacrifice and drudging toil. Can we not find men today as heroic?

If we cannot then we are facing a calamity. If the time ever comes when the people on the farms cease to have their place of worship, they will lose their honesty, honor and the vigor that have characterized the country life of the past, and the moral foundation of the nation will be undermined. It is the folk who live and rear families on the land in the country and in the fear of God that maintain and preserve the institutions of democracy, in short, it is either answer the call of the country church, or paganism will be the result. To quote again, Dr. Galpin, "The farm furnishes the city with muscle, intellect, imagination, probably conscience, probably religion. It feeds, clothes and educates these children and then passes on the finished product to the cities. When the rural church was strong the stream of life was mighty in force and personality. It built up the city church. Now, ground between the upper and lower millstones, youth is going to the cities pagan, and from the homes that were once pious and Godly. As farm communities decline into paganism, they sow the wind and the cities reap the whirlwind." If the pagan farmer sows the wind and the city reaps the whirlwind what is there left but the destruction of life, the crumbling and disintegration of nations and monarchs? If this held true with Rome and Carthage, why will not like causes produce like results today? It is a question of do or die. Have we the volunteers who will answer the call and accomplish the task?

Ellet, Ohio.

(The End)

Let us look at problems from each other's point of view so that if unison is not possible we may achieve harmony. The world wants harmony today more than anything else.—Sir Thomas Inskip.

How Age Creeps On

By H. A. Gossard

When flowed the blood, red-rich, and full and free,
I launched my barque upon a raging sea;
And rode the waves, well balanced through the spray,
From early morn 'till middle of the day.

In Youth miles out I'd ride at early morn,
And dare the crested wave, 'till noon-day's horn
Would call me back to quiet on the shore;
To 'wait the morrow 'gain to ply the oar.

But, going oft, and hearing now and then
That some went out—but never came again,
My darings of the sea were mixed with fear;
I wished for less of them from year to year.

No trouble on the wave—'gain I'd start out,
Going, coming too, by the same old route,—
I noticed tho a gradual change in time:—
Not quite could I return 'till shore-bells chime.

Earlier then I plied again the oar:—
The sea dead calm,—no murmur on the shore:
More time did not the lack of speed improve,
On reaching shore, the oars I scarce could move.

To offset then the element of time,
I struck the oars ere gongs for toil did chime,
And made the fore-of-day the bigger part;
But on return no 'vantage from the start.

I changed my launching time from morn to noon;
And sought thereafter favor from the moon:
The setting sun, as in a race with night,
Left me a-sea with mind and waves to fight.

Then pondering over failure and mistake,
With me a lunch I took—more strength to make;
But tho I started early in the morn,
I never saw the shore nor heard the horn

Until the close or dying of the day,—
When on the shore I fell methought to stay:
Too weak and faint to anchor fast my boat,
I let her drift, to sink, perchance, or float.

How long I do not know, along the deep
I lay exhausted in a deadly sleep.
Nor would I from the surge of waves ashore,—
Which ever made me buoyant still the more.

I woke far in the night as from a dream,
And of my barque, afloat, I caught a gleam:
Faint-hearted, lacking strength to breast the foam,
O'er hill and vale I wandered feebly home.

Now I can see that life is but a span:—
Youth, prime of life, old-age, the end of man.
'Tis wasting time to try time to assuage,—
And say, "Hold back your markings of old age!"

The halt of time is not within our power.
We can not check one second of an hour.
Unsought it comes this wondrous precious boon,
And often makes our sun to set at noon.

Conclusion

I find that time-laid plans must end with time.
That plans well wrought, through God's Eternal Truth, Employ the heart, the soul, it keepeth prime
'Till God calls back to us Eternal Youth.

Are the Young Men Safe

King David said to Cush, "Is the young man Absalom safe?" This is paternal love yearning for the welfare of a son, even amid filial disobedience. Absalom wanted to dethrone his father, David, and himself become king. War ensued, much to the father's regret. The forces joined in battle, and Absalom's life was the forfeit. The question about his safety was put to a messenger. Cush rejoiced because Absalom had been killed, and he thought David should do the same. Was Absalom not a traitor, and did not he seek the throne and the life of his father? By all the standards of ethics, David should be gratified. But his heart was pierced, and there is no better expression of poignant grief than the father's lament at the death of his wayward son.

Some modern sons are not safe today because they have rebelled against the morals of their father. One of the great gamblers had a Christian mother. He forsook the path of safety for himself, and led many other sons into sin. One of the great drunkards of our generation was the offspring of a Christian home. He started wrong, traveled the path at a reckless pace, but reformed while yet there was time. One young man lost his life on an Illinois gallows, son of Christian parents, but led away into sin. The man who tempted him to take the first drink was partly responsible for the murder the young man committed while intoxicated.

Could these illustrations be multiplied? Everyone knows numerous like cases. Evidently, modern Absaloms are not safe. They are covetous of possessions and powers to which they have no right, and set out to satisfy themselves by acquisition. They are unsafe before they start. They do not acquire greater safety along the path of wrong. They may make the final transgression, when they would turn—but it is impossible.

David was not wholly blameless. Happy is the father who is guilty of no thought, word, or deed which would harm a son if repeated by the son. Often, mean little things are said and done which injure a son beyond recovery. The dirty conversation, the slander of the church, the ridicule of the Bible, the slight of the Christ, the neglect of sacred things, the desecration of the Sabbath—all these on the part of a father make the way unsafe for the son. It is folly to inquire after a son's safety after the wages of sin have been paid and receipted for. Usually, son is safe if father is safe.—Religious Telescope.

THE BROTHERHOOD

A wounded Scotch Highlander lay upon a cot in a hospital in London, striking tenderly with his hand a German spiked helmet. A nurse, in passing his cot, stopped and looked at him and said: "I suppose you killed your man?" "No, indeed," he replied, "it was like this: He lay on the field badly wounded and bleeding, and I was in the same condition. I crawled to him and bound up his wounds; he did the same for me. I knew no German, and he knew no English, so I thanked him by just smiling. He thanks me by smiling back. By way of a token I handed him my cap, while he handed me this helmet. Then, lying side by side, we suffered together in silence till we were picked up by the ambulance squad."—Exchange.

"Affections should not bind the soul, but enfranchise it. Through them it should know larger, deeper, higher life. They should be to it wings by which to mount. A friend comes as an ambassador from the heavens."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

On Holy Ground

By Rev. John A. McAfee

TEXT: Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground.
Exodus 3:5.

The place whereon he stood was not touched with the blood of bulls and goats, near to the altars where sacrifice was wont to be made. He stood not in the temple area. Moses stood within the confines of no sanctuary, on ground made sacred by the rites of men. He had not come on a holy day to pay homage and to bow down before his God. The ground whereon he stood, and which the voice of God called holy, was that at the back end of the desert, whither, in the discharge of his duties as keeper of the flocks of Jethro, his father-in-law, he had led his flocks. It was the ground over which the daily and humdrum duties of life led him that was holy ground.

Just this is one of the great values given to us by the Christian message and conception, the assurance that the ground our feet tread when we are about life's duties, is holy ground. Religion has been defined as "the consciousness of the universe—that it is infinite, eternal, and that it is all God's." Such would not be far wide of the mark as a definition of Christianity.

If we think, as our Master taught us to think, of religion, not as services to be attended, rites to be observed, or ritual to be performed, but as a life to be lived, we shall then come to see life, not as a thing which is evil and from which we crave release, but as something essentially good and fine; we shall have caught the spirit which led Carroll Carstairs to sing:

"If death should come with his cold, hasty kiss
Along the trench or in the battle strife,
I'll ask of death no greater boon than this:
That it shall be as wonderful as life."

The hot and dusty paths, the rough and rugged roads our feet needs must travel will become glorious, as we realize that the ground whereon we stand is holy ground.

Even as it came to Moses of old, the voice of God is constantly coming to us, as in the heat and burden of the day we travel life's heartless highway, "Put off thy shoes from off thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground."

All ground is holy. It matters not where or when the voice comes to us, the message rings true.

For Moses, as for us, the presence of God made the ground holy. He had been wont to listen for the voice of God at empty tombs, to search for the print of immortal feet in dust of broken altars. If he would come into the presence of God, it must be by the performance of certain rites. God was to be found only at holy shrines and in sacred places. God was localized and manifested himself only at certain times. Theoretically we have long since out-grown any such belief; practically we have not. We are wont to feel the presence of God in gloomy cathedrals and musty churches. If we would hear his voice, we must put ourselves in certain places and in certain postures. To this day we are inclined to localize God and to confine him to places and times, thus losing much of magnificence of the vision. The ground our feet tread is not holy ground because we do not have the consciousness of the presence of God.

The Christian conviction is of an ever-present God.

"Does the fish soar to find the ocean,
The eagle plunge to find the air?"

In our better moments, we know with the Psalmist that we can not escape his presence. We need constantly to remind ourselves that God is ever present in all of life, in all places and at all times. He is just as much present in all of life, in all places and at all times. He is just as much present in the shop as in the church, in the home as in the cathedral. The Prince of the Prophets caught a vision of that which was to be: "Therefore the Lord himself shall give you a sign; behold a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." And Immanuel means, "God is with us!"

God is ever present in all of life to those who see. In a recent book, Clutton-Borck says that vision is not the seeing of different things but the seeing of things differently. The Spirit of Christ leads us not to see different things, but it does lead us to see all things differently.

To realize that the universe is all God's—not the big things alone but all—is to learn one of the great lessons of life. Professor Dallas Lore Sharp tells of being in the field one day with his twelve-year-old son. It was in the fall and the crimson was just fading into cold October gray. The lad was standing with a fork in his hand, as with upturned face he watched the flight of wild ducks across the sky.

"He who from zone to zone"

the man commenced, more to himself than to the boy.

"Guides through the sky thy certain flight" the lad went on, as much to himself as to his father.

"Father," he added reflectively. "I'm glad to know that piece."

"Why?" the professor asked.

"I see so much more when the ducks fly over."

"How much more do you see?"

"I see the ducks and God flying over together."

Have you so learned to see God in life that you can see him in the flight of the wild birds? And in all things else?

There is no finer statement than that contained in the very familiar words of Mrs. Browning:

"Earth's crammed with heaven
And every common bush afire with God;
But only he who sees takes off his shoes."

God grant us grace to see!

Our thought thus far has been that all ground is holy ground because God is ever present in all of life. Now I want to add a second thing, one which may at first blush seem contradictory. We need frequently and systematically to turn aside from the routine of life to see this very thing, to see that all ground is hallowed by the presence of God.

Moses, busy about his appointed task, keeping the flock, saw the burning bush and said: "I will now turn aside, and see this great sight, why the bush is not burnt." And when the Lord saw that he had turned aside to see, God called unto him out of the middle of the bush. When we turn aside God will call unto us.

Whether we realize it or not, it is a necessity that we should turn aside.

It requires real insight; it requires vision; it requires a heart and mind touched by the spirit of the Eternal to keep ever clear the fact that we are on holy ground. It is hard—desperately hard at times—to see the connection between a column of figures and the Kingdom of God, between washing dishes and the New Jerusalem, between a lesson in history and the Holy City, between the minutia that goes to make up life and the cause of Christ. Yet, just this is the task that is set before us. For this we must turn aside, that we may have our sight clarified, our vision renewed.

Since the ground whereon we stand is holy ground we should tread reverently. The command came to Moses to put his shoes from off his feet. Such was the mark of reverence. Not in outward form but in inward reality we should tread God's universe with feet unshod. "Only he who sees takes off his shoes." We have seen the revelation of the Father in Jesus Christ, and should see that earth is crammed with heaven and that every common bush is afire with God. We should have in our hearts that true reverence for the Father that will not allow us to tread carelessly in his presence.

We should tread life's pathway joyfully. Perchance this entered not into the conception of Moses as much as it should into ours. His heart was doubtless filled with reverence partaking largely of the element of fear. We have seen more clearly the love and tenderness of God is our Lord. We should be filled with joy unbounded, as we realize we are on ground made holy by the Father's presence.

We should tread life's pathway triumphantly. I forget not that at the burning bush Moses was given a great commission, one which struck fear to his heart. At the same time he was given the assurance that God would be with him. We have a right to the comfort and strength which religion brings, yet, even in this message, which is primarily to lead us to devotion, I would not omit entirely that other note, the great ringing commission which comes to all who have truly seen God. If the ground whereon we stand is holy ground we must see to it that nothing shall be done which might pollute this sacred ground.

Jealously must we guard. In love we must make this world fit for the feet of the Eternal God, the God of infinite love and purity and tenderness. Our vision is ours to strengthen us, but to strengthen us for the tasks of service that lie ahead. Ever we follow One who came not to be ministered unto but to minister. With him, who has overcome the world, we can go forward triumphantly.

Today you stand on holy ground. Tomorrow, and tomorrow, and tomorrow you will be on holy ground, on ground made sacred by the presence of God. Horace Tracy Pitkin, that brilliant son of Yale who went out to China and there laid down his life for Christ, had been touched by the spirit of Christ and saw things in proper perspective. In his college days he used to don his flannels and go out each morning to play tennis, saying to his companions as he went: "One more set for China and for Christ!" There is the true spirit! Can you say: One more column of figures for Christ! One more case at court for Christ! One more sick call for Christ! Yes, why not? If we do it at all, it should be done for Christ. If we can not do it for him, it should not be done.

Thus Paul sums up the Christian attitude: "Whether, therefore, ye eat or drink, or whatsoever ye do, do all to the glory of God."

Let us turn aside to see, to see and hear God, and to realize that the ground whereon we stand is in very truth holy ground. Let us walk reverently, joyfully, triumphantly.—Christian Herald.

MONDAY

"THE GOD OF HOPE"—Rom. 15:8-13. God is characterized by hope; it is a quenchless, eternal quality of his being. And so he is the source of hope, he imparts hope to men, he is "the great luminary at which we light all our lamps for our appointed ways." He enables us to see what God entertains for us, the wonderful vistas of possibility by divine grace. And this day of confusion and depression needs men whose faces glow with confidence and whose spirits are clothed with unquenchable hope.

TUESDAY

THE KINGSHIP OF CHRIST—Rev. 19:11-16. "A name written, King of kings and Lord of lords." But Jesus did not appear to be kingly; he had not a throne, no royal retinue or extravagant court. Where and of what sort is his kingdom? Let us remember that the greatest and truest kings have been uncrowned and their kingdoms have been invisible. A psalmist declared concerning the Messiah, "A scepter of righteousness is the scepter of his kingdom."

WEDNESDAY

THE MORE EXCELLENT WAY—1 Cor. 12:27. "And moreover a more excellent way show I unto you." Paul has enumerated and evaluated the various gifts and admonished Christians at Corinth to see earnestly the best gifts. Yet, he says, there is something vastly more important than these gifts, desirable as they are, and that is love. Rather than strive about talents and qualifications, let us love one another. That is what Paul points out as the "more excellent way", or rather, as the American Revision translates it, "a more excellent way".

THURSDAY

THE SECRET OF POWER—Matt. 6:5-8. "Pray to thy Father which is in secret." The man who has no secret meeting place with God has no power with God. There must be the utmost sincerity and genuineness before the heart can be clothed with power, and it is difficult to acquire and maintain that quality when we are only given to public prayer; we are so prone to pray to be seen of men, and to indulge in mumbled petitions and bloodless prayers.

FRIDAY

WALKING BY FAITH—2 Cor. 5:1-9. "For we walk by faith, not by sight." It is very largely true in all our relations in life—we walk by faith. We would not get far in business, in social affairs, in education or in the home without faith. But faith is indispensable in religion. Only by faith is the Christian enabled to feel assured that God is in the shadows, keeping watch above his own. It is faith that fills life with a confident, triumphant song.

SATURDAY

CHRIST'S COMMANDMENT—John 15:8-14. "This is my commandment, that ye love one another." Here Jesus at once sets forth the most difficult thing to universally do and yet the most vital thing in life. Love exalts and glorifies the humblest persons and the most commonplace things. If we were really to obey the commandment of Christ, we would possess our souls with a love passion like his own, set about making all men our brothers and discover the sublimity of life in the service of others.

SUNDAY

"FOLLOW ME."—Matt. 4:18-22; 9:9. Jesus saw behind the fishermen and the tax gatherer men of great and immortal worth. He saw the splendid qualities in these rough men with their fishing tackles and boats and in that despised publican. He did not upbraid Matthew for his dishonesty, nor Peter and his associates for their roughness, but he loved them and said, "Follow me". He still loves men in spite of their unloveliness and sin and invites them to follow him. To accept means to share his victories and glories through eternity, to refuse means to lose all.—G. S. B.

LESSON LIGHTS

The Nameless Saint

What was his name? I do not know his name.

I only know he heard God's voice and came, Brought all he had across the sea

To live and work for God and me;

Felled the ungracious oak;

Dragged from the soil

With horrid toil

The thrice gnarled roots and stubborn rock;

With plenty piled the haggard mountain side;

And at the end, without memorial, died, No blaring trumpets sounded out his fame, He lived—he died—I do not know his name.

Is there some desert or some pathless sea Where thou, good God of angels, will send me?

Some oak for me to rend; some sod,

Some rock for me to break;

Some handful of his corn to take

And scatter far afield

Till it, in turn, shall yield

Its hundredfold

Of grains of gold

To feed the waiting children of my God?

Show me the desert, father, or the sea,

Is thine enterprise? Great God, send me.

—Hale.

Introductory

We speak of the "prophets" as if they were one class of men, and easily described as "foretellers of future events." But there were prophets of several distinct kinds. Foretelling was but one part of their work and not always an essential part of it. They were the ministers of God to their times; they spoke the message of heaven to the people of their day. Foretelling often entered into their message, but primarily their task was forth-telling the will of God to their age. The call of Elisha is said to have occurred B. C., 909, at Abel-meholah, northwest of Samaria; that of Amos about B. C., 793, at Tekoa, south of Bethlehem; that of Isaiah, B. C., 755, at Jerusalem.

Comments

1 Kings 19:19. Departed thence from Horeb where he had heard God's voice. Elisha. From this time the associate and pupil of Elijah. Twelve yoke of oxen. Not, as some think all attached to one plow, but twelve plows each drawn by one yoke of oxen. The possession of so many valuable animals and servants to drive them, shows Elisha's family to have been rich.

20. Left the oxen, in care of the servants, who could easily care for one extra yoke. There was no hesitation in Elisha. He merely wished to bid his family farewell because he realized the danger in which a prophet stood under the conditions of the time and country.

Amos 7:14. Then answered Amos ... to Amaziah, the powerful priest of Bethel, who was threatening him. No ... prophet's son. That is, he was not a student in any of the prophetic schools. Herdsmen, Shepherd (Am. 1:1). A dresser of sycamore trees. Not our sycamore. The tree bore figs of a poor quality which must be punctured to let an insect which infested them escape, and so render them eatable.

15. Jehovah took me ... said unto me, I care not for your threats for I am doing Jehovah's work at Jehovah's express command, at the exact place where Jehovah commanded me.

Isa. 6:1. I saw. In a vision. Isaiah was standing in the court of the temple, looking toward the Holy Place and the Most Holy Place. High and lifted up. Far above all kings, all nature, all powers and principalities—in goodness, in power and in glory. The prophet in his vision saw no roof of the temple, but a glorious throne based upon the temple area and towering in splendor to the skies. And his train. His royal robes, resplendent and flowing, as an expression of his glory. Filled the temple. Solomon's temple.

2. Seraphim, "flame-bearers," "burning ones." Compare the cloven flames of the Day of Pentecost, the symbol of the Holy Spirit who sent out the disciples to convert the world. Each one had six wings. The first pair indicate reverence, hiding from their eyes the vision of Jehovah. The second pair signify self-forgetfulness. The third pair, upon which the seraph was poised (all the wings were used when the seraph went on an errand), signify active service.

3. One cried unto another. Their praises were responsive. Holy means perfectly righteous, the pure character of deity contrasted with the sinfulness of men. Repeated three times for solemn emphasis.

5. Then said I, Woe is me! Isaiah's vision of God is now followed by a vision of himself. For I am undone. The vision of God, that would have been a high honor if Isaiah had been worthy of it, was felt by him in his consciousness of sin to be a stern condemnation. A people of unclean lips. Even at the beginning of his ministry, Isaiah thought in large terms, not merely of himself but of his people. Their uncleanness befouled him, and he shared the responsibility of their sins. For mine eyes have seen the King, Jehovah of hosts. It was the belief of the Hebrews that no one could see God and live; see Ex. 33:20; Judges 13:22, 23, etc. Least of all could a being so sinful as Isaiah felt himself to be expect to live after a vision of the holy God.

6. A live coal, or "a glowing stone." "In the household where cakes had to be baked, or milk boiled ... or in fifty similar applications of fire, a glowing stone taken off the hearth was the invariable instrument.

7. And he touched my mouth with it. This was a divine intimation of the mighty things that Isaiah was to do with his power of speech. And said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips. Isaiah's lips could not be laid on the altar and so sacrificed to God, but in the hot stone the altar was brought to his lips, which thus were sacrificed.

8. Whom shall I send? "God wants volunteers, not conscripts." Send me. Isaiah felt himself, with his sin removed, both fit and able for service, and wanted to show his gratitude for what had been done for him. —Illustrated Quarterly.

God Calls and Our Answer

We are apt to think that if calls came to us with the distinctness with which they came to men of the olden time we should readily and gladly respond. If anything as dramatic as the vision Isaiah had could be duplicated in our experience we, too, would be overwhelmed with a sense of God's presence and of our own unworthiness to be commissioned by him. If, again, as we were pursuing our commonplace avocations, a majestic and gracious person should appear beside our boats, our counters, close to our office desks, we, too, would be quite willing to drop our numerous interests and rise up and follow him. But are we right in thinking that the heavenly world does not press in upon our lives today, that the Son of Man is not walking through our streets as he went up and down the highway of Galilee?—Alice D. Adams.

"The love of God that acted so promptly on Isaiah's behalf has been better than prompt in dealing with you. Even now your sin, too, shall be done away, and your iniquity be purged. Then shall you too enter with calm confidence and happy anticipations upon your proper mission in life, and go forth to carry to others the blessing that has brought peace and tranquility to your own ransomed heart. You too with grateful love shall respond to the divine call, and consecrate yourself to the service of the Purifier, as you cry, 'Here am I, send me!'"

HOW LAZY CAN A MINISTER BE?

A recent survey of the ministry in one of the larger denominations and a collection of official opinions as to the principal reasons for ministerial failure reveal a surprising unanimity in the judgment that more ministers fail on account of laziness than for any other reason. The minister has no immediate boss to see that he puts in full time on the job. And if he is the kind of person who is disposed to be easy on himself, he can begin late and quit early and still comfort himself with the delusion that he is doing a great deal because he is doing a great many different kinds of things. Anyone who has had pastoral experience will be inclined to challenge the statement that the minister has no boss; he has as many as there are members of his congregation, plus the bishops, secretaries, and other ecclesiastical higher-ups in his area, plus all the boosters of civic enterprises and the promoters of good causes who want the support of the church. But though these bosses are many, they are not organized and neither any one of

ACTING CHAIRMAN

For Lookout Committees

How often we find in our Christian Endeavor societies a scarcity of chairmen to make up our committees! I suggest the following plan for the lookout committee to use, with the result that it will develop prospective chairmen.

The second month in the year (or, in fact, begin at any month) designate one member of the committee to be the chairman for the month. This will involve such duties as follow: keep record of attendance and participation at the Sunday and mid-week services; make a suitable poster for the month, one on which perhaps the attendance of the members can be continually kept before them; call for committee meeting; make out report for business meeting signed as "Acting Chairman."

The next month designate another member, and so on till each member has been chairman. Thus there can be a keen competition for good reports and practical ways of growth.

AN OVERNIGHT HIKE

President of the Virginia Christian Endeavor Union

The appeal of walking is still strong to many persons, and undoubtedly Intermediate Christian Endeavorers would be interested in an overnight hike. The idea is this: start from a given point early in the afternoon so as to make the destination by nightfall.

If the older persons who are to chaperon the party do not feel like taking the walk they can ride ahead in a car. Upon arrival of the hikers, at the cabin, bungalow, or what not, have a brief rest period. Then let the group turn to getting supper. After the meal is enjoyed have conversation and then outdoor games, closing with a Christian Endeavor prayer meeting of twenty minutes' duration.

Have a sunrise service. Then eat breakfast. This will enable the members to hike back to their homes by nightfall.

SANDUSKY CURTIS.

POWER IN THE CONSECRATION

Our Christian Endeavor consecration meetings ought to be the very best meetings of the year. They have the best themes—subjects that are varied and attractive, but all of them profoundly spiritual and inspiring. Then, they have the plan which is most certain to bring about good meetings, that is, they insist on some contribution from every member of the society. These two elements cannot fail to make a meeting shine.

Upon the leader of a consecration meeting rests a blessed responsibility. He should pray very earnestly that his meeting may lead all the members closer to Christ. He should not regard it as his meeting, but as Christ's meeting, in which he is only Christ's assistant. As he is led by Christ, thus alone can he lead the meeting helpfully.

Get a bright plan for the meeting. Introduce some new feature, or at least some feature that has not been used recently, nothing bizarre, which would be quite out of character with the meeting, but some method which, while reverent, will lift the meeting out of the rut. In the United Society's pamphlet, "Our Crowning Meeting", a large number of these plans are described, and with every consecration meeting one of them is given in this paper.

Then, having formed your plan, advertise it. Begin announcing it well in advance, two or three weeks in advance, and announce it clearly in every later meeting of the society. Show yourself to be in earnest, and the other members of the society will come to be in earnest with you.

ELLA W. MORSS.

WRITTEN WORK

For Prayer-Meeting Committees

It adds much to the substance of a meeting and to the members' feeling that it is worth while if once each evening some written work is given. All our topics furnish fine themes for essays, and some of the society are good at writing essays. Be ingenious, however, in devising different kinds of written work. Now it may be a letter on the subject, written from some imaginary character to another. Now it may be a poem on the subject, if some member of the society is good at verses. Now it may be a set of original maxims on the theme of the evening. Again it may be a fable. At another time it may be an illustrative story. Keep these written exercises short, limiting them strictly to lengths appropriate to the size of the society and the time each member should occupy. And always let the leader introduce the written work by calling for it specially.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for October 23)

Great Bible Verses. I Cor. 13:13;
Ps. 23:1

Once upon a time a certain Sunday school teacher told her class of Junior boys and girls, "I will give a prize to the boy or girl who brings in the best story next week. I want you to use as many Bible verses as you can in your story. The person who uses the most Bible verses appropriately in their story will be given the prize."

When they came back the next Sunday each had a story. One of the boys read the following story and it won the prize.

"Once there was a little boy and his mother and father were missionaries. This little boy's name was Joseph. Joseph's father and mother knew a whole lot about the Bible and quoted verses from it nearly every time they talked to anyone it seemed, so as soon as Joseph was old enough to begin memorizing they began teaching him Bible verses, too. Joseph learned many, many verses and even chapters from the Bible.

"One day Joseph's father and mother had to go on a long trip and Joseph was left to stay by himself. When his mother asked him if he was afraid to stay without either of them, he repeated a verse that he had heard her say so often, 'I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me.'

"The mother was so pleased with her little boy that she said to her husband as they started out, 'The blessing of the Lord, it maketh rich, and he addeth no sorrow with it.' If we can keep faithful and believe all things will come out right for we are told, 'A faithful man shall abound with blessings.'

"Joseph watched from the door as his parents started on their journey, then he went back into the house. Everything seemed empty and lonely but Joseph said to himself, 'I am not alone for Jesus said, 'For, lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world.' I'll get my Bible and read some of the verses that I like. I'll read the verses of the 23rd Psalm first. It makes me feel good to read, 'The Lord is my shepherd.'

"Joseph had only read for a very short time when he heard someone at the front door. When he went to the door, he found a poor sick woman there. Joseph said to himself, 'If mother were here she would help this poor woman, I must not send her away,' and again he quoted one of his mother's verses, 'And the servant of the Lord must not strive; but be gentle unto all men.' So, Joseph smiled at the ragged woman at his door and invited her to come in.

"As soon as she was comfortable in the room where mother and daddy always took those who came to them in need, Joseph began telling her about Jesus. He quoted John 3:16, and told many of the stories about Jesus and his disciples. After he had told the story of Jesus, he repeated the twenty-third Psalm and then got his Bible and read to her.

"The poor sick woman was soon feeling better because the little missionary boy had helped her. When she was ready to go, Joseph told her to come back again so that his parents could talk with her. Then she told him, 'I'll come back to talk with your parents, but I do not believe that they could possibly help me any more than you have done!'

"So Joseph started, when just a small boy, to follow in the footsteps of his father and mother in obeying the great commission, 'Go, ye, into all the world and preach the gospel to all creatures.' And he was glad that his parents had taught him so many Bible verses so that he could tell others about Jesus."

An Introduction

By G. C. Carpenter

While this introduction is not necessary yet it is not untimely. At the recent conference at Winona Lake the Home Mission Board promoted the Vice President, Brother H. F. Stuckman, pastor of the First Brethren church of Goshen, Indiana, to the office of President. It was done on motion of the writer who has held the office of President of this board for a long period, perhaps since the occupancy by the late Samuel Lichty. (Of this we are not certain.) The new occupant of this important office needs no introduction to the brotherhood except as the holder of this office, and I bespeak for him the same loyal support as was enjoyed by us for many years. We have had the pleasure of seeing the work of home missions multiplied several times. The annual budget has been quadrupled and more. The interest in home missions has greatly increased until now there are very few churches that do not give an annual offering and many of the churches increase their offering each year.

Much of the increased interest and growth has been due to the faithful efforts put forth by our General Secretary, Brother Wm. A. Gearhart, who has served for a number of years at no small sacrifice. He has been painstaking and persistent and tactful, and far more credit is due him than the brotherhood knows. He was elected to serve another year. We have only praise and gratitude for the entire board has been loyal and ready to help.

A movement was launched by the home board and the foreign board looking toward effecting a merger of the two boards for the purpose of greater efficiency, the same to be accomplished if possible at the next conference.

Thanksgiving, the time for the annual offering for home missions, is only a few weeks ahead. The openings for new work and the pressing calls for help are many and the response this year ought to surpass all former records. We will hear from our new President, who is an enthusiastic advocate of missions, and from our General Secretary who is always alert to do his best and to lead the whole church to do her best, and let us pray that the response may be generous and in proportion to ability. May this year be the best yet.

LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Tyrol Noble, one of our seniors in the class of 1926, and who has attended somewhat one of the state normals, has gone to Ashland College. Tyrol has made for himself a most splendid reputation here, and we believe that he will also do that at Ashland.

One of the saddest deaths we have suffered here occurred the last week, when the six year old son of our assistant Sunday school superintendent, Zephia Landrum, passed into the great beyond, after a sickness of only a few days. Diphtheria was the cause. There had not been any cases of that nature about us for a long time, and the disease, before it became known what it was, had gotten too far for the anti-toxin to do its work. And for some reason, or purpose, God did not intervene to save the boy's life. Many had prayed for the child to get well, and if that was not our Father's will, for the family to become reconciled to the will of the Father in the matter.

Brother and Sister McDonald, and little son, "Bobby", have arrived, and taken up their work. They are entering into their work enthusiastically, and their coming and work will lift a burden that was getting too heavy for some to bear, as well as taking up some new work that was needing VERY, VERY MUCH TO BE DONE.

The writer's sister, Mrs. L. E. Leiby, her husband, Lorenzo, son Kermit, and friend, of West Salem, Ohio, and Mrs. Zoe Kime and David Garver, of Wooster, Ohio, cousins of the writer, have been recent visitors at Riverside.

H. F. STUCKMAN

Newly-Elected President Home Mission Board

The Men and Women's Bible Class of the Sunday school, have raised the money to enamel the chapel in which we worship. This we believe will add much to the room in different ways.

Brother and Sister McDonald have spent the week end with the Kinzie's at Krypton, and also are to be present with them in their communion there.

Last Monday 194 persons were given the first injection of the anti-toxin as a preventive of diphtheria. Most of the teachers took it, and while the physician thought there would be no reaction from it, in some cases it did give a reaction, making some a bit sick. Our Kermit who died, was a pupil in school.

The work on the new graded road is moving along nicely. It is approaching Lost Creek closer and closer, but none too fast, as all are eager to see it done.

We are now ready to begin our revival meeting beginning tonight. Brother James Cook, the founder of the Krypton mission, will do the preaching. We are looking forward to a splendid meeting. Pray for us. The revival meeting will close with the communion service, Sunday the 16th.

We have now fixed up a room in which to handle the clothing. The floor is cemented, walls whitewashed, and we expect to have a good place for that work. We will dispose of the clothing every Saturday, and if you know where and how to get more of it for the missions, Lost Creek and Krypton, it will help very much both ways, and you are certainly doing a commendable thing in sending it to us.

Recently the writer was invited to address the Home Coming Day program of the Campbell's Brethren church at Lake Odessa, Michigan, Rev. Russell Humbert being the pastor. It was a great day and a great pleasure to us to be again in the home of the pastor, and to meet the splendid people of that church. Their liberality, and the attention which they gave to the messages indicate deep spirituality. It must be a real pleasure to work with such people, and we congratulate both people and pastor on their splendid work for the Lord.

At this same service, it was a great pleasure to meet again Brother and Sister Stephen Smith and family of Plainwell, Michigan, who once were associated with us in the work here. We also met a Mr. Wells, who had visited at Riverside. Meeting again those with whom we had labored, meeting the splendid people of the Campbell Brethren church, their kindness, and especially that of the pastor, made it a day long to be remembered, and we trust profitable in the Lord. ANTI-CHRISTIAN CHINESE ANSWERED

Dr. Cleland B. McAfee, of the McCormick Presbyterian Theological Seminary, Chicago, talked to a group of anti-Christian Chinese students who inquired about the Christian movement in general, and Christianity in particular. He defined the Christian movement as the voluntary effort of Christian believers to make Jesus Christ known everywhere. As voluntary, it has nothing to do with governments or with social programs. It is a movement of ideas, forming its own institutions as it goes along in each land. The four details are:

1. It is an effort of Christian believers to fulfill the wish of the Founder of our Faith;
2. It is an effort to share with others the best that Christians think they have;
3. It is an effort to express the universal nature of the Christian Faith;
4. It is an effort to help in unifying the world.

A brief statement of the Christian faith also was in four items. It is a religion which teaches that:

1. God is a holy, loving Father.
2. In Christ he has provided complete forgiveness for all sins and a perfect example of life;
3. He calls us to a brotherhood around Christ which makes the world good and helpful and happy;
4. He has provided an eternal home of complete holiness and happiness to which he wants us all to go.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

REPORT FROM LONG BEACH

It has been some time since I wrote from this part of the Lord's vineyard, and am glad to report that we are still progressing in spite of vacation time.

We notice that our Sunday school is not as well attended as it might be, owing to the fact that in California, and especially at our beautiful city, not only the wild, wild waves beck and call, but the close proximity of the mountains, with their many lovely canyons, make many alluring attractions for the vacation period.

We rejoice in the fact that seven of our boys from the young preachers' class with Brother Bauman as their teacher, have gone to Ashland College to prepare for real active work—in the service of our King.

How our church misses them because they were always so faithful in the choir and prayer circle.

Our Southern California Conference was the best I believe I ever attended. Every speaker had a timely message and all sessions were well attended. We are grateful that Dr. Jacobs could be with us, and I want the whole Brethren Evangelist family to know that we are proud of him for the wonderful testimony that he gave for our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ.

Our Mission in North Long Beach is progressing very nicely through the past summer. Brother Lienhard is doing a fine work there. The Sunday school attendance averaged about 130 which was very good for the vacation months. We ask an interest in your prayers for this brave band of workers.

We are now eagerly looking forward to the return of our pastor Dr. Bauman. During his absence V. V. Morgan fed us with real Bread from Heaven. Also Brother Homer Kent gave us a live gospel message during his visit to his parents, Brother and Sister A. H. Kent.

HARRY F. LORENZ.

HAGERSTOWN, MARYLAND

After a pleasant vacation spent at Atlantic City and points in Ohio and Indiana including Winona Lake, we are again busy on our field of service in "Maryland, my Maryland." Our General Conference was one of the best and augurs well for the future of the church. One of the most remarkable gatherings in many years preceded our conference at Winona, the World Conference Against Alcoholism.

While at South Bend it was our privilege to preach on Sunday evening at Ardmore to a large audience. Our home church used to be Fairview, but that has been moved and transformed into Ardmore. There were many new faces but a few of the former Fairview workers were present and are still faithfully at work. The new parsonage is one of which a much larger church could well feel proud. The church is fortunate in having a loyal and enthusiastic pastor in the person of Edgar Duker. Our visit to this church brought us many reminders of boyhood days when Fairview flourished. May the Lord continue to bless and prosper the Ardmore church.

Miss Mae Minnich, our faithful church visitor during the summer months, remained with the church here during the vacation time and rendered much help in many ways. The Sunday school enjoyed the largest average attendance for the vacation month in the history of the school. We regret that Miss Minnich cannot remain with us as a permanent helper, as there is so much to be done.

Our communion service on the first Sunday in October was well attended and was impressive and helpful. May the effect be evidenced in greater fruit-bearing by the entire church.

Rally Day is just at hand with Judge F. G. Wagaman, District Judge, as the speaker of the day.

The service being rendered by our church choir deserves special mention. What a help in the church services is splendid music sung by consecrated men and women.

As we begin the seventh year of our labors with this loyal people we pray for divine wisdom and guidance for pastor and church that the will of the Lord may be done. May showers of blessing continue.

G. C. CARPENTER.

ANKENYTOWN, OHIO

The church at Ankenytown, Ohio, has recently had a very spiritually refreshing revival meeting. Brother J. C. Beal, until recently of Sunnyside, Washington, was with us for two weeks, September 19 to October 2. He has been holding meetings for the Evangelistic and Bible Study League in several churches over the brotherhood. His aim was to bring men and women to the Lord Jesus Christ through the preaching and teaching of the Word. The Holy Spirit always honors his Word and this time was no exception. Twelve lives were newly turned to the Lord and one was reconsecrated to his service. Among the twelve was one man seventy-two years of age. This was, indeed, a great victory for the Lord. The success of a revival meeting can never be estimated by numbers, because they are insufficient to express the real revival and help given to the faithful church members. Brother Beal's charts and fine expository Bible teaching served as extremely nourishing spiritual food, of which every Christian enjoys partaking. May God bless very abundantly Brother Beal's efforts in his work for the League and for the Lord. May those newly born into the Kingdom of God be ever sensitive of the in-dwelling Holy Spirit, and yielded to his guardianship.

LESLIE LINDOWER, Pastor.

WASHINGTON, D. C.

Dear Brethren:

Since last we wrote to the Evangelist family we have been in our new quarters well over six months. We are glad to report that during that time splendid progress has been made in all the departments of the church. There is a spirit of enthusiasm among the Washington people that bespeaks a bright future. The new building, though only the first unit of it is completed, is serving us well and we are pleased with it. We are crowded, however, for room and trust it will not be long until we can finish the entire structure. Last Sunday, October the second, was Rally Day. The blessing of the Lord was upon us. We had a merged Sunday school and church service in the morning at which the largest attendance was present since the day of dedication. A splendid program was given. At the close the pastor gave the appeal for decisions for Christ to which two adults and a girl responded. Others promise to follow.

During the past months we have had a number of special services. The Christian Endeavor society took charge of one evening service last spring which proved helpful and interesting. The pastor's Bible class had charge of a men's meeting and one of the number gave a message that we cannot soon forget. On Mother's Day the Women's Missionary Society conducted a beautiful service at which Mrs. Kent gave the address.

We have recently organized a teacher-training class in the Sunday school which is proving its worth. It meets every Monday night. Last Monday night the first examination was given with commendable results. At the beginning of the summer we conducted a Daily Vacation Bible school. Mrs. Kent directed the school and with the cooperation of a splendid group of teachers and helpers the results were most gratifying. The Sunday night following the close of the school the scholars gave an exhibition of their accomplishments and the people marvelled at what little minds can do in so short a time. We look forward to an even better school next summer. During the time the school was in session Mrs. Shack, the Brethren Bible teacher in Kentucky, was here and spoke to the children. She also spoke at one of the Sunday services and at a prayer service. We appreciate more the Kentucky work since her visit.

On July 11 the pastor and his family left Washington for California to visit our home from which we have been absent for two years. Unfortunately on the way out I contracted the "Flu" and the results from that malady prolonged our vacation for over two months. We are glad to report that we are back on the job now feeling fit for the new season's work. Upon our arrival back in Washington we were most happy to find that the loyal folks here had kept the work going so well that the usual summer slump was almost altogether avoided. The Brethren report this the best summer yet. Looks like their pastor was quite unnecessary!

We missed Conference this year very reluctantly. We know that we missed a feast of good things. The Washington church had its quota there and they report a most excellent time.

Next Sunday night, October 9, we shall observe the fall communion. It is hoped that we shall have a splendid gathering present, for it surely means spiritual power to the church. Any visiting Brethren are cordially invited to attend this service as all the services of the church.

We look forward to an evangelistic meeting some time in January with Rev. E. L. Miller of Maurertown, Virginia.

Yours in Service,
HOMER A. KENT Pastor.

GENEVA'S GOLDEN RULE DINNER

"Sir", said Johnson to Boswell, "it is a great thing to dine, with the canons of Christ Church." So it seemed to a small group of Americans who were in Geneva on September eight, a great thing to dine with a goodly company representing twenty-two nations, gathered together because of an intense interest in some specific world problems for which they were endeavoring to find a solution. For the fourth year they were having an International Golden Rule Dinner, and the general theme this year was the task of securing permanent homes for the refugees, who through all the years since the war and the deportation have had no other dwelling place than unhealthful refugee camps.

Among the speakers and guests of honor were Mr. Albert Thomas, who is director of the International Labor Office, one of the outstanding men of France; Senator Justin Godart of Paris, former Minister of Education; Senator Louis de Brouckere of Brussels; the Rt. Hon. Lord Radstock of London, and Charles V. Vickrey of New York. Other distinguished guests were Albin Peyron, Commander of the Salvation Army in France, Mr. Gentle Cackett of the Bible Lands Mission, Society for the Propagation of the Gospel, Dr. Paul Schutz, Secretary of the Orient Missions in Germany, Capt. Gracey of the British Society, "Friends of Armenia", and Mrs. Glarville of the Near East Relief of Australia.

Bishop James Canon, Jr., of Washington, D. C., Dr. and Mrs. Atkinson of New York, and Mrs. Percy V. Pennybacker of Austin, Texas, were of the American group.

The refugees for whose welfare Mr. Thomas, Lord Radstock and other speakers made eloquent pleas were those who had fled from their former homes in Turkey, southward into Syria. To provide homes for those who, following the Smyrna disaster, had sought refuge in Greece, efforts are already being made to redeem the waste lands of that country by draining swamps, and in other sections undertaking irrigation projects. Similar plans are now being made for Syria. The general program includes:

1. The installation at Beirut of a new Armenian quarter to replace the present miserable camp. A credit of three million francs has been granted by the High Commissioner from funds of the Lebanon loaned for this purpose. The site has been bought and housing plans are now being carried out.
2. Making healthy and improving the camps at Aleppo.
3. Draining the marshes at Alexandretta, where six thousand Armenians are camping in wretched huts and are being weakened and decimated by the ravages of malaria and other diseases.
4. The placing in agricultural centers of families of tillers of the soil at present grouped at the camps, with a view to promoting, not only the definite settlement of refugees as farmers or proprietors, but the early complete abolition of the refugee camps.

Experiments which have already been carried out in several agricultural centers have been eminently successful. With a small loan made to the individual families, sufficient to provide a team of oxen; agricultural implements, seeds, and a small "stake", the same result has been secured in Syria and the Lebanon as was proven possible in Greece as a result of the efforts of the Greek Refugee Settlement Commission.

Mr. Vickrey voiced America's interest in the efforts being made in behalf of the refugees as well as its interest in the care of the orphans for whom our country has felt primarily responsible, and who are still dependent on the friends of children. He also expressed his great pleasure at seeing that people of many nations, some of them widely separated geographically, were glad to come together for this simple Golden Rule Meal. It seemed an evidence of the fact that those of all lands and all faiths believe that the world's political ills and physical sufferings and sorrows can be healed through the application of the Golden Rule.

The following Resolution, passed by the International Near East Association, which is composed of twenty-five national societies, was read by the secretary, Mr. Gordon L. Berry, and endorsed by the four hundred guests at the dinner: "Resolved: That we earnestly urge the continued and increasingly general observance of International Golden Rule Sunday (December 4, 1927) as a day when people of all nations, races and religions are asked to give practical expression to the world brotherhood of man, recognizing the eternal obligation of the strong to help the weak, the rich to share with the poor, the employed with the unemployed, and prosperous with those in adversity.

That, while we recognize the right of each donor or national organization to allocate funds according to special personal or national interests and obligations, we respectfully suggest that a substantial portion, if not all, of the Golden Rule contributions of 1927 be made available for child welfare work and the settlement on lands in Syria on a self supporting basis of the Armenian refugees driven from Turkey during the late war and now eking out a miserable existence in the refugee camps in or near Beirut, Aleppo, and other congested centers."

FIRST THING AND LAST THING

Judge Taylor Decides to Make a Fresh Start with His Son

By Mary Merriam Sheldon

"Goodby, mother dear, I'm off to our Sunday night tea at the Sorority house. You know this is a regular feature now, but you and Dad look so cosy I almost hate to go."

"Never mind us, Margaret, have all the good times you can. You know your mother and I never get lonesome if we have each other," said Dad.

"Don't you ever miss me, Dad, when I'm out?" Margaret asked as she put up her face for a kiss. "You good old Dad, you always let me do as I want to."

"Well, you never want to do anything very bad, do you? I want you to have a good time—serious things later on, you know."

"Probably I'll beat Jack home. The Frat boys stay so much later than we girls do."

Judge Taylor closed the door after Margaret and came back into the library. "We don't see much of our children any more, do we, dear? Put down the shades and let's have our tea-table here by the fire—nothing like an open fire, I say, and a wife to help you enjoy it. How some men can stay bachelors all their days is a mystery to me."

It was in a thoughtful mood that the judge resumed the conversation a little later. "Sometimes, dear, I catch a too-serious look in your eyes of late, when I take you unawares. Is there anything in the world to make my wife unhappy? Is not your husband a good provider?"

"Oh, my dear husband! I have everything a woman could wish and so have the children."

"Then there isn't a thing in the world to worry my wife, with a devoted husband and two such children as ours."

"That is just it. Margaret and Jack are so fine, I sometimes feel a terrible responsibility in regard to them. Jack was telling me the other day about a letter Phil Benton had written home from college. The only thing he didn't like was the fact that they had to go to church every Sunday, but he added that the professors were fine and let the boys smoke all they wanted to and they all had smokers together once a week.

He said one freshman fainted away, the smoke was so thick!

"You know I never objected to your smoking," she continued, "but with Jack it seems different. The boys seem to consider it one of the important things of life, especially college life—and then the dislike they have for a church service makes me feel that in some way the whole thought of religion does not belong to the young people of today. Jack used to go to church with Margaret and me, but now it isn't popular for any of the boys to go."

"Now, dear, I am afraid you are showing up some of my weaknesses and I don't want you to think I have any. How long has it been since I went to church with my beautiful wife?"

"Charles, dear, you know I never criticize you, even in my thought, but perhaps you will set Jack a good example now that you see he needs it and make him feel that religion and worship are not just for women and children but that big, fine men, like yourself, need it.

"I have been thinking of something I read not long ago. It was this: 'Religion is the first thing and the last thing, and until a man has found God and has been found by God, he begins at no beginning and works to no end.' That is what I want Jack to realize."

Judge Taylor looked into the earnest face of his wife in silence.

"You know the saying is that a boy can be only what the influence of his mother makes him," she went on. "I have been taking that to heart some, as Jack seems more and more indifferent to religious things. Take today, for example. While Margaret and I were at church he studied his lessons for Monday. After dinner he went for a long drive with Howard Town in his new car. Tonight he is at the Frat house. Nothing very bad about any of it, but the religious side of him has been neglected and I reproach myself for it. I feel that I am letting him drift away from it all and from me.

"I shall never forget when he was a little boy, how, one night, I asked him whom he loved most, adding, 'Do you love mother most,' for I loved to hear him say it. He looked at me and said 'I love Jesus most, then mother.'

"I would give anything in the world if he felt that way now. I believe little children are nearer to the Savior than any one else and I wonder whose fault it is that as they get older they lose that nearness to him."

In spite of her effort to prevent it, a tear rolled down Mrs. Taylor's cheek.

"My dear wife, our little tete a tete supper has certainly taken a serious turn, but I think my eyes have been opened to a few faults of my own, that in my happiness I didn't know I had. I thought I was a good husband and father, but I see I have been putting a pretty big burden on my wife, I am not sure just what my children do think of me. You know after a man has been hearing cases in court all the week, a quiet Sunday morning at home is almost heaven.

"Really, dear, I have never thought much about the effect on the children. I suppose Jack may think he can stay, too, if Dad does. I can hardly blame the boy, either, most services are made to fit old people. I suppose it is hard to preach to children, young people, middle-aged and old and please them all. The young men and women would be my choice to please."

"Oh, Charles, you would have been a wonderful preacher."

"Well, this is what I have been, a very selfish man, giving of my substance, but not of myself. Hundreds of other men do the same thing, leaving their wives to represent them in all church activities. As a judge I can easily condemn myself, you see."

"But Charles dear, I do not condemn you, I love you too much. In only need your help. If we went to church really to worship and to identify ourselves as one of our Savior's disciples, without thinking of being entertained by the music or by the minister, it could be as if we were all alone there with him and come away stronger to do our work in the world. If the children could have the same desire to be recognized as belonging to the church as they have in belonging to the Sorority and Fraternity chapters, for instance, how happy I should be."

"Well," the Judge replied, "this is certainly not an age in which to be ashamed of Christianity, whether young or old. I call myself a Christian, but you are right, children do not ask to come into the world, I am responsible for two, if I neglect their training in any respect, I am not fit to be a father. I have been a lazy Christian, and it has become a habit, perhaps—but there they come!"

"We met at the corner, so I'll take it all back about the boys staying out so much later," said Margaret, as she and Jack laughingly entered the room. "Jack is starved, so I'm off to the kitchen to see what I can find to fill him up. I see only one sandwich left here. Does mother want to help?"

As Mrs. Taylor followed Margaret out of the room, Jack put his arm around her and opened the door for her. "Good mother," he said.

"Say, Dad, we had something new at the Chapter house tonight. Some big gun from New York, a preacher, gave us a talk on religion. Before he got through I must say I was in love with him. Say, Dad, if religion is what he says it is, I don't know but I want it; might as well have all that's coming to you in this world. But I've never heard you say much about it, Dad."

"Jack, your Dad has been a slacker. 'Religion is the first thing and the last thing in a man's life, and you and I are going to find it together.'—Christian Herald.

The motive may be greater than the deed. We may intend to do much better than we do. But what we intend to do may be the true measure of our manhood.

CONFERENCE OF PACIFIST CHURCHES

Members of the Church of the Brethren, the several Mennonite conferences and the Society of Friends are planning their seventh Conference of Pacifist churches for the fourth, fifth and sixth of November next, at North Manchester, Indiana. President Otho Winger and the faculty of Manchester College have generously invited the Conference to the college.

The Conference is expected to further co-operation in work for peace, which is one of the essential principles of the three denominations. We differ about many things, but we are agreed that, as servants of Jesus Christ, we can have no part in war.

Oliver Dryer, secretary of the International Fellowship of Reconciliation, will give the address at the opening meeting, Friday evening, November 4th. He has had remarkable experiences in overcoming hatred and prejudices in Central and Eastern Europe.

On Saturday, the morning and afternoon sessions will be devoted to discussions of the work done during the past year, and plans for the future, with some reports of the activities of other organizations.

Public meetings Saturday evening and Sunday afternoon, November 5th and 6th, are being arranged. The speakers will be announced shortly.

This conference, five years after the Mennonites, Dunkers and Quakers began, at Bluffton College their cooperation in work for peace, is very important, and should be well attended. All members of our three churches are invited.

Further information may be secured from Richard R. Wood, 304 Arch Street, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, the chairman of the Continuation Committee.

them nor all of them together can keep tab on the minister's working hours. In fact, the very multiplicity of bosses of this sort may convince even the most indolent parson that he is worked to death, just as the frequency of appeals for money may give a man the impression that he is very generous even though he never gives anything in response to any of the appeals. But this is only a one-sided statement of the case. Doubtless preachers can be lazy, doubtless some preachers are lazy, but are preachers in general lazy? A writer in one of the Christian Advocates comes to the defense of the profession by reciting a tabulation showing that a minister's year's work requires 379 days of twelve working hours each. The largest single item in this table is 2592 hours for the preparation of 144 sermons. Few preachers, we imagine, preach that many sermons in a year—at least that many upon which they have to spend eighteen solid hours of preparation. But as a matter of fact, there is something radically wrong about any estimate of ministerial activity which puts punching a clock in the foreground. A minister is often most profitably employed when he is just "sitting thinking"—provided he is not just sitting.—The Christian Century.

FOR OUR BOYS AND GIRLS

AN OCTOBER DAY

October day, opal day,
Flash of blue, and mist of gray
Color-shot clouds caught over you,
A maple flame in the heart of you,
Gold in the sunshine and gold in the leaves.
Gold and gray in the fields and sheaves:
An opal alive in the flying year,
Beauty, eternity now and here.

TWO WISHES THAT CAME TRUE

By Emma Florence Bush

One day Esther's big brother Don asked her to go to ride in the automobile with him. He was going on a long trip into the country and, expected to be gone all day. He did not want to go alone. Esther did not care about the ride, for her father was an automobile man and sold cars, and she had lots of rides all the time; but she liked to be with Don. So she ran for her hat and coat, and soon she was sitting beside him on the front seat, and away they went.

Soon they left the city behind them; and when they reached the country, Esther began to be interested. They passed big pastures with cows and horses grazing, now and then they saw a flock of hens beside the road, and sometimes the wagons loaded with things for market and drawn by horses would pass them.

At last they came to the house where Don had business. "I won't be gone long," he said to Esther. "Just climb through those bars and pick the goldenrod and asters you see there. You will have a beautiful bouquet when I come back."

Esther squeezed through the bars and began to pick the flowers. She picked and picked; still Don did not come. At last she had all the flowers she wanted, so she squeezed through the bars again.

"O! O! O!" she said under her breath. Fastened to the branch of a tree was a nice brown pony and a little wicker cart. The pony was old and fat and the cart shabby; but Esther clasped her hands together and said: "O, how I wish I could have a ride behind him!"

She reached through the bars and gathered up her golden-rod and asters and went to put them in the car. When she opened the door she gave a jump, for the automobile robe was moving. Quickly it was pushed aside, uncovering a very red-faced little girl who sat on the floor of the car.

"O, I am so sorry," she said as Esther jumped back. "I didn't mean any harm really. I never had been in an automobile, and I thought I would just sit on the front seat and play I was riding in one. I have always wished to ride in one, you see. Then I heard you coming, and I slipped under the robe and hid. I thought you would go after your brother."

Esther gasped. "And I" she said, "was wishing that I could ride behind a pony, a real live pony."

"Would you like to have a ride?" asked the little girl. "My name is Marguerite Dowling, and it is my own pony and cart. We could ride up and down the lane, and you could see your brother when he comes. I think he will be some time, for I heard him telephoning when I left the house, and he promised some one over the telephone that he would wait at my house for them."

So Marguerite helped Esther into the cart, took the reins and away they went up and down the lane. He was a beautiful pony. He ambled along, stopping every now and then for a mouthful of the long green grass by the side of the road, and after they had been up and down the lane once or twice Marguerite let Esther take the reins. What fun it was to cry "Get-up" and "Whoa" and guide him when they turned.

At last when they approached the automobile they found Don there. He smiled at them as Esther stopped the pony beside the car.

At last when "Oh, Don," she cried, jumping out, "I have had such a beautiful time. I have always wished to drive a pony and now Marguerite has made my wish come true. I wish we could make hers come true too. Just think, she has always wanted to ride in an automobile and never has."

"We can make her wish come true as yours did," laughed Don. "I find I have to drive fifteen miles farther to meet some people who were supposed to meet me here. If Marguerite's mother is willing we will take her with us. I will wait here and you may ask her."

Esther and Marguerite took hold of hands and away they flew. In a few minutes they were back again. Marguerite could go, and Don helped her into the car. The front seat was broad and plenty big enough for all of them. Marguerite's eyes shone like stars and she held Esther's hand tight, while she almost held her breath for joy.

At last the ride was over and they were at Marguerite's home again. But that wasn't the end of the wishes, no indeed, for Don promised that all vacation, once a week he would bring Esther to Marguerite's and they should have first a ride in the pony cart, then a spin in the automobile, so both little girls' wishes would be coming true all summer long.—Christian Advocate.

IN THE SHADOW

WILLIAMS—Richard Williams departed this life June 29th, at the age of fifty-two years. Death resulted from injuries sustained in an automobile accident in which his back was broken. He suffered intensely for almost three weeks during which loving hearts and scientific skill struggled to save his life. During this long vigil, Brother Williams "learned obedience through the things which he suffered" and made a confession of faith in his Lord and Savior. Surviving are his widow and eight children, an aged mother, three sisters, two brothers, and numerous other relatives. Funeral services were conducted by this writer from the Raystown church near Saxton, Pennsylvania.

W. S. CRICK.

CESSNA—W. Watson Cessna died August 31st at the age of seventy-three years, and after an illness of six years. Brother Cessna was a charter member of the Fairview Brethren church, organized in 1896, and which later became the Yellow Creek Brethren church. He was a deacon for many years. He served acceptably two terms as Director of the Poor for Bedford County, Pa., and had a wide acquaintanceship. Four children born to his first wife survive, and his second wife with six children and a stepchild, also survive. Funeral services were in charge of this writer assisted by Rev. Jacob Stayer, elder of the local Church of the Brethren from which the funeral services were held.

W. S. CRICK.

NUNAMAKER—On September 25, 1927, Mrs. Ellen Nunamaker was called home to glory. She was in her 79th year and had lived happily in the home of her daughter, Mrs. James Keadle, since the death of her husband in 1919. When a little girl she confessed Christ and was always loyal to her church, being for many years a faithful member of the First Brethren church of Hagerstown, Md. She leaves her daughter, one sister, four grandchildren and three great grandchildren. She was a good mother and a true friend. Little children loved her sincerely. The funeral service was conducted by the writer assisted by Dr. J. M. Tombaugh and Rev. W. C. Wachter. Interment was made in the Fairview church cemetery.

G. C. CARPENTER.

WOLF—On August 11, 1927 Henry C. Wolf passed to his eternal reward. He was 72 years of age. He leaves his wife, who has been afflicted for a number of years and with whom he had walked nearly fifty years, and one daughter, Mrs. Maud Funk, in whose home he and his wife had lived since leaving the farm a few years ago, also three grandchildren, and two brothers, Jacob and Joseph. For more than thirty years he has been a faithful Christian, most of that time as a member of the First Brethren church of Hagerstown, in which for a number of years he has held with honor the office of deacon. He was a kind and loyal husband and father and a friend to many. He will be greatly missed in the home and in the church, and in the community where he was a highly respected citizen.

In the absence of the pastor, Dr. J. M. Tombaugh conducted the funeral service. Burial was made at Beaver Creek.

G. C. CARPENTER.

JOHNSON—Miss Lillie Johnson, 10 years old, passed to be with her Lord whom she dearly loved on Sunday, October 2, last. Little Lillie has for many years been a regular attendant of the Brethren Sunday school of Washington and was known for her devotion to the school and for her remarkable interest in spiritual things. She has suffered much during the past two years but she endured patiently and to her always during those trying days heaven was not a far off place. She leaves to mourn her passing a devoted mother and father and an elder brother. The writer had charge of the funeral services.

HOMER A. KENT.

BROWN—Mrs. David H. Brown of Washington, D. C., passed to be with her Lord September 11, after a period of several months' illness. Mrs. Brown was born in Washington October 3, 1872. She was united in marriage to David Brown in May, 1891. To this union two children were born, Laura and James, both of whom survive. There is also an adopted daughter, Marion. These all survive the deceased, together with her husband and a great host of friends. Mrs. Brown has long lived a consistent Christian life, for a long period being a member of the Washington Brethren church, where her presence was an inspiration to so many. In the closing days and hours of her life her faith remained strong in the Lord Jesus. Surely her reward will be great for she was faithful unto him who has promised. HOMER A. KENT.

CLEMMER—Oren Wells Clemmer was born near Sidney, Indiana July 3, 1870 and died at his home in La Verne, Calif., September 6, 1927, aged 56 years, 2 months and 4 days.

He grew to manhood in the vicinity of the place of his birth, sharing the experiences common to the boys on the farm. The first great sorrow which came into his life was the death of his mother when he was a young man. After completing the high school course at Sidney he entered Purdue University and graduated with honor. He taught school for a number of years and assisted in the surveyor's office for twelve years more. The last years he operated a thriving electrical business in La Verne, California.

July 9, 1893 he married Miss Elizabeth I. Fisher. They made their home in Indiana until 1918 when they removed to California. Mr. Clemmer is the last of the family by the name of Clemmer to survive except his beloved companion.

He and his wife united with the First Brethren church of Sidney, Indiana, March 21, 1904 and have always been active workers in the churches where they lived, at Sidney and Warsaw, Indiana and La Verne, California.

As a husband he was kind and thoughtful, a real companion. As a citizen he was loyal to the best interests of the community and nation. As a business man he was honorable in all his dealings. He was active in the local Chamber of Commerce and a member of the community committee which provides the annual lecture course. His early passing is sincerely regretted by all who knew him. In the absence of the pastor the services were conducted by Rev. A. V. Kimmell of Whittier, assisted by Elder Rothrock of the Church of the Brethren, of La Verne.

The Changing Times

Every day we are hearing from pulpit and press about the changing times, and of course the fact is as indisputable as it is self-evident. One of the changes most widely commented upon in religious circles is the change in the attitude between the denominations. Within the memory of many now living the different churches spent more time fighting one another than they did in fighting the common enemy of all righteousness. Bishop Joseph F. Berry of the Methodist Episcopal church recently brought out this point in an address before the Detroit conference by the following quotation from a hymn of ten verses which the fathers used to sing:

"I'd rather be a Baptist
And wear a shining face,
Than be a dirty Methodist
And fall away from grace.
"I'd rather be a Methodist
And talk about free grace,
Than be a hardshelled Calvinist
And damn near half the race."

Many rejoice with the bishop that the times have changed in this regard, and that now we are singing with much truth and understanding:

"We are not divided,
All one body we,
One in hope and doctrine,
One in charity."

We do not go so far however in expressing approval of this tendency as to advocate the uselessness of denominations and the union of all God's people in one great church. We believe the disadvantage of such a procedure would greatly outweigh the advantages. At present it is evidently very impracticable, and we doubt if it will ever be otherwise. Moreover we believe Christendom would stand to lose considerably of its richness and variety of experience, of its sum total of highly valuable religious truth conserved by means of denominational pleas and polity, and of adaptability to various types of people. There are some communities where fewer denominations, or possibly only one, would be a god-send, but to advocate such a policy as a general practice is to waste effort on an ideal that is neither practicable nor desirable in this present age.

Let us thank God that the spirit of fraternity and cooperation has largely supplanted the spirit of bitterness and competition among the churches, and that it is destined more and more to do so. But let us not be deceived by the much talked of advantages of greater audiences, economy of equipment and the increased power of a united front on the world. There might be a few audiences somewhat increased in size, but taking it in the large the number of worshipers would be greatly decreased. The variety of appeals would be lessened and the stimulants to church activity would be decreased. Economy there might be in equipment, but it might be at the expense of spirit of sacrifice and the practice of the grace of giving. On the other hand it might result in bringing forward the desire for luxury and extravagance in church equipment.

And as human beings are at present constituted it is not likely that a more effectively united front could be presented to the world with all churches formed into one organized body. Differences in belief could not be settled by a vote to unite. Compelled conformity of belief would result in dissension, and if no conformity of any sort were required the church would soon stand for little or nothing. The line of demarcation between it and the world would be gradually dulled and the church would ere long lose all sense of its divine mission and power. Let us seek to promote the finest spirit of brotherhood and the most effective cooperation on the part of all the forces of Christ, but let us not try to herd all the sheep into one flock; the Master will do that himself in his own good time, even as he has planned. Men cannot do it here and now. Even if it were thinkable that these changing times might make it possible to get all the people of a community into one house of worship regardless of whether they fit together or not, that would not necessarily unite them and make of them an effective working church. It takes more than a group of people to make a church as it takes something more than a bundle of boards to make a barrel.

"Bootlegged Marriage Licenses"

That is what the Cleveland Plain Dealer recently dubbed the marriage licenses granted by Ohio officials to Michigan residents who come to Ohio to avoid the five day delay required in their own state between the application and the granting of the license. And in reality that is what such licenses are, for Ohio law requires that a license to wed must be issued in the county of which the prospective bride is a resident. This metropolitan daily points out that Ohio officials are violating the statutes of their state by the granting of marriage licenses to non-residents of the state, and we would like to add that Ohio ministers who officiate at the weddings of such non-residents become accomplices in the violation. And that is not all, for in case the non-resident couple is from Michigan, or other state having a similar restraint on hasty marriages, the officiating minister is morally responsible for aiding such couple in nullifying a perfectly good statute of their state. The Ohio minister is therefore doubly guilty when he performs a marriage ceremony for Michigan residents who secure bootlegged licenses from Ohio courts—a party to the violation of Ohio law on the one hand and to the evasion of Michigan law on the other.

It might not be worth while mentioning this situation if it were the only place in the United States where it obtains, but it is not. Other parallel or similar situations are numerous, and there is need of warning that ministers shall be cautious in the exercising of their state-appointed right to solemnize marriages. It is as officers of the state that they perform such rites and they should above all other officials show a jealous regard of law enforcement and be examples of law obedience, avoiding even the appearance of violation and never taking advantage of a technicality for the sake of gain.

It is no excuse for a minister to say that he does not know the law regarding the granting of marriage licenses. He is inexcusably negligent if he does not inform himself regarding the law of his state on such matters before he takes upon himself the responsibility of pronouncing a couple "man and wife." And knowing the law, he should insist on knowing that any and all who seek his services have conformed to the law. This is the least he should do as a citizen and officer of the state, and as a Christian and minister of the Gospel he should see to it that the still higher law of Christ regarding marriage and divorce is not violated where his services are to be had.

Is the Ministry an Easy Job?

Many laymen who are not very close to the minister's life often imagine that he has an easy job, and wonder if he really earns a respectable salary. Now infrequently we hear such expressions "How does the preacher spend his time? What does he do between Sundays?" As if preaching two sermons each Sunday was the whole of his task, and they came without effort. It is difficult to make people understand how multitudinous are the duties required of him and how exacting and trying is his work, but they need to be told occasionally by men who know that the ministry has no "snap." Moreover the young man who purposes entering the ministry ought to be made to understand somewhat the nature of the calling, that it is one of the most strenuous kinds of life work. That in no way carries the suggestion that it is a life of drudgery and unpleasantness, for we dare say that the minister who is making a success of his calling finds it most enjoyable, and the sacrifices he is called upon to make bring a deep satisfaction and rich reward. It is safe to say that no man is happier, even though none is harder worked, than the faithful, conscientious minister. It would help to make his work more generally appreciated, however, if it were more widely understood that the preacher rather than being a parasite on society, is one of the most hard-working of its members.

On this point the following words of Dean Charles R. Brown spoken at the opening exercises of Yale Divinity School are confirming. He insists that the pastor of a city church works harder than any other man in the community, and if his life had been thrown more in the rural pastorate he probably would have said as much for the rural church preacher. Especially would it be true of the modern country preacher, the compass of whose task has been greatly enlarged and whose problems are as exacting as those of the city parson. Dean Brown said:

"As a city pastor for many years and now entering my seventeenth year as a member of this faculty, I have naturally rubbed elbows with hundreds of men in law, in medicine, in business, in the work of education, of engineering and of transportation. I would say without a moment's hesitation, and stand ready to defend my claim against all comers, that, comparing averages with averages and exceptions, the faithful, efficient minister in charge of a church works harder than any other man in the community."

And then he warned the young theologians:

"The man who thinks of the ministry as a pious, respectable, but withal rather an easy job had best stop, look and listen. If any man has come to the divinity school with the idea that he will find the work of a minister much less exacting than that of a lawyer or a doctor, a merchant or a manufacturer, a college professor or an engineer, let me stop the car right here and allow him to get out and go back before it is too late. If he goes on with that expectation he is in for a big, thick slice of disappointment."

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Inquiries have been received regarding form letters for the transfer of church membership. The Publishing House has a supply on hand and they are to be had at the rate of 60 cents per hundred by writing the Business Manager, Dr. R. R. Teeter.

We call the attention of Brethren to the Conference of Pacifist churches to be held at North Manchester, Indiana as a guest of Manchester College. We ought to have representation in that conference. We shall be glad to have a report from some brother or sister who may find it possible to attend. The date is November 4 to 6.

Don't follow example blindly. If it is good, it is well to follow it and be inspired to nobler life and conduct by it. But if it is bad, it is inexcusable for us to follow it and by so doing be dwarfed, weakened and handicapped the entire future.

The Christian Endeavorers will find something of special interest on the page devoted to their work this week. The president, Brother E. M. Riddle, sets forth the program for the months of the immediate future, and Miss Price of the Nappanee, Indiana, society gives an excellent report for the Intermediates of that church.

The Evangelist office is in receipt of an announcement of the birth of a little son to Rev. and Mrs. W. S. Crick at New Enterprise, Pennsylvania, on October 9th, 1927. He is to be known by the name Donald Eugene. We congratulate Brother and Sister Crick on this favor of God—all children are that—and pray that the child may grow in strength and stature and in favor with God and man.

The Indiana Brethren evidently enjoyed a great district conference at Loree, as the testimonies in this issue indicate. The secretary, Brother N. V. Leatherman, also supplies us with a copy of the minutes which we gladly publish for the perusal of all interested. A beautiful spirit is said to have pervaded the conference and the Loree people seem to have done themselves proud as entertainers. The conference goes to Goshen next year.

Sunday baseball is a "worldly employment", according to a recent decision of the supreme court of Pennsylvania, and comes under the ban of statute of 1794, prescribing worldly employment on Sunday a misdemeanor and subject to a fine of $4 for each act of violation. But with a fine no larger than the price of a good seat, the statute is not likely to exercise a restraining influence on Sunday playing, unless perchance the state should become really in earnest and threaten to cancel the club's charter for violating it.

Brother S. E. Christiansen, pastor of the church at Allentown, Pennsylvania, where he recently went from the Fairview church near Washington C. H., Ohio, writes of his experiences en route by auto. The Fairview church has suffered a great deal by removal and death, so that there are only a few left, but they are faithful. Brother Gearhart is acting as supply pastor, making the trip from Dayton every two weeks. Brother Christiansen tells of a trip to the Mount Zion church out from Logan, Ohio, where he found the little group of Brethren faithful and aggressive in the Lord's work.

Perhaps Ohioans have not realized that they have a wet and dry fight on their hands this fall in the reference of the Marshall bill to the vote of the people. There has not been much stir about it. It is time the good people were waking up to the fact that the liquor interests were working hard to defeat the bill, which corrects the defect in the Justice of the Peace courts and Mayor's courts as pointed out by the United States Supreme Court, and saves those courts for the protection of the local communities. These courts have proven quite essential to the effective enforcement of Prohibition, and that is why the bootleggers, divekeepers and wet politicians are against them. All friends of good government and law enforcement ought to rally to save the law by ratifying it at the November election.

Communion announcements received too late for inclusion in the classified department are as follows: A change in the date of the Ashland communion service from October 23 to October 30th has been made. This brings the communion service on the Sunday immediately following the College Homecoming Day, the 29th, when many friends of the college will doubtless be present and it is hoped that some will remain over Sunday and enjoy this service with the Ashland brethren. On the same date, October 30th, the church at Sunnyside, Washington, will hold their communion service, beginning at 6:30 P. M. The Ashland meeting is to begin at 7 o'clock. Also the Fairview church and Washington C. H., Ohio will hold their fall communion on the evening of November 6th.

The Evangelist readers will be pleasantly surprised, as was the Editor one day this week, at the receipt of an interesting and fine spirited letter from Dr. J. L. Gillin of the University of Wisconsin. Brother Gillin and wife and only son have entered upon a year of travel around the world, and he very kindly offers to favor us with reports of his observations en route. We shall be increasingly indebted to him for thus sharing with us a portion of what we are sure will be to him a rich experience. While Dr. Gillin has not appeared very frequently in the Evangelist pages in recent years, he has nevertheless kept up his writing until it seems to have become a habit. Just before leaving New York he finished his sixth book since leaving Ashland College in 1907, twenty years ago. We appreciate his remembering Evangelist readers during this period of relaxation and travel.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Christian's Ideal

By A. B. Cover

The Christian life is a constant challenge. It demands the contribution of the highest and best that mankind can produce in the light of its revelation. Peter recognized this truth and in his epistles gives practical admonition whereby response may be made to its appeal. His own life is an example in which the Master Builder takes "loose sand", implied in the name, Simon, and builds it into, Peter, the Rock. When Jesus looked upon his life he saw the possibility wrapped up therein. What he became is expressed in Matthew 16:18, "And I say unto thee, thou art called Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of Hades shall not prevail against it." Peter, the man, was not unlike humanity in general; he had his human weaknesses as "loose sand" implies but these could be moulded and fitted for the Master's use. We may think of him as representative and in him see the reflexes of our human frailties but take courage that under the influences of the same great Master we may be fitted and moulded into channels of usefulness and blessing. Reaching the Christian ideal implies character building and is therefore an arduous task. It is not accomplished in a day but a process that extends through the years. But the ideal of the Christian life and the steps through which it may be attained is expressed in 1 Peter 1:13-21, which we purpose to notice.

In the first part of the Epistle is set forth the character of the Christian's election which gives large assurance for hope—they are begotten by the resurrection of Jesus unto a LIVING HOPE. This hope they are admonished to hold and which we do well to emulate. The exceeding glory of the Christian's inheritance is proclaimed and is attained by faithfulness to him who is the Giver of all Grace. The glory and nature of this inheritance has been foreshadowed in type and prophecy, and from it turns to the way in which it may be attained. Such glorious privileges cannot be looked forward to without awakening a sense of corresponding duties: "Wherefore girding up the loins of your mind, be sober and set your hope perfectly on the grace that is to be brought to you at the revelation of Jesus Christ." No doubt he has in mind the words of the Master, "Let your loins be girted about, and your lamps burning; and be ye yourselves like men looking for their Lord." The coming of the Lord may be sudden; those who would be of his train must be prepared for their summons. Their lamps must be burning with the extra supply of oil, for the unexpected delay, if they would enter with him into the Marriage Supper. "To be girt" in body is a token of readiness for coming duty. Today, are we ready for the summons? Do we witness the evidences of readiness in Christian hope? Without girding, the Oriental with his flowing robes is encumbered; he is not prepared for active work. This is true of us when material things encumber our path of spiritual attainment. The heart of the Christian must be untrammelled with the cares, the affections and the pleasures of the world. He must be free to run the race that is set before him. The Christian's life is no light care; it is serious. The mind is to be trained to exercise self restraint, "be sober." How easily men may be carried into excesses both in word and action! How easy it is to let freedom degenerate into license! So the apostle urges "sobriety" of mind to be cultivated and that it find expression even in their prayers. This is the frame of mind to maintain sound doctrine, "Wherefore gird up the loins of your mind." This is the practical side of truth; the power of things revealed acting upon us in daily life. The power of glory is to make us "gird up", not having a bit of our mind set upon heavenly things and a bit on things below. Whatsoever is not according to the truth, not in the Word, do not love it; cut it off, give it up. Rein in your desires and do not soil your garments in the scene through which you are passing. Shut your eyes to all that dazzles or enchants them here; "watch", keep your eye on the future. He is saying that we are heavenly and shall not let earth's cares or opinions or judgments warp our minds. Be established in the Word, get your thoughts from it regardless of what men may say or think to the contrary.

This is followed by another step which makes believers steadfast. "Set your hope perfectly on the grace that is to be brought unto you." In the early days of Christian-

MORE LIKE THE MASTER

*More like the Master I would ever be,
More of his meekness, more humility;
More zeal to labor, more courage to be true,
More consecration for work he bids me do.*

*More like the Master is my daily prayer;
More strength to carry crosses I must bear;
More earnest effort to bring his kingdom in;
More of his Spirit the wanderer to win.*

*More like the Master I would live and grow;
More of his love to others I would show;
More self-denial like his in Galilee,
More like the Master I long to ever be.*

—Charles H. Gabriel.

HIS GRACE IS KEEPING ME

*I'm in the path of peace where pleasures never cease,
And where my soul delights to be;
All worldly loss is gain,—with Jesus I remain,
For saving grace is keeping me.*

*I lean upon his arm, he shields from every harm;
Sweet songs I sing because I'm free!
His glory lights the way to everlasting day,
Praise God, his grace is keeping me.*

*I know that I shall sing hosanna to my king
When I his blessed face shall see.
I'll dwell forever more on that eternal shore
With him whose grace is keeping me.*

—James Rowe.

ity there were many enticements to cause wavering; there were many trials which made the firm hold on faith difficult to maintain. So they were given the helpful instruction in this Scripture. The hope must be perfect in its nature, unshaken in its firmness, persuaded of the certainty of the future grace, and strengthened by the working of the Spirit. Hope ever brings grace nearer. The revelation of Jesus Christ is progressive to the believer. We get something of grace when we accept Jesus as our Savior, but we learn still more of the boundless store of grace as we grow therein. What is here implied is the free gift of God's grace. It is not a blessing to which the believer can attain by his own power; he can hope for it; he can feel assured that God will bestow it. But when it is received either as present grace to help in present trials, or future grace to be revealed, it is given, brought, bestowed as a gift and its full fruition will be reached at revelation of Jesus Christ. May we then realize his grace in our daily Christian experience and grow into its fulness at his unveiling.

Next upon the ladder of attainment, is that followers of Jesus become children of obedience—the obedience not of slaves but that of children. They are children by virtue of THE NEW BIRTH and obedience gives them a claim upon God's Fatherhood. How often this is overlooked! Dutiful children implicitly obey earthly parents. Christians must seek the docility and trustfulness of the child-like character. They must obey a law other than that of their own wills, for they have taken the "yoke" of Christ. In Ephesians, second chapter and second verse, the unregenerate are called "children of disobedience." Sin is lawlessness, wilfulness, acting apart from God. Those who are begotten of God have his nature and the desire of those should be to obey him. What God looks for in his children is obedience. What God values in his children is subjection; he does not own the kind of love that does not obey. "If a man love me he will keep my words, and the Father will love him" (John 15:23). Obedience pleases our heavenly Father and it marks the pathway that leads heavenward. The power of God within works a mighty change. A change that divorces them from the world, "not fashioning yourselves according to your former lusts." Those addressed sought no further than their own perverted desires for a guide and pattern of life. Now as Christians they must school themselves to say, "Do with me as thou wilt, for I am thine." And he whose grace has begotten them again unto a living hope will help them frame their lives by his rule. He knew that sin had blinded their moral and mental vision and being thus blinded they would sink deeper and deeper into sin; but in Christ they had gained the light that would raise them up. To yield to sin, as is implied in "yielding to former lusts", is to learn to love it, and to be moulded by it. Before knowing God, the unregenerate nature desires other things than those that are Godly, and seeks satisfaction at cisterns that hold no water. Now the desire of the new nature is after God and the indulgence of the flesh is sin. So the Christian is impelled to live the separated life—a changed life, a new life, "not fashioning yourselves according to your former lusts."

Thus far we have followed the Apostle's teaching in the steps that lead to the ideal life, now let us note the high standard set: "Like as he who called you is holy, be ye yourselves also holy in all manner of living." This reminds us of the standard set by Christ, "Be ye therefore perfect even as your Father which is in heaven is perfect." Does the high ideal discourage attainment? No, but with the command he is willing to grant the power to make realization possible. He knows our human frailties. He knows what is in man both of strength and weakness. Here is portrayed what God expects us to become. He desires to restore us again to his likeness which has been marred by sin. "What is man that thou art mindful of him?" That which was God's at first, shall be made God's once more. The marred image on which not even the superscription can be traced, shall again be revealed in full clearness and the believer purged from all defilement of sin by the grace and help of him who says, "Be ye perfect", because he loves to make them so. "Because it is written, ye shall be holy; for I am holy." The Incarnation has brought God nearer to man. God is holy, absolutely so; he dwells in light. When he says, "Become ye holy", it is implied that he intends that we shall be fitted to live in his presence as his companion. This is a high and holy Christian ideal and before we can be holy in practice, we must be so in principle. Before we can have communion with God we must put on his nature. He cannot come down to our level but he can raise us up to his. Or as another put it, "He cannot accommodate himself to the evil propensities of my flesh but he can give me a nature to enjoy him, and set me in the light where he is." This is what God has done for us in the revealing of himself in Jesus Christ, our Lord and Master. In him the believer is sanctified, for "Christ is our sanctification."

The standard set for the Christian implies growth. God gives us his nature, lifts us up into his light, the very light in which he dwells. To live there under his smile, to dwell in his love and thus to assimilate him and become like him. The blood of Jesus is our title to be there; the Holy Spirit our qualification and thus we need not grope in darkness. There are three reasons why saints should be holy: the Father who hath called us is holy; the Son whose blood hath redeemed us is God's holy Son; and the Spirit who indwells is holy. In proportion as the follower lives in the light of God, feeds on Christ who is the source of holiness, and walks in the power of the Holy Spirit will he attain the Christian ideal herein portrayed.

Holiness of life will manifest itself in deepened relationship with the Father, "And if ye call upon the Father." It is a Father you invoke. Who would not try to please a Father who has loved and cared for you? Here God is represented in his Fatherly character as "Judge." He is looking on, taking notice of all, whether there is integrity of purpose, intelligence of mind and desire of heart to please him. He marks each real endeavor to walk uprightly, and where others may misunderstand he cannot. And here we note that those who may call upon him as Father are the children of Obedience. About the Father's will and HIS power to make you holy there need be no fear. He had called us and bidden us strive after holiness. The way is steep but he has promised help for every true need; why fear then of attaining the goal. For the hope realized by Peter when in the house of Cornelius will arm us for every endeavor. "Now I see that God is no respecter of persons; but in every nation he that feareth God and worketh righteousness is accepted with him." Our Judge knows that our lives will be full of faults but fear of him will nerve us to make the effort to attain righteousness. The gospel is a message for all the world alike, the poor and lowly to whom no great deeds are possible may truly live the life of hope. It is not great gifts poured into the treasury from an abundance that have value in his eyes but the gifts which come with a heart's sacrifice—these are precious and receive the blessing. "Pass the time of your sojourning in fear." We are in an enemy's country, but passing through, we shall not be here long; it is not our home. Children of God are not to look upon their lives here as more than a brief pilgrimage—it is a time of sojourning. That which the Christian must guard against is the lure of worldly attractions so that they may not desire to linger in the house of bondage and to think lightly of the peril which constantly surrounds them.

How may the sojourner be preserved from this danger? To hold before them constantly the greatness of salvation. Be in fear of the world and its allurements, "knowing that ye were redeemed not with corruptible things, as silver and gold from your vain manner of life handed down from your fathers." The redemption price for sin has been paid for all men; shall any be willing to tarry in slavery? Ye were redeemed; the work is completed; it is finished. The redemption was made possible by the "precious blood of Jesus." What an appeal this makes for holy living! The cost of redemption was the life of Jesus Christ, the blood of the Son of God. That gives our redemption value; faith gets its preciousness from the blood. For ages the sacrifices had kept before Israel the need of redemption, but in Christ the true fountain was opened. When sin came God provided a sacrifice. In the sacrifice God manifested the true value of souls. Christ "was foreknown before the foundation of the world" as the Lamb to be offered for human redemption. The Word became flesh whom God had appointed to be the sacrifice for sin, and this was the foundation stone of a new creation which is precious in God's sight. We share in the new creation by having the new life and new nature, both derived from Christ. He showed by the signs that he wrought that he was the Savior drawing near to men that they might draw near to him. His lifting upon the Cross spake of the true healing of the souls of all who would look unto him. And when death had done its work upon the human body he was manifested by his resurrection from the dead as the beloved Son of God. So the sojourner with his eye upon the preciousness of redemption, may be preserved from worldly danger.

For whom is this ideal life in Christ Jesus? We aimed to portray the steps thereto as well as the content of the ideal life; now for whom is it? The Scripture considered also answers: "For your sake, who through him are believers in God, he raised him from the dead, and gave him glory; so that your faith and hope might be in God." The believer is made here in a special sense the recipient of grace, he died for "you who believe." "He gave his life for the sheep" (John 10:11). It is through the Lord Jesus Christ that we are brought to believe in God. And so Christ receives and will not cast out those whom the Father has given him. "No man cometh unto the Father but by me." I am the Way, the Truth and the Life." Jesus trusted God in the darkest hour; suffering, shame and death gathered about his path because he proclaimed God in a world where he was dishonored. God submitted him to go to the Cross to suffer and to die as though he were not noticing. His trust. But in that darkest hour, God shone out from his glory and raised him from the dead. He, our Savior, is also our Ideal. May we his followers walk worthily of the high calling we have in Christ Jesus and strive to attain the Christian's ideal, exemplified in him.

Some Facts About Spiritualism

By Rev. W. H. Watson

The beginnings of spiritualism are nearly as ancient as the recorded history of the human race. Egypt was familiar with the magician and probably not unfamiliar with the spiritualistic medium, for Moses, trained in an Egyptian court and acquainted with the learning of the Egyptians, gave the following commandment to Israel: "There shall not be found among you any one that maketh his son or his daughter to pass through the fire, or that useth divination, or an observer of the times, or an enchanter, or a witch or a necromancer. For all that do these things are an abomination unto the Lord." Deut-18:10, 12.

Saul consulted with a spirit medium after his disobedience had led to abandonment by God. Among the Babylonians, Greeks, Romans and other ancient peoples spiritualism is found in varying degrees of prominence. So down through the ages spiritualism has maintained itself, enjoying periods of prosperity and at other times being largely in eclipse.

Modern spiritualism had its beginning in America in 1848. At Hydesville, near Rochester, New York, the famous Fox sisters, Margaret and Kate, living with their parents in a "haunted house", began their activities as spiritualist mediums by claiming to communicate, through mysterious rappings, with the spirit of a murdered man, a certain Chas. Rosma. Excitement in the community ran high, and soon the Fox sisters were in such demand that at their seances they could charge a dollar per "sitter." Following their lead came such prominent mediums and sponsors of the cult as Rev. Stainton Moses in America and Mr. F. W. H. Meyer and Mr. D. D. Hume in Great Britain. Other later leading lights in spiritualism were Mrs. Fay, Mrs. Piper, the Famous Bangs Sisters of Chicago, Eusopia Pallodina, Slade and others. In addition to these far-famed priests and priestesses of modern spiritualism, a great host of lesser lights have plied their wiles with more or less success. If the figures before us are reliable, the adherents of spiritualism are numbered by the millions.

The opportunity and occasion for spiritualism is laid in the almost universal hope for and belief in immortality. The absolute destruction and annihilation of the personality is not a pleasing prospect to the human heart. The eye of the soul is fixed on vistas beyond the tomb. A message from beyond the veil possesses cogent appeal for the mind of man. The passing of our loved ones with the attendant rending of tender ties gives us a deeper interest in the region beyond. The primitive savage and the cultured person of higher civilization with but comparatively few exceptions indulge themselves in a hope of immortality. The belief in spirits, involving the unwarranted fears of ghosts and hobgoblins, superstition, astrology, fortune telling, clairvoyance, crystal gazing, shell hearing, relics and shrines, the work of the magician, dreams, and their interpretation, telepathy, hypnotism, Christian Science, theosophy and the teachings of the psychic research societies all aid in the preparing of the public mind for the teachings of spiritualism. These agencies are the forerunners, the advance agents of spiritualism. Add to these preparatory agencies the mourning millions following the world war and the stage is all set for a great spiritualistic invasion.

Investigators of the cult are likely to differ widely on some points in their attempt to justly appraise the demonstrations given. Some boldly and frankly declare the whole thing to be of satanic origin, deriving its powers from satanic sources. Some account for a large part of the phenomena through the peculiarities of persons psychologically abnormal. Some who have carefully investigated the claims of spiritualism are not ready to categorically deny the possibility that the spirits of the dead may communicate with the living. While they are not ready to deny absolutely such a possibility, they are convinced that the vast bulk, probably 99%, of the phenomena of spiritualism are accounted for by mechanical forces employed, or by conditions of abnormal psychology. In other words, the great bulk of the phenomena is humbug, pure and simple, so proven, by investigation. As evidence of this fact note the following: Margaret Fox (Kane) of the famous Fox sisters confessed, September 24, 1888, that she and her sister Kate had discovered the power of making rapping noises with their toe joints and that the mysterious spirit-rappings had been made in this manner. Rev. Stainton Moses, in giving a seance was most unfortunate in breaking a bottle of phosphorus which accounted for the mysterious lights that frequently floated around the room during his seances. Mrs. Fay, when exposed and reduced to dire straits, offered to go on the stage, and for a satisfactory fee explain all the tricks she had employed in deceiving the thousands who had been converted to spiritualism through her activities. Mrs. Piper gave a certain gentleman extended information about an uncle he never had; information she had taken from an encyclopedia and was written of another man of the same name. Mechanical devices, chemical compounds, the radio, legerdemain and ingenious devices are among the agencies used to fool the unsuspecting victim. In spite of the subtle scheming on the part of the mediums, Dr. Wm. S. Sadler, who has made extended investigations of spiritualism, declares that sooner or later practically every medium is trapped and exposed. But the pathetic thing about it is that thousands of people are duped and trust in this web of fraud, deceit and moral corruption as their religion. They come to be motivated by its low ideals and hoodwinked by its spiritual pretensions.

It is significant that spiritualism has made no great contribution to the moral and spiritual progress of the world. In fact the opposite has been doubtless true. The lives of many mediums have been morally corrupt. With little exception they have succeeded only as they deceived. Then spiritualism has openly taught immorality and has glorified crime. Mr. T. L. Harris, once a spiritualistic medium, testifies that the marriage vow imposes no obligation on the spiritualistic husband. They have been known to abandon their wives, and prefer the company of those of whom the spirits said that they had a closer spiritual affinity to. Mrs. Woodhull, elected three years in succession as president of the Spiritist Societies in America, often lectured in favor of free love; and advocated the abolition of marriage, stigmatizing virtue and responsibility as the two thieves on the cross. She said, "It was the sublime mission of spiritism to deliver humanity from the thralldom of matrimony, and to establish sexual emancipation." The following quotations are from a spiritualistic book, entitled, "Whatever Is, is Right."

"What is evil? Evil does not exist, evil is good."

"What is a lie? A lie is the truth intrinsically; it holds a lawful place in creation, it is a necessity."

"What is vice? Vice and virtue are beautiful in the eyes of the soul."

"What is virtue? Virtue is good and sin is good. There is no difference between Herod the murderer of babes in Bethlehem and Christ the Savior of men."

"What is murder? Murder is good. Murder is a perfectly natural act."

"What are evil spirits? There are no evil spirits. There is no devil and no Christ. Christ and the devil are both alike."

"For not a path on earth is trod
That does not lead the soul to God."

"No matter how bad the path may be, whether it be the path of the liar or the murderer: it is the path of Divine Ordination and Divine Destiny." This is the teaching of spiritualism as set forth in a book circulated among certain advanced spiritualists.

The spirit utterances as given through spirit mediums have contained no great messages such as one might expect from the spirits of great men. It does seem strange though modern mediums profess to get great men like Sir Isaac Newton, George Washington, Abraham Lincoln and Theodore Roosevelt in their seances they never receive any great deliverance of truth. Nothing such as might be expected from these men is ever received. Why do they not express themselves in the terms in which they thought while living. The folly of it all is evident.

Spiritualism is unscientific, for few mediums, if any, will submit to the most exacting scientific tests. They cannot and dare not meet the exactions of scientific investigation.

Spiritualism is anti-Christian. The Scriptures do not countenance spiritualism. Moses condemned it. Deuteronomy 18:10, 12. Isaiah condemned it, Isaiah 8:19, 20. Saul was condemned for consulting the witch of Endor, and the fear of the witch reveals the general attitude toward the practice. It is decidedly opposed to the spirit of Christianity. With them Jesus is a medium instead of a mediator. They repudiate the Bible, admitting that those who reply to them with Scripture are hopeless and they cannot teach them. To gain the confidence of a beginner they may recommend reading the Bible and praying, but the finished product is practically if not entirely an infidel. If demon possession and divination in the New Testament are synonymous with spiritualism, then the New Testament condemnation is sweeping and complete. It is anti-Christian because it denies the inspiration of the Scriptures, the fall of man, the deity of Christ, the atoning value of his death, the existence of a personal devil, and other fundamentals of the Christian faith. Christianity has ever pointed to the highest moral, social and ethical standards and this prince of Ananias can claim no kinship with it. The teachings of spiritualism are a perversion of Christian doctrine; its practices a travesty on Christian ethics.—Evangelical Messenger.

THEIR FATHER'S RELIGION

Charles Lamb once said playfully, "I am determined that my children shall be brought up in their father's religion, if they can find out what it is."

There are a great many modern parents whose children are much more real than the dream-children of Charles Lamb, but whose program for their children's religious education coincides exactly with this remark of Lamb. Their children being unable to discover just what the parent's religion is, naturally adopt the same religion for themselves!—L.—The Northwestern.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Fellowship

By D. A. C. Teeter

TEXT: If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another.—1 John 1:7.

Fellowship means fellow-interest and with the Christian the interest is traced to oneness of life, or spirit, of purpose and aim, through Christ our Lord.

A loving spirit is necessary to fellowship. 1 John 4:12. "A friend loveth at all times, and a brother is born for adversity" (Prov. 17:17). "There is a friend that sticketh closer than a brother" (Prov. 18:24). "Call his name Jesus" (Matt. 1:21). "Behold—a friend of publicans and sinners" (Luke 7:34). Many people today do not appreciate Jesus the friend. He has taught multitudes of men what it is to love with friendship-love. It was thus he revealed the love of the Father. "God so loved the world that he gave his ONLY BEGOTTEN SON" (not a thing, but a person) "that whosoever believeth in him." If we just seek now to love him more and more, then I am sure the believing will spring up and grow stronger.

Christ himself is the foundation of true friendship. We must cherish the thought of him with loyalty. It was so with the Apostle Paul, the persecuting Saul, "who was before a blasphemer and injurious," but having obtained mercy and redemption, he says: "The grace of our Lord was exceeding abundant with faith (toward God) and love (toward men) which is in Christ Jesus." The benefits of friendship with Jesus show themselves in Philipians 4:4-19, which might be called Paul's "Recipe for Joy."

I. Fellowship of Rejoicing

"I rejoice in the Lord greatly," (Phil. 4:10) and I exhort you to "rejoice in the Lord alway" (v. 4). We cannot always rejoice in our circumstances, nor in our Christian work, but we can rejoice in the Lord alway. This epistle was written in prison, yet Paul mentions his joy, or rejoicing, eighteen times. No one has any more right to go about unhappy than he has to go about ill-bred. He owes it to himself, to his friends, to the community in general to live up to his best spiritual possibilities, not only now and then, once or twice a year, or once in a season, but every day and every hour.

"Again I say, rejoice" (v. 4). We ask God to forgive us for our evil thoughts and tempers, but rarely, if ever, for our sadness. Joy is regarded usually as a happy incident of the Christian life, rather than a duty.

The rule by which we may overcome our sadness is to "Rejoice in the Lord!" Not in sin, but "in the Lord," that if we sin "we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous" (1 John 2:1).

Not in sickness, but in "HIMSELF", who "took our infirmities and bore our sickness" (Matt. 8:17).

Not in affliction, but that it is but for a moment and "worketh for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory" (2 Cor. 4:17).

Not in persecution, but that we are "counted worthy to suffer shame for his name" (Acts 5:41).

Not in poverty, but in him, that "all things work together for good to them that love God" (Rom. 8:28).

Not in nature, but in the God of nature who promises, "The mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed: but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed" (Isa. 54:10).

Not in friends, but in the unfailing friend, "Christ Jesus," who has said, "I will never leave thee nor forsake thee" (Heb. 13:5).

Not in the uncertain riches of this world (1 Tim. 6:17), that certainly make themselves wings and fly away (Prov. 23:5), but in the riches of his goodness (Rom. 2:4), the riches of his glory (Rom. 9:23), the riches of his grace (Eph. 2:7), which are from everlasting to everlasting.

Not in Christian work, for thou knowest not which shall prosper, but in "God who giveth the increase" (1 Cor. 3:7).

II. Fellowship of Contentment

"I have learned, in whatsoever state I am, to be content" (v. 11). Content to be abased for Christ's sake (v. 12), content to abound with social fellowship, content to be "full" of temporal blessings, or content to be "hungry" for food, and alone (2 Tim. 4:16, 17).

Happiness is not dependent on outward circumstances. "I wish you a good day," the divine said to the peasant. "Every day is a good day to me, for God sends it," he replied. John Wesley did not always sleep on a bed of down. Jesus had "not where to lay his head." Wesley and Nelson visited Cornwall before Methodism was established there. Nelson in his own laconic style, gives an account of their lodging. "All this time," he says, "Mr. Wesley and I lay on the floor: he had my great coat for a pillow, and I had Burkitt's notes on the New Testament for mine. After being here nearly three weeks one morning about three o'clock, Mr. Wesley turned over, and finding me awake, clapped me on the side saying, 'Brother Nelson, let us be of good cheer. I have one whole side yet, for the skin is off but one side.'"

As they were returning Mr. Wesley stopped his horse to pick blackberries, and said, "Brother Nelson, we ought to be thankful that there are plenty of blackberries, for this is the best country I ever saw to get an appetite, and the worst place to provide means to satisfy it."

III. Fellowship of Strength

"I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me" (Phil. 4:13). How capable was this man of God, surrounded as he was by his enemies of the fiercest character, expecting a violent death at any moment, and yet untroubled among all his dangers and cares, of exhorting his brethren and us, to "be strong in the Lord, and in the power of his might" (Eph. 6:10). You are to measure your possibilities not by what you find in yourself, but by what you find in the Lord, it is Christ which strengtheneth.

Lady Hope says, "Traveling in the west of England, I was very much surprised at one of the stations to see the guard of the train surrounded by seven passengers, each one of whom was plying him with questions which seemed to me difficult to answer. I was amazed at his self-possession. One after another he dealt with, and satisfied them all. When it was over I said to him, 'Well, you must be a wonderful man to keep yourself so calm amidst all this excitement.' 'Not at all, madam,' he answered; 'the peace of God which passeth all understanding, keeps my heart and mind, and I can manage easily enough.' What a testimony! Truly this railway guard knew the secret of quiet amid the whirl of business."

IV. Fellowship of Union

"That ye did communicate with me" (v. 14). This is the friendly fellowship of the church. These who wear the uniform are comrades, rejoicing in their joys and helping by prayer and kindness in all their trouble.

One of the beautiful church hymns sings of this loving fellowship:

"Blest be the tie that binds
Our hearts in Christian love,
The fellowship of kindred minds
Is like to that above.

Before our Father's throne,
We pour our ardent prayers,
Our fears, our hopes, our aims are one,
Our comforts and our cares."

For this spirit of Christian fellowship we need to often and devoutly pray. Spotless indeed will the churches of Christ appear to the world if we shall truly live each for the other. And all for Christ and the sorrowing, suffering, sinning ones whom we can serve in his name.

Winona Lake, Indiana.

ADMIRATION AND ADORATION

(Mark 7:37. They were beyond measure astonished)

Christ's miracles created a three fold reaction in the minds of his audiences. They were astonished, we are told. There is much in nature and life to make us wonder. We speak of the wonders of science—airplanes, movies, surgery, industry, astronomy, biology, etc. It is an age of wonders. There is much to make us pause and think.

The value of wonder is that it excites curiosity. It stimulates enquiry. Carlisle was right when he said that no matter how much a man may know if he loses that sense of wonder his learning is only spectacles with no eyes behind them.

We still wonder at Jesus for he is the miracle of the centuries. We still enquire, for more books are being written about him than upon any other subject in this intellectual age. Yet astonishment is not enough. Many in his audiences soon forget about him.

Some admired him. Wordsworth says we live partly by admiration and this is the message of his poetry, full of the beauty of the earth and sky. To lose the power to admire he says is to die intellectually.

Admiration is more intelligent than wonder. It is to faith what respect is to love. It is more definite also for while wonder is speechless admiration analyses its feelings. It describes the object and acknowledges its power. Moreover it is more personal. We admire an individual when a generalization leaves us cold.

But even admiration is not enough in dealing with Jesus. It is too cold and distant. It is often transient and it does not sufficiently understand. The crowd saw a miracle but were blind to its purpose.

Only a few adored him. It took a long time for the infinite worth of Christ to dawn upon his contemporaries. Mary, Peter, John, Thomas led the way. What is your reaction to Jesus? He asks of you—acceptance of his will, surrender to his claims, and identification with him for service. The Savior of the world can ask no less.—Robert MacGowan.

I call, therefore, a complete and generous education that which fits a man to perform justly, skillfully, and magnanimously all the offices, both private and public, of peace and war.—Milton.

Our Worship Program

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

IMPOSSIBLE DECEPTION—Acts 5:1-5. "Why hath Satan filled thine heart to lie to the Holy Ghost Thou hast not lied unto men, but unto God." It is impossible for men to deceive God. He knows the very thoughts and intents of the heart. He knows us better than we know ourselves. And yet we are continually undertaking to do this impossible thing—lie to God. Every time we attempt to deceive men with our words or acts, we have first outraged God with our evil thoughts. And the pity of it is that we only work havoc on ourselves and deceive no one.

TUESDAY

BOASTING OF SUFFERINGS—2 Cor. 11:21-30. "If I must needs glory, I will glory in the things which concern mine infirmities." There is seldom any excuse for boasting, but Paul was here accommodating himself to his enemies. They were boasting of their attainments and greatness; he says he will boast only of his sufferings for Christ's sake. He boasts not of the things which few may have, but of those things in which all Christians may share. Opportunities for vicarious suffering, sympathy, and spiritual service are on every hand.

WEDNESDAY

IMPROVING THE TIME—Psa. 89:47; Mark 13:32-37. "Remember how short my time is." The Psalmist pleads for help and strength to do God's will in view of the brevity of life. Time is short even for the longest-lived in view of the momentous responsibilities resting upon us. How important that we improve it! It will mean enrichment and service here and glorious and abounding possibilities in eternity.

THURSDAY

STRENGTH FOR THE WAY—Acts 10:34-38. "Who went about doing good." In Peter's sermon before Cornelius he portrays the kindly hearted Son of Man going about Galilee with his eyes beaming with compassion and his heart full of pity, and in an unostentatious way his hands were performing deeds of love and mercy. For this purpose God had anointed him "with the Holy Ghost and with power." The same infinite source from which Christ drew is upon us so that we may go about doing good even as he did.

FRIDAY

DOORS OF OPPORTUNITY—Rev. 3:7-13. "Behold I set before thee an open door." God is ever opening doors before us, and the present is the time to enter them. "Lord, for tomorrow and its needs I do not pray; keep me, my God, just for today." If we are strong for today, we shall be able for tomorrow's tasks. If we are faithful for the immediate duty, we shall be ready for the wider obligations when they come.

SATURDAY

THE BLESSING SUPREME—John 8:12; Matt. 5:13-16. "I am the light of the world." There is nothing that the world needs so badly as the light of the knowledge of God that shines from the face of Jesus Christ. That is the blessing supreme. And the church is become the custodian of that great boon. "Ye are the light of the world," said Jesus. We are to communicate that blessing to the world by magnifying the infinite love of him who is the light of the world.

SUNDAY

TRIUMPHANT FAITH—Daniel 6:10, 11, 20-23. "They found Daniel praying and making supplication before his God." He was warned and threatened with penalty by the highest authority in the land, yet he prayed to his God. It was not stubborn defiance to authority; it was faith in and devotion to God. He had respect for the king, but his heart was attached to God and he trusted him utterly. Such faith is ever triumphant.—G. S. B.

Write it on the church-yard mound,
Where the drink-slain dead are found;
Write it on the gallows high;
Write it for all passers-by;
Where there's drink there's danger.

Write it underneath your feet;
Write it on the busy street;
Write it for the great and small,
In the mansion, cot or hall;
Where there's drink there's danger.

Write it always in the home;
Write it where the drunkards roam;
Year by year, from good and right,
Roving with resistless might,
Where there's drink there's danger.

Write it for the rising youth;
Write it for the cause of truth;
Write it for our fatherland;
Write, 'tis duty's stern command;
Where there's drink there's danger.—Ex.

Introduction

The Prophets are dull reading to many lovers of God's Word. This is because they have very vague ideas of the way in which these prophecies originated and the circumstances that called them forth. With rare exceptions (as of Jeremiah in prison) the prophets first spoke, and afterward wrote their prophecies. Take Amos as an example of this: Amos was from the kingdom of Judah; but his message was not to his own people, but to those of the northern kingdom of Israel. The hostility between these two kingdoms was one of long standing, and made it all the more difficult for Amos to deliver his message in such a way as that it should be accepted. He had to use all the legitimate arts of the true orator to get so much as a hearing.

Read Am. 7:10-13; 1 K. 12:32, 33; 13:1. At the time that he was sent to Bethel, the chief place of idolatrous worship in Israel, the outward condition of the realm of Jeroboam was most promising. Things seemed to go well, and the nation was elated because of its temporal prosperity. No one was inclined to look below the surface of things, to see the corruption, the bribery, the intemperance that prevailed. "Denmark was rotten", but no one wanted to have this rottenness exposed. But the very errand of the faithful prophet was to expose this state of things. It was an ungrateful task at the best, and for one not of that kingdom to perform the task was most difficult. His mission was as delicate as would be that of an Englishman who essayed to show to us our national deficiencies. Remembering this, it is extremely interesting to see how cleverly Amos gat him to his work.

Imagine him, therefore, arriving at Bethel. He wants to reach the people, and have them listen to his words of warning. But to do this he must first win them to his side, if that be possible. So he begins his series of discourses, not with any denunciation of their own sins, but with another part of the general message that God had given him. In a series of discourses (of which only the briefest outlines are given to us), he sets forth God's attitude towards sin, wherever it is found. I imagine that, for example, Amos 1:2-6, inclusive, are the outline of one day's address. This was, of course, elaborated according to circumstances.—Rev. A. E. Schaffer, D. D.

Benefits of Prohibition

"There is probably less violation of the liquor law today than we have had in America for 140 years. Forty-nine fiftieths of all the property that was engaged in the manufacture and sale of liquor is now used for other purposes. Nineteen-twentieths of all the people who used to be engaged in the sale of liquor are now employed in other trades. We hear more about one bootlegger with a single bottle of whiskey in his pocket than we used to hear of hundreds of wide-open saloons plying their trade night and day and all through Sundays in violation of law.

"Will Rogers says, 'The great national question today is, Where are we going to park our cars?' And so it is. Prohibition has brought to the front the average man; has built him a home such as he never saw in his dreams before 1920; has put a modest car at his door and built thousands upon thousands of miles of boulevard to open his way to the fields and flowers; has taken his wife from the washtub and allowed her to rejoice in a washing machine, a vacuum cleaner, and a hundred small conveniences which a few short years ago were the marks of moderate wealth. The prosperity of the sober workman who a few years ago was an object of pity has drawn thousands to his side."

A Straw in the Wind of Prohibition

Remarking that it is "a significant strain to indicate certain tendencies in the prohibition wind," a correspondent sends "The Congregationalist" the circular announcing a great Greek Letter Fraternity Convention to be held this month in New York, calling attention to a paragraph concerning hip flasks.

The paragraph is significant not only for the fact that it suggests a tendency toward better customs, but because it emphasizes what has been repeatedly stated in these columns, that the public press makes a great deal today of incidents that seem unfavorable to prohibition, where in the days of free and open drinking such incidents were hardly noticed and would certainly never have been regarded as public news.

We reproduce the paragraph exactly as it appeared with its strong headline, omitting only the name of the fraternity.

Park your Flask at Home! In the past it had to be an unusually gay party for the newspapers to take notice of it, but nowadays the slightest irregularity in an affair is looked upon as news. Excessive drinking seldom received attention unless other factors were involved. Today the whole world knows of the party where a Greek letter Fraternity is involved, if it is slightly off color. Let us not bring discredit to—and to Fraternities in general! Therefore park your flask at home and "Drink to me only with thine eyes!"—From the Congregationalist for February 10, 1927.

Non-Poisonous: Non-Explosive

"There is subtle point in the letter contributed to a Boston paper, with reference to the serious explosion of a still, involving loss of life.

"Senator Reed of Missouri, and other prominent wets, has discovered that denatured alcohol, as it has been made for twenty years under statute regulation, is now 'wholesale murder', because it does not permit the bootlegger and other criminals to re-distill it, and palm it off as pure whiskey, without endangering the lives of their customers. But these statements have not gone far enough in their philanthropic efforts to protect life and property. This is not the only way in which murder is committed by the bootlegger. They should insist that the law be so changed that denatured alcohol, when redistilled for illegal purposes, shall be non-explosive."

Why Total Abstinence

"We have advanced from the age of the easily controlled horse and vehicle to the powerful gas-driven motor car and are entering the era of the even more dangerous aircraft. As ever mightier machines and forces are brought under the manipulation of individual men and women, ever steadier brains and more sober nerves are needed, not alone for the safety of those who handle such terrific mechanical power, but even more for the mass of their fellow-beings.

"Alcohol is the arch-enemy of the steady nerve and clear vision. . . . The rules of our railroad companies that long before prohibition required their engineers to be total abstainers now apply to the majority of our citizens and will require closer application as science progresses."—Illustrated Quarterly.

OUR DAILY PRAYER

By R. L. Lewas

Shall any pressure, any care
Keep us from our daily prayer?
Shall we grudge the time we spend
With our best, our strongest Friend?
Shall we joy in anything
More than the audience with the King
Let us ample time afford
To this converse with our Lord.
Let us count that pleasure dear
Over all we see or hear;
Need no promise to be true
To the glorious rendezvous;
Keep no watch upon the time
In that interview sublime;
Till—not only once a day—
Ceaselessly we watch and pray!

We live in a world where anybody can start a war which we may have to finish.—

Christian Endeavor for November and December

We are desirous of presenting a few words relative to Christian Endeavor's program for the remaining two months of this year. First, we should keep before us the slogan of this world wide organization, "Personal Acceptance of and Allegiance to Jesus Christ." While seeking to apply this slogan, we will be using the monthly themes to which we are directed by the International Society of Christian Endeavor.

Theme, "Stewardship and Service", for November and December.

1. Emphasize the three-fold meaning of Stewardship, Self, Substance, Service.

2. Study Stewardship. Text—"The Way to the Best", cost twenty-five cents. Order now, have a report made or class organized.

3. Dramatize stewardship. Get list of dialogues from International society. Free to C. E. World subscribers.

4. Enroll Tithers during these two months.

Every society that tries to use this outline, which is only suggestive, will be making a real contribution to the life of their church.

E. M. RIDDLE, President.

The Nappanee Intermediates

The Intermediate Christian Endeavor of the Nappanee church reorganized just recently after having disbanded for nearly a year. The following officers were elected:

President, Helen Price; Vice-President, Marjorie Yoder; Secretary, Recording, John Sechrist; Secretary, Corresponding, Dorothy Price; Treasurer, Gwendolyn Richmond.

There is an approximate enrollment of twenty-seven members and various plans are being made to gain new ones. For instance a "Tag Day" is being arranged for soon, and a contest will begin Sunday evening, October 7, 1927. This contest will consist of two different sides each having a leader who will pilot his members to the end, endeavoring by aid of the others to make his side the winners. Points will be awarded to the different sides for gaining new members, taking part in meetings, extra Bible reading and things of that sort.

The society has not been able as yet to make many definite plans on account of just organizing. However, a great future is prophesied for the Nappanee Christian Endeavor and will be able to send in a more complete report of the work later.

HELEN PRICE.

A MAP THAT TALKS

For Missionary Committees

You've heard map-talks, but here's a map that talks and gives a message not soon forgotten.

Any missionary committee can arrange for this talking map, announce it ahead of time as a feature, and have every one tip-toe with expectation.

Make wooden frame six feet square; cover with wrapping-paper pasted together. Draw on this a rough map of Asia. Cut flaps slightly larger than the human face in each country, such as China, Siam, etc. Paste little strips on backs of flaps to lift them at proper time.

Assign to as many Endeavorers as countries to be heard from interesting bits of missionary information concerning those countries. Station them behind map previous to the meeting, unless concealed ingress is possible. Then at the proper time each will lift his flap, place his face in the opening, and give the information concerning his country, always as though the country were talking as, "This is Japan speaking, with her forty million people and forty thousand heathen temples," etc.

This can be applied to any continent, to home missions in America, to the benevolent work of any denomination with several scattered stations, etc. I have twice used it effectively.

CHARLES L. MASON.

My land is God's land, mountains, rivers wide;

God built it, blest it, gave it, to be the whole earth's pride,

With lofty silent places and prairies for the free—

My land is God's land that goes from sea to sea.

Being Helpful in Our Home Town Rom. 13:7, 8; 15:1, 2

Once upon a time there was a beautiful little town right in the midst of some of the most beautiful hills that ever were. The houses were nice and homey, the little church just seemed to say, "Here you can find lots of friends among my reverent worshipping people", and the hills seemed to say, "Our beauty will help to make you happy, look at us or come up and picnic and frolic over our brows."

Wouldn't you think that such a town would be just perfect? Well, it wasn't quite, and I'll tell you what was wrong. The thing that kept this town from being perfect was its girls and boys. Now isn't that terrible? The trouble was not that the boys and girls were wicked. No, they weren't wicked and they weren't dumb. This is what was wrong with the boys and girls, they couldn't see the beauty of their town or learn to love it. As soon as the boys and girls reached the age of twelve or thirteen, they began saying, "I don't like Forestville. I don't want to stay here. As soon as I am old enough, I am going out into the world to live." And that is what happened, too. Each high school graduate and even sometimes the boys and girls who weren't through high school, packed their belongings and almost broke their parents' hearts by saying, "We'll come back to see you but we will never come back to live. We want to be out in the big world."

So it went for many years. Some of the nicest little homes looked dreary and unhappy for their owners had died and there were no children in the home to keep it beautiful—they had all gone to the cities. If it hadn't been for the strangers who came in, a few each year, and bought houses, the town would have been almost entirely deserted.

And then one day, a beautiful little boy baby was born in one of the homes, and the mother said, "Can it be that this dear little boy will grow up and leave our pretty little town as all the other boys have done?"

The father replied, "How can we keep that from happening?"

The mother looked at the baby and thought and thought, then she said, "I know what we will do, we will teach our boy to love our little town. We won't spend so much time on making money and keeping our house spotless as some have done. Instead we will spend a great deal of time with Jimmy. We will take him up on the hills until he loves them as we do. We will take him to our church and have him feel the beauty of reverence and friendship there. Then we'll share him with these mothers and fathers who have lost their own children so that he will learn to love them and they will learn to love him. We'll make his life so beautiful and so happy that even if he goes out into the world he will want to come back to Forestville to live."

That is just what they did. But as Jimmy grew, he didn't want to go on picnics without his friends and so each year his mother and father took more and more children with them on their picnics and their hikes. So many children were learning to love Forestville besides Jimmy. Finally the time came when one of Jimmy's friends said to him, "When I grow up, I am going out into the world to live."

Jimmy replied, "Oh, why do that? I love Forestville, don't you? I want to see some of the rest of the world but I want to come back to our own little town to live."

Each time that Jimmy heard anyone talk about leaving Forestville, he told them how much he loved Forestville and made them feel like they wanted to come back. And then when Jimmy was in high school, a Forestville Club was formed among the students and Jimmy was president. Now this is what they did in that club: They planned ways of making their own more beautiful, they planned ways of making the people more happy, and they worked together as happily as could be carrying out their plans.

And then when Jimmy and his friends were grown, do you think that they wanted to leave and never come back? Of course not. They went out to see what other people were doing but they came back again. And so, Jimmy and his parents and his friends lived happily ever afterward in their own little town of Forestville.

The Bible Through Chinese Eyes

By Rev. W. H. Oldfield

Missionary of the Christian and Missionary Alliance

The Bible is a unique book, although it is translated into many hundreds of languages—translations which are apparently different, still each translation brings out some new shades of meaning which are both interesting and helpful, all keeping to the original. The Chinese do not read our English Bible, but read the Chinese translation.

Mark 1:4. The English reads, "John did baptize in the wilderness, and preach the baptism of repentance for the remission of sins."

The Chinese reads, "John preached the washing ceremony of sorrow and change."

Galatians 3:27. The English reads, "For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ."

The Chinese reads, "You who have received the washing ceremony into Christ all have put on Christ."

In the Chinese the words mean the putting on of clothes, dressing yourself, and indicate the entire dress. From the head to the heels is clothed upon. And not only does it mean "dress", but it means "best dress", fine garments. So, to the Chinese mind, it means, "You who have received the washing ceremony ought to be dressed up with Christ." People looking at you ought to see the Christlike nature manifest in you. This word for "put on" is a compound word and one of the words in Chinese for putting on of jewelry. It does not only mean to be "dressed up", but to be made beautiful. Christ should be so manifest in us that we will be made beautiful to the world so as to attract many to the Gospel.

Galatians 5:1. The English reads, "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

The Chinese reads, "Since Christ hath set us free and given us liberty, stand firm and do not let the slave yoke pinch you into submission again."

The words "made free" are the words used in China in speaking of liberating a prisoner. In Kwangsi soldiers do police duty, and when they make an arrest they tie the prisoner with chains. So here, these words indicate the taking off of chains. Paul says, "You have been chained by the devil, but now Christ hath set you free. Stand firm, and do not let the slave yoke pinch you into submission again." The yoke of sin rubs and irritates, and when the slave thinks he will try to get free, the yoke presses down on his neck and he is literally pinched into submission. Avoid the possibility of getting the yoke of Satan pressed upon your shoulders again.—From the Alliance Weekly.

A High Caste Indian Speaks for Himself

Pundit P. V. Nair writes as follows: "I am a member of the Travancore royal family, and belong to one of the leading Hindu castes of the South. My parents and relatives are all well-to-do people, exerting a great influence in the south of India. Some of them have also resided in England, on the Continent, and in America. They are very staunch Hindus and look down upon all other religions.

"Many years ago a religious school was founded by members of my family for the training of religious teachers. With other members of my family, I started studying the religious books of the Hindus in the sixth year of my age. I continued my studies in religion until my eighteenth year, when I was awarded the Pundit's degree (professor of religion) . . . I published tracts against Christianity and went forth as an itinerant preacher holding religious discussions and especially opposing Christianity. It was while employed in this latter evil work that, like Saul of Tarsus, I was suddenly laid hold of and convicted of my evil doings in the following manner: A Salvation Army officer was preaching the gospel in the bazaar street when I, with others, started to break up the meeting. I tried to cast a spell on the workers, but failing in this proceeded to stone them. A stone which I threw struck the leader on the neck and wounded him badly. This gave me great satisfaction; but in place of defeating the Christians this very thing proved my undoing. Instead of retaliating or getting angry, the Christian officer fell on his knees and asked the Lord his God to forgive me and make me his servant in order that his name might be glorified. As I listened to this prayer it seemed as if a spell was cast over me. I was unable to move or speak; tears started to my eyes, and my whole being seemed to undergo a great change. Friends soon noticed this, but could not explain it. I began to realize that with all my learning and efforts I had not peace of heart.

"A large gathering of the Nair Society, with a membership of nearly three thousand, was then assembled to clear away all my difficulties, and establish me again in my old faith. Instead of their convincing me, I turned upon them and openly declared before them that I believed there was no salvation to be had except through Jesus Christ. This of course caused a great sensation, and it seemed to them that I had become affected mentally. I left my home and country and went forth telling of my conversion. . . . One night as I slept a vision appeared to me. I saw a board, full of light, painted in different colors. The sign of the Cross was on the top of the board, and the word 'Peace' was written below the Cross, and underneath, 'I am the way, the truth, and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live.' I awoke with great joy and peace, and immediately wrote to my parents and friends telling them of this new experience. My parents replied that they were sorry to hear that this religious malady had increased my mental deficiency.

Below is given a translation from the vernacular of the invitation sent by this young pundit to high government officials to attend the service of his baptism into Jesus Christ.

"Greenfields, Ootacamund," 10th July, 1926.

"Brethren:

"You are aware that I have been a Hindu preacher for the past four years. During many travels in India and Ceylon I have come across various sections of people professing different religions, Hinduism, Mohammedism, Buddhism and Christianity. From my experience I make bold to say that the salvation of mankind can be procured through Jesus Christ, and Jesus Christ alone. So having accepted him as my personal Savior and Lord I have decided to confess him as such publicly, at five o'clock P. M., Saturday, the 17th of this month, in baptism in the Tamil Mission church, Old Ooty.

"I am writing this letter to let you know of this great event.

"Yours in Christ,
 "P. V. NAIR."

SIGNS THAT ISLAM IS ON THE EVE OF ABANDONING METHODS OF MOHAMMED

Bishop Gwynne, of Khartoum, reports a widespread breaking down of Moslem hostility to Christian missions. At the turn of the century, it would have been worth a Moslem's life to join the Christian church. Not so longer. The little handful of converts have suffered no persecution. The Mohammedans who come for treatment to the mission hospital at Omdurman actually welcome Christian instruction, and the very fact that prayers are offered for them every day gives them confidence. The greatest factor in bringing about this change of sentiment, according to Bishop Gwynne, has been the cleanliness of life, the devotion to duty, the honesty and integrity, and the unobtrusive observance of their own religion on the part of the British administrators of the Sudan. This has proved the greatest disintegrating influence in Islam that has ever come into the Sudan. The very discouragement of direct Christian work has been a great incentive to many Moslems to find out for themselves the secret of the power in the lives of these Christian Englishmen. They marvel at their mighty accomplishments in supplanting tyranny and injustice by liberty and honest government, in clothing the waste places with fields of corn and cotton, in inducing barbarous tribes to lay aside their weapons of war and to betake themselves to the tillage of the land. In this Christian way they avenged the death of the great Christian, General Charles Gordon. Rightly does the Bishop of Khartoum reckon these Christian statesmen as "workers in the kingdom of God."

In Mr. Cash's "The Moslem World in Revolution," mention is made of the increasing number of secret believers in Islam. One pasha and member of the old Ottoman parliament was overheard talking of the Christ to twenty Moslems. When asked if he knew the Bible, he said, "Very well. I

Impressions of the Recent Indiana Conference Arranged by the Secretary, N. V. Leatherman

MY IMPRESSIONS

In just a few words, I am to express my impressions of the Indiana Ministerium.

After thirteen years in the ministry of our church, it has just now for the first time been our privilege to be in the Indiana Conference, our home state.

The warm welcome, the harmonious spirit and the burning zeal of these ministers for the interests of our beloved church, have been a real inspiration.

The two ministerial sessions were highly helpful and revealed that the spirit of a dominating attitude among the ministers, is absent.

In the first session, the general discussion, on the subject, "How I became interested in the Ministry" and the second, "My attitude toward my fellow Pastors," revealed the convictions, consecration, admirable and Christ-like spirit of these servants of the Lord.

It has been a joy to participate and fellowship with this body of men and we shall look forward to other worth-while gatherings like this conference has been.

E. M. RIDDLE,
Warsaw, Indiana.

THE W. M. S.

The W. M. S. of the Indiana District met at Loree church with a fine representation of the ladies. 31 societies of the 35 in the district were represented with 194 registrations. Much credit must be given all who helped with the program. The devotions led by Mrs. H. F. Stuckman and Mrs. J. W. Holdeman were very inspiring. Mrs. R. G. Henson of Peru prepared fine music for the sessions. Mr. Childers of Loree, Mr. and Mrs. H. E. Richer of Peru and Mrs. Henson gave special numbers. A paper and discussion on varied programs was very much appreciated as given by Mrs. Laura Keyes of Peru. Also the questions answered by Mrs. Shively were a great help to all.

Indiana W. M. S. is progressing in many ways. This year the missionary support apportionment was raised to 50 cents per member which makes us feel we are getting a little broader vision of the great need in the mission fields. Beside this we have two churches which are supporting missionaries by themselves. Elkhart supports Miss Bickel in Africa and North Manchester supports 2 missionaries on the South American field. Needs for Africa, South America and Kentucky were given and I feel sure that many societies will help in these fields. The district dues of 5 cents per member remain the same this year, making a total of 55 cents per member to be sent to the district secretary.

The new officers for the coming year are, President, Mrs. J. W. Holderman, North Liberty; Vice-President, Mrs. C. G. Wolfe, North Liberty; Secretary-Treasurer, Mrs. Geo. Howell, Goshen.

—By Mrs. S. M. Whetstone, Nappanee, Ind.

THIS YEAR'S CONFERENCE

Commenting on this year's Conference it is with a very great pleasure I noted the splendid attendance, the great spirit of unity, and increased zeal of our people and my heart rejoiced to hear and see God's loyal men and women sending out to the world one challenge after another and working so earnestly together as one great family in his name to preserve for us the purity of his word.

Surely, Loree people have received through this "Feast of Ingathering" a great spiritual uplift—and such unlimited inspiration as never before.

It has given us all new Christian courage and we go forth singing together:

"Faith of our fathers! Living still,
In spite of dungeon, fire and sword,
O how our hearts beat high with joy,
When'er they hear that glorious word!
Faith of our fathers, holy faith!
We will be true to thee till death."

MRS. ORA TURNER.

TO MEMBERS OF INDIANA CONFERENCE

We think this has been one of the best conferences we have ever attended—both spiritually and socially. We want to thank the Loree people for their fine entertainment and sociability shown, and hope and pray Goshen may do as well as they did when you come to Goshen next year. We ask God's blessing on all members of this conference. We extend an invitation to all to come to Goshen next year. We will do the best we can to entertain you.

MR. & MRS. EPH. CULP,
Goshen, Indiana.

IMPRESSIONS OF LOREE CONFERENCE

There are times when we are asked relative to our impressions of a certain conference, we find ourselves saying in conventional terms, "it was the best conference I have ever attended", but when asked why, we find that it was largely inspirational, and that when the inspiration has waned, the value of the conference is spent. Aside from the inspiration received through the splendid fellowship, I look back to the conference just closed and call it good because of the things actually done and plans for the future.

I am happy, indeed, because of the definite plans laid for our young people. We are always glad to be leaders, and with the plans now before us for the advancement of our young folks (and in view of what was done during the last year) I believe that Indiana has started a movement that is destined to be national as concerns the Brethren church.

E. A. DUKER,
Ardmore, South Bend, Indiana.

INDIANA DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Indiana District Conference convened at our Loree church on October 4, 5, and 6. This church is located eight miles south of Peru. It is a distinctly country church and the delegates were all entertained in country homes. This is a very fine country community and every one was well cared for. Meals were served in a nearby vacant garage which made the arrangements very commodious and satisfactory. The Loree church deserves much credit for their part in making this conference a success.

The program was built to fit the needs of our district. We have a Bible Conference in our district at Shipshewana Lake and so feel no particular call to make our business conference a Bible conference. Yet care was exercised in placing men on the program to lead devotions, like Brothers Rench, Flora, Kimmel, Johnson, Parr, Lewis and Swihart who took the matter very seriously in leading us to the throne of grace. In this we were not disappointed, and each in their place did their task well. A sermon was brought each of the three evenings of the conference. The first by Brother F. G. Coleman, Vice Moderator; the second by Brother D. A. C. Teeter; and the closing sermon by Brother J. Raymond Schutz. The rest of the time was given to conference business and discussion.

There were 146 delegates seated. Not quite so many as a year ago when there were 160 at the Warsaw conference. But very good when we consider some of our churches failed to comply with the new conference ruling which makes it necessary for each church to adopt Chapter I of the Manual of Procedure in order to seat their delegates. It is gratifying to note that most of our churches have done so. It is hoped that by next year all shall have done so. Another new ruling in our conference makes all elders permanent members of the conference until they shall remove from the conference or be dismissed for misdemeanor. It is required of all elders seeking membership in the conference that they bring as credentials both a letter from their church and their former district conference credential properly signed. By a two-thirds vote they will be recorded as permanent members. Eight members were thus added to our list this year, making a total of 33 permanent members.

Rev. H. F. Stuckman gave his Moderator's address on Wednesday morning. A committee was immediately appointed to report on the recommendations offered in this address. Their report was as follows:

First: That the recommendation that the local churches use the Manual of Procedure in church government, especially in the use of the Board of Evangelists, be adopted.

Second: That this conference appoint a committee whose task shall be the rewriting and revising the Rules of Indiana Conference.

Third: We urge the heartiest cooperation regarding the Brethren Retreat at Shipshewana Lake. That the outlying churches get the same spirit regarding it as have the Northern churches.

Fourth: That a Committee of ministers be empowered to formulate program and set a day when all the churches will make a drive for Life Recruits.

Fifth: That all the church ordinances be emphasized during the year.

Sixth: That all churches be urged to give the widest recognition to our Institutions.

We further recommend that a committee on propaganda be formed whose duty it shall be to bring such points of interest that are not covered by a special committee, to the attention of the churches.

Respectfully submitted, the Committee: F. G. Coleman, C. A. Stewart and E. A. Duker.

This report was unanimously adopted by the conference and action was taken accordingly.

The Board of Trustees gave a detailed report of the Treasurer of which the following is the sum: Balance reported at last Conference, $1,489.11. Amount received for year, $1,313.09. Additional amount received but not yet banked, $15.00. Total $2,817.20. Total amount paid out by checks $2,222.75. Balance on hand $594.45. Mr. Eph. Culp of Goshen is treasurer of this board. The President, Rev. J. W. Brower of Peru also gave an interesting report of the activities of the Board whose duty it is to care for all our state property of which the Shipshewana Lake project is the chiefest.

The Board of Evangelists mentioned some of their activities during the year and gave encouragement to the churches to use them whenever possible.

The Secretary of the Mission Board presented a printed report of the receipts and disbursements for the year giving a comparative column of last year's receipts along with this year's record for each church. The total receipts for the year were $2,668.02. The total disbursements were $2,668.02. The new apportionment for the year stands the same as last year, 60c per member. The budget for the year is: for Peru $900.00, for Muncie $600.00, for Huntington $480.00 and for Ft. Wayne $400.00.

By order of conference the following statistician's report is submitted with these minutes for publication in the Evangelist. There was a 100% report from the 42 churches of the district which includes three churches of lower Michigan. The report shows 42 church buildings and 12 parsonages, with no other property belonging to congregations. There are 2,803 male members and 3,752 female members, making a total of 6,555. There were added by letter and relation 167, (23 churches reporting); by baptism 410, (33 churches reporting) making total additions 577, (36 churches reporting). The loss by death, letter, etc., was 159, (30 churches reporting), showing a net gain of 418 for the year. There were 40 revivals held during the year. 21 churches reported having prayer meetings with an average each of 25 plus or 536 for the District each prayer meeting. The valuation placed upon our church houses amounts to $458,750.00, and upon the parsonages, $42,800.00. No other property values are reported. The total valuation of our property in the district is $501,550.00. The moneys paid out were as follows: Pastors' salaries $38,954.81, (39 churches reporting); Evangelistic services $4,240.26, (31 churches reporting); Improvements $8,813.82, (22 churches reporting); District missions, $2,122.98, (31 churches reporting); Home missions $2,663.52 (35 churches reporting); Foreign missions $4,581.48 (36 churches reporting); Superannuated ministers $791.09 (25 churches reporting); Brethren Home $365.04 (21 churches reporting); Ashland College $441.64 on Educational Day, and $10,977.69 endowment fund, (20 churches reporting); Miscellaneous $10,348.10. Total paid out $90,814.74. Total amount in treasury March 31, 1927 $11,056.88. Reports gave the names of 101 deacons, 80 deaconesses and 42 elders and ministers.

Rev. J. W. Clark, District Statistician for Indiana.

There was a unanimous decision to hold the Conference next year at the First Brethren church of Goshen, Indiana.

The following resolutions are given in concluding this report of our conference:

"Inasmuch as our heavenly Father has so kindly provided for us during the past year, the members of the Brethren churches of Indiana in their fortieth annual conference assembled at Loree, October 4-6, 1927, do hereby express our feeling and sentiment in the form of the following resolutions:

First: Be it resolved, that we commend the officers of the conference for the program and the execution of the same with such a splendid spirit prevailing.

Second: That we approve our efforts and work of our District evangelists among our churches during the year.

Third: That we as a conference express our appreciation of our District Mission Board for its faithful labors and that we urge the conference to become a praying body in the larger interests of missions.

Fourth: That we extend our hearty thanks to the Loree church and its friends and also to the retiring and incoming pastors for their entertainment during the conference.

Fifth: That churches and the Examining Board be admonished to be very prayerful and diligent in selection and approval of all ministerial candidates for shepherding our churches; because of Paul's injunction, "That in the latter days there will be certain apostate conditions creeping into the flock." A. 20:28-29.

Sixth: That the Brethren give every possible encouragement to law enforcement, especially the Eighteenth Amendment to our Constitution.

Seventh: Finally, be it resolved: That we urge our delegates to conference to return to their churches with a burning fervor with the interests of our church at heart, inspiring their churches to a closer walk with God by definite prayer and Bible study, and thus bringing to pass a real revival spirit.

Respectfully submitted,

DELBERT WHITMER,

O. G. LEWIS,

E. M. RIDDLE.

N. V. LEATHERMAN,
Secretary of Conference.

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Dear Reader:

Before leaving Washington C. H., I had the privilege of holding two services at Mt. Zion church, Logan, Ohio. These Brethren having been without a pastor for more than one year were still continuing faithfully in Sunday school and Young People's work. It is rather difficult to keep up these activities without regular pastoral services. However at Mt. Zion they did not alone keep up in the attendance but they were also repairing and beautifying the church within and without. We often see the neglecting of the house for worship to the benefit for our homes and families. In this case however their church was to be as inviting as their homes.

We have to confess that there are some nice young people in this place of worship, and though it be true that this is a UNION activity yet we find that the staple activities are of the Brethren people. Any fair judge will have to give the Inboden family the main credit for their insistent as well as consistent forward move even in very adverse times. I am hoping to see this work making greater advances to the glory of God and to their own joy and satisfaction. May God's rich blessings aid in this respect.

As for our work in Washington C. H., we will say there are a few faithful Brethren at this place. I say a few because there is just a handful of them. Yet these are those who have made the work possible for some years. Four families are the main stay of this congregation, the Finns, the Junks, the Heglers and Himillers. We could count on their presence as well as their substance. There were some other members but they lived at such a distance so it was nearly impossible for them to be of any help with their presence although some of these were kind and sent money for the support of the work, and a few would drive long distances to attend our communion services each spring and fall. This was much appreciated by pastor and people. I hope the day will come when the prospect of a church in Washington C. H. will be fulfilled not to the excluding of the Fairview church, but as a stronghold and helper to it.

There is a warm place in our heart for the Fairview Brethren. May God bless and over-rule all to his glory and to their good for the saving of many souls.

Our trip to Allentown was long and hard on the whole family. We had our car overhauled and it was said to be in O. K. condition. However we found it to be otherwise. We stopped here and we stopped there; we stopped five times in one forenoon at different garages inquiring the reason for the heating of our engine. We received all kind of information, for which we paid from one to four dollars. We would not have minded this so much if we had gotten results, but after a twenty to fifty mile tryout we would have to stop at another garage. Instead of really looking over the engine carefully as I asked, I think they overlooked it. Later I had the whole engine torn down and discovered that the Buick mechanic who overhauled the machine at Washington C. H. had slipped the oil pipe into the oil pump instead of fastening it to the coupling on the oil pump. This gave the engine only about half enough oil. We are getting over our disturbed feelings and are somewhat normal again, but why cannot mechanics be more careful? And then we are wondering of a wrong connection made by an auto-mechanic can cause so much trouble, what must it mean for those who are set apart for the work of the Lord to be unable to handle aright the Word of Truth.

The Allentown Brethren have treated us very kindly and have spared nothing to make us comfortable. I can not as yet say much about the condition of the church, but I know the field is great and the Master's work is as in other cities, considered rather a secondary matter. MAY GOD OPEN OUR EYES SO THAT WE MAY SEE THE FIELD AND ITS GREAT NEED.

We often speak of Allentown as a small place. This may better be judged by the statement in our local papers, as they were published two weeks ago, announcing that the eleventh day of October was to be celebrated as the One Hundred Thousand Population Anniversary in Allentown, Pennsylvania. This makes our city somewhat larger than many think. As Brethren people in Allentown what a great responsibility is ours. May we all as one in Christ Jesus our Lord try to discharge what he has laid on us to do in this great city. May we as a church here be bound together in the bonds of love to a powerful unit for Christ and his church.

Brethren, pray for us.

NATIONAL CONVENTION OF ANTI-SALOON LEAGUE

Election of a legislative superintendent and attorney to succeed the late Wayne B. Wheeler, and plans for the election in 1928 of a president and Congress favorable to the 18th Amendment, will be the major business to be discussed at the 35th national convention of the Anti-Saloon League of America at Washington, D. C. on December 5, 6, and 7.

This announcement was made this week at Westerville, Ohio, the national headquarters of the League by Dr. F. Scott McBride, General Superintendent. Other major topics to be discussed by the Washington convention will be enforcement procedure for states and local communities, and an educational program to enlighten youth and promote general prohibition observance.

Delegates will attend the convention from all church and temperance organizations in the United States. Sessions will be held at the Mayflower Hotel, at Connecticut Avenue and Seventeenth Street.

Speakers invited include Senator Borah, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Seymour Lowman, William G. McAdoo, Evangeline Booth, Prof. Irving Fisher, Bishop

Edwin H. Hughes, Roger Babson, Dr. J. H. Kellogg, Dan A. Poling, Billy Sunday, Col. Raymond Robbins, Admiral Bullard, Mrs. D. Mable Walker Willebrandt, Mrs. Ella A. Boole, and Senators Bankley and Sheppard.

It is to be hoped that some representatives of the Brethren church or its auxiliaries may be present at this significant convention. We shall welcome a report of the same.—Editor.

have found but one theme like a scarlet thread running through the entire book. "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ, whom thou hast sent." That is what the Bible teaches, and to have eternal life is to know our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. "Are there many like you?" it was asked. "Very many," came the reply. "Where?" "Everywhere!"—Way of Faith.

A SOCIOLOGIST GOES TO SEA

Nineteen years ago it was the privilege of the writer to write a series of articles for the EVANGELIST about our experiences in a trip to Europe. The present notes are by the same writer about his experiences in a trip around the world. If these notes are welcomed in the same way as those of almost twenty years ago, the writer will be repaid for the trouble of sharing with his readers some of the things seen in foreign lands.

Many things have happened since he wrote to the readers of the EVANGELIST about the last trip. Nearly twenty years of University teaching are in his experience. The World War has intervened. A new world so far as civilization is concerned has been ushered in. On the personal side the writer has seen many changes come in his life. Today the son of nine months, whom Mrs. Gillin and I left behind when we went to Europe, is with us to share in this new experience. He has just graduated from the University of Wisconsin. We shall look at many of the things we shall see not only with the eyes of middle age, but because of his presence, through the eyes of youth. Moreover, the personal contact of the writer with the readers of the EVANGELIST is much less close than it was twenty years ago. Then he had just finished two years of work for Ashland College which had taken him into all parts of the brotherhood and led him into the homes of many of our people. Most of the readers then knew personally the writer. Now, there are large numbers to whom the writer is personally unknown, many to whom he is not even a name. However, I hope that what I shall write may be of some interest to even those who have never seen my face.

The Plan of the Trip

The present plan is for Mrs. Gillin and myself to sail by the Dollar Line. We touch at Havana, Panama, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Honolulu, spending perhaps a week at the latter. Then we stop two weeks in Japan, perhaps two weeks in China, if conditions permit us to go to Peking. Then two weeks in the Philippines, two weeks or a month in India, two weeks in Egypt and the Holy Land, a week or two in Greece and the rest of the year in various parts of Europe. I shall try to take my readers with me and tell them about the things I see which seem of interest to me and which I think may be of interest to them.

Havana, Cuba

We sail out of the harbor of New York past the Statue of Liberty in the evening of September 29th. There further up the bay is Ellis Island where we hold up the foreigners who are seeking admission to this country. In the twenty years since we last sailed out of New York harbor for a foreign land many changes in our immigration laws have been made. Then almost anyone who was not insane, a criminal or a pauper was admitted. Today, while the above restrictions remain, foreigners are admitted only on the quota basis, that is, so many per year based on the number of that nationality here at the last census.

In my judgment this law is better than any we have had before, by reason of the fact that we were getting more foreigners than we could assimilate to our ideas and ideals of citizenship. Furthermore, it is a question how long we could continue to admit low-living scale foreigners to compete with our American laborers without depressing wages to a level below a decent standard of living.

But there stands Ellis Island, where incompetent political appointees make American institutions a stench in the nostrils of the newly arrived immigrant. The incompetent official from county board member to deacon or minister is the curse of all our institutions. Men of good will we need. Yes. But perhaps even more the men and women who can do disagreeable things in a pleasant way—in a way that will get results without leaving a sore behind. That it takes some of us a long time to learn.

Out from the gates of the port of New York we sailed as evening fell. Up on the bridge with the captain was a pilot who watched carefully as the man at the wheel guided the ship through the narrow channel that winds deviously beneath the calm surface of the broad bay. It must be followed faithfully, else a boat which draws thirty feet of water will run aground. In your ship have you the Pilot aboard? Then out beyond the Narrows the pilot is dropped. But the captain told me the next day that he had not taken his clothes off that night, for many are the shoals and difficult places which must be watched during the time necessary to get out into the deep waters of the ocean. How like life! Out in the deep waters of God's boundless ocean of love and trust there are fewer dangers.

For the next two days we ran down the coast, often so far out that no land was in sight, but occasionally a light or a lighthouse appeared away off to the right. As we watched one night, the captain pointed out a light away off to the west. That he said is the Cape Hatteras light. Now look a little to the left and you will see a light, which stands on the rocky ledge of rock out from Cape Hatteras, which is known as "The sailor's graveyard." Here in fog and snowstorm many is the ship which has gone down carrying her crew with her. In the moral and spiritual worlds how like is the situation! Dangers lurk, there are lights warning the unwary, but so often they disregard them or have no one to interpret to them the danger which lurks behind the danger sign. I was impressed with that fact in what happened at Havana. The captain knows; the captain will guide, if we allow. How safe we felt! We had shifted our worries and burdens to the shoulders of the captain. He often could not sleep because of the responsibility for a ship worth $4,000,000, a cargo worth $6,000,000 and the lives of a hundred persons. We slept in peace because we had confidence that the captain would look after our welfare. Now, I would not carry the analogy over too far in the spiritual realm, but it occurs to me that for some of us worrying ones, it might be well if we could cast our burdens a little more on the Lord, knowing that he cares for us.

For five days we sailed over the bluest water I have ever seen. It was sometimes like real blue indigo water, such as I used to see my mother prepare on wash day, at other times even bluer, a very dark blue. The days became warmer, less and less clothing was needed. The stewards took off one by one the blankets we had needed when we left New York. We must now let the fans run in our rooms, and sleep with only a sheet over us, just as if it were mid-summer.

Havana

At last ten hours late, we slowly slip into the harbor of Havana. How the entrance recalls the events of thirty years ago, the days of the Spanish-American war. There at the left is the old Morro Castle, within whose walls are the dungeons to which were committed offenders against the cruelty and oppression of the Spanish overlords. I was told that there are torture chambers there in which are to be found all the instruments of torture known in the worst days of the Spanish Inquisition. I do not know, as it was too late for us to visit the old pile. There forty feet from where we anchored is the place where the Maine was sunk, the event which precipitated the war, and resulted in the freeing of Cuba from Spanish abuse and oppression.

There was a great rush to get off the ship. Little boats came alongside and took us over to the city. We hired an auto and took a drive about, even though it was dark. Up through the narrow streets of the old city we slowly crept, then into the brilliantly lighted plaza and on through the streets of a new city with wide streets, beautiful houses and fine shops. Everywhere, however, are liquor shops. In the finest residential districts as well as in the business portions the liquor shop is omnipresent. Thousands were drinking. From later events it was plain that the hurry of some of our ship's party to get ashore was due to the desire to get liquor. The ship was to sail at midnight, so about ten o'clock the crew and passengers began to come back. Mrs. Gillin and I came aboard at 9, and found scarcely anyone here. We tried to sleep, but by 11 P. M. the return was in full sweep. Some had to be carried aboard, some staggered aboard, and others brought a plentiful supply back with them. Of course, most of those who went ashore came back all right, but enough were drunk to make it a night long to be remembered. Say what you please about the failure of Prohibition, there is no doubt that even in Chicago and New York—the wettest parts of the United States,—you could not see such quantities of liquor drunk as you can see in the cafes of Havana, leaving out of account entirely the passengers from a ship which has arrived from dry United States.

Then the young men told me that nearly every other man on the streets is a pimp. They were solicited times without number. Mark it, drink and vice are twins. Let liquor flow freely, and you will give an impetus to the already strong sex impulse that breaks down all restraint. The American occupation by cleaning up Havana swept out the awful scourge of yellow fever, but it did little or nothing to drive out drink and prostitution. I saw only one mosquito in Havana. What shall we say of the scientific discrimination of a people which spends millions to kill off the fever-carrying mosquito, and yet allows to flourish the pimp and the prostitute devoted to the destruction of moral manhood and the spread of disease in comparison with which yellow fever, terrible as it was, was only a circumstance? Yet, the Cuban people are not the only ones whose scale of values is woefully awry. In Jesus' days there were those who tithed mint and anise, and rue, and omitted the weightier matters of the law, mercy, justice and faith.

Out again over the sea. Yonder on the left are the rugged and curiously rounded heads of the Cuban range. Finally the west end of Cuba with its lighthouse sinks into the sea. We are alone in this world of waters, so blue, so illimitable, so strangely mysterious. Day after day, night after night the mighty engines throb on, pushing the ship towards the Canal. The men are at their posts, night and day guiding, watching over our welfare. We eat, sleep and read—or whatever our inclinations lead us to do. I have not had such a rest in forty years. And there are months of it ahead. The Canal is next.

J. L. GILLIN.

An Enforcement Issue in Ohio

The wet interests are fighting for their lives in many and divers ways throughout the length and breadth of this land, but in all their effort they seek to blind the real issue. That has been the history of the liquor traffic and its fight for an existence all through the years. It has never been able to stand out in the open and on its merits, for it has no merits and its ways are the ways of darkness. It has, therefore, ever sought to disguise its true self and to take on the appearance of respectability. We are more familiar with the details of its manoeuvring in Ohio than in other states during the last fifteen years, but what it has done here is a fair sample of what it has done and the methods it has practiced elsewhere. Residents of this state will recall various high-sounding names that were invented in the recent past to serve as decoys to the good and conscientious voters. Among others there were the Personal Liberty League, the Home Rule Association, the Stability League, the Ohio Temperance Union, the Merchants and Manufacturers Association. And now we are hearing of certain new titles, which would seem to indicate very praiseworthy purposes actuating those who are grouped together and operating thereunder. Graham P. Hunt, noted wet leader of Cincinnati, is the attorney, according to a sworn statement on file with the Secretary of State at Columbus, for what is known as the League to Uphold the Taft Decision Against Commercialized Courts. Then there is the Constitutional Law Enforcement League of Ohio, under which the wets, in co-operation with Senator George H. Bender of Cleveland, are working to handicap dry enforcement. One needs only to know who is back of an organization to be able to judge quite accurately its true intent and character. And when such frankly wet leaders as Mr. Hunt, Homer Durand, C. C. Janes and the Moderation League, the Association Against the Prohibition Amendment, the Ohio State Journal and the Cincinnati Enquirer are backing such organizations to the limit, it needs no prophet to tell us that they are wet and that all who are concerned about the enforcement of Prohibition should be on the opposite side.

That is just what is on in Ohio, a Prohibition enforcement issue, in the battle of the wets to destroy the Justice of the Peace courts. Senator Bender claims it is a "campaign to prevent the re-establishment of the corrupt justice shops." The implication is both erroneous and libelous. It is in error in that the Taft decision never destroyed the Justice of the Peace courts and so they need not be re-established. And it is a libel on these inferior courts in that it accuses the whole lot of them, and there are approximately 2,700 Justices' and Mayors' courts in the state, of being corrupt, which also reflects on the good sense and integrity of the people who elect them. There doubtless have been some officials of this class, as there have of every other class, who have been dishonest. But it is claimed by trustworthy authorities that not two per cent of such courts are corrupt. Only thirty of the 2,700 Justices of the Peace in the state have been charged with crime.

The United States Supreme Court's decision handed down by Chief Justice Taft did not strike at the Justice courts but at their method of operation. It pointed out that it was wrong policy to have a Justice's pay hinge upon his finding a defendant guilty. It was to correct this evil that the Marshall bill was passed by the Ohio Legislature. The evil was recognized, however, and the remedy conceived before the Taft decision was read on March 7th, 1927. It was five weeks before, on February first, that Senator L. T. Marshall, a splendid Christian man of Xenia, Ohio, introduced into the legislature a bill designed to correct the very evils that the Taft decision pointed out. It is this bill that has been referred to the vote of the people on November 8th, and it is against this bill that the wets are arrayed.

The wets are bitter against these primary courts because they are the most effective weapon in the hands of the local community for the enforcement of law, and especially the prohibition law. They first tried, through the leadership of Senator Bender to get the Justices' Courts abolished by the legislature, but failed. And now they are trying to prevent the correction of the defect of these Justices of the Peace courts, which defect is the one thing that makes impossible their effective operation since the Supreme Court decision, but whose operation is so essential to the effective enforcement of Prohibition. Without them the Common Pleas courts are already clogged and are a year behind their docket in some counties, and in at least four counties these judges refuse to hear liquor cases, according to State Prohibition Commissioner McDonald. This enforcement officer comes out strongly in favor of the Marshall bill as necessary to the effective operation of Prohibition. The so-called squire's court and constable, who for 119 years have been serving so well the state of Ohio, covering at least sixteen classes of cases, must be saved and kept effective for the defense of the rural districts and towns and the enforcement of Prohibition. The Marshall bill is designed to do this. The issue that is raised is a Prohibition enforcement issue, and the fight is between the defenders of the outlawed liquor traffic and the forces of righteousness and sobriety. The outcome will have more than a local significance. How the church people use the ballot on November 8th will be noted the country over and it will mightily influence the situation in other states, and in the country at large.

Neglectful of the Highest

How neglectful we are! And of the highest and most abiding things as well as of the passing. Mr. William L. Marlin, Regional Manager of the United States Veterans' Bureau, writing from Cleveland, says, "It is astonishing to note that some 600,000 ex-service men eligible for adjusted service compensation have failed to make application." And this, notwithstanding repeated announcements and appeals extending over a period of years and offers of aid freely and gladly extended for those who wish guidance in the filing of applications. Moreover the time has been repeatedly extended during which this matter may be taken care of. And now Mr. Marlin states that "The law provides that applications must be executed prior to January 1, 1928." After that it will be too late, and possibly many of the 600,000 careless or neglectful men will be left out and no longer eligible to this compensation. And when it is too late some may regret it.

There may be various reasons for this failure on the part of many to take advantage of this offer on the part of the government. Some may not appreciate the kind of compensation that is offered, with others it may be pure neglect, but it seems scarcely possible that any have not been informed of the opportunity. However, in this situation there is a parable regarding the attitude of hosts of people towards the spiritual riches and promises of the great Captain of our souls, and that is why we are led to relate it.

He offers men the riches of his grace to insure them against spiritual want and suffering. It is free to all, and the ministers of righteousness are continually proclaiming the offer, but by vast multitudes it is not being accepted. A youth of seventeen hears the proffered opportunity, but he says, "I will wait a few years until I have enjoyed a few of the thrilling ventures and follies of youth and then I will settle down and take advantage of this offer." The young man after a while is married and settles down, but he still hears the agents of the Great One urging that without delay he and all such shall secure their claim to the divine bounty. But he has bought a farm or a business which seems to require his whole attention, and besides the days of possible spiritual want and penury seem so far removed that there is still plenty of time; he will take care of that matter later. And so the days pass without acceptance, and though the warning is often and insistently repeated, it is as often put off until neglect becomes a habit and desire but a flitting impulse—the time of acceptance is past. And the thing they have cheated themselves out of is not a mere pittance to aid them in their declining days of this life, but a guarantee of richness and fullness of life both during this brief span of it and throughout eternity. Truly, how astonishing that men should so neglect their highest interests!

EDITORIAL REVIEW

How many pastors are planning to launch a campaign for the increase of Evangelist subscriptions in their parishes? Write for sample copies.

Christian Endeavorers will find another message in this issue from their newly elected president, Brother E. M. Riddle. Also their vice-president, Brother L. V. King, gives them a helpful message. Read them on Christian Endeavor page.

Dr. J. L. Gillin, who, with his wife and son, has launched upon a year's travel, tells in this issue of some of the books he has read thus far on his way. In his next letter he will have some interesting observations of their passing through the Panama Canal.

Our correspondent from the church at Sergeantsville, New Jersey, recounts some evidences of the faithful perseverance of these good people under the leadership of Brother W. A. Stefler. The purchase of a new Estey two-manual organ is among their accomplishments. The Sunday school is doing good work under aggressive leadership and the Christian Endeavorers are reorganized for more effective service.

It is time to look forward to, to pray for and to make plans for that annual Thanksgiving offering for Home Missions. Nothing is more important for every interest of the church than that the borders of our Zion should be extended and that the Whole Gospel should find place in hitherto unreached communities. We are being challenged by calls on every hand. At this season we shall have our supreme opportunity and most bounden responsibility to face. What shall we do with it?

Brother E. M. Riddle writes of his change in pastorates from Bryan, Ohio to Warsaw, Indiana, where he has been warmly received and the church continues its forward march under his leadership. Rally Day saw an attendance of 242 in Sunday school and an offering of $96.00. At Bryan where Brother Riddle served five years a very commendable piece of work was done. The membership was increased by eighty-four, 700 pastoral calls were made and three Daily Vacation Bible schools conducted.

We are glad to be able to announce to readers of the Evangelist that Dr. Edwin E. Jacobs, President of Ashland College has begun in The Angelus a series of articles called "Wayside Studies" reporting his observations of the topography, flora, fauna and people made on his recent trip to the Pacific Coast and back. We urge those who have not been in the habit of reading the Angelus to begin with the issue of November 6th and follow Professor Jacobs through the entire series. We wish to acknowledge our indebtedness to him for this service of love.—Editor.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble favors us with a farewell message before leaving France for her field of labor in French Equatorial Africa. Brother and Sister Floyd Taber had arrived and she found their presence very helpful during her days of preparation. Her many friends will rejoice to learn that the goodness of God toward her was so manifest in the kindness of friends. Shall we not see in this added proof that all things work together for good to them that love God, to them who are the called according to his purposes? It is the utter submission and complete consecration that makes it all possible.

Brother N. V. Leatherman, pastor of the First church at South Bend, Indiana, writes of the numerous events that have taken place among his wide-awake people. One of the most noteworthy was the Young People's Banquet and Rally of Northern Indiana churches, which is an event that is being passed around among the churches of that section. We commend it as a most happy idea. The various departments of the church are pressing forward in fine shape. An evangelistic campaign is scheduled to begin November 13th, with the pastor during the preaching and Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Richer in charge of the music. The deacons are organizing to make personal work a feature of the campaign.

"The Evangelist" must bear to the brotherhood the sad news of the death on October 18th, 1927, of Elder E. B. Shaver of Maurertown, Virginia, at nearly eighty-five years of age, and after having spent fifty-five years in the ministry. He was for many years pastor of the church at Maurertown, and we believe he was its founder, as he was the father of Brethrenism throughout the Virginia valley. The church has lost a mighty staunch defender of the faith and an unusually active preacher of the Gospel, having continued preaching to within two weeks of his death. Further memorial notice will be published in a later issue, but we here extend the heartfelt sympathy of the Evangelist family to the friends of the deceased and take cognizance of the loss in which we all share.

Brother F. V. Kinzie, pastor of the mission church at Krypton, Kentucky, rejoices over the spiritual blessings recently manifested in his work. In an evangelistic campaign conducted by Brother James S. Cook, of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, and founder of the Krypton mission, nine souls were added to the church. The membership greatly enthused and a tangle in the membership roll straightened out. The school work is very promising, and it is on this feature of the work that Brother and Sister Kinzie largely depend for the building of a more stable and efficient future membership. The need of more clothing is mentioned. This is a matter that means no sacrifice and very little effort to the churches but will count for so much to needy in this region.

Brother A. V. Kimmell reviews his fourteen years' pastorate at Whittier, California, where he has had charge of the work since its organization. During that time he has seen the membership grow from forty-five in the first revival to 225, more than 300 having been added during the years. An adequate church plant has been erected and paid for at a cost of $50,000.00 and over $100,000.00 have passed through the hands of the church treasurer. The church at Whittier is therefore practically a monument to his years of persevering and successful ministry. It was most natural that leaving under such a situation would be a trying experience. He has accepted the pastorate of the Second church of Los Angeles and is succeeded at Whittier by Brother Clarence Sichel.

You will be interested in President Jacob's College News this week. Among other thing he reports the dedication of the new gymnasium, which proved a most happy occasion. We were glad to hear many enthusiastic comments on the part of townspeople on the evening of the dedication. Ashland city has certainly developed a warm friendship for the school. This is in happy contrast to the situation that existed fifteen or twenty years ago. This friendship and confidence spells success so far as the local constituency is concerned, and our faith in the brotherhood leads us to believe that Brethren people will not be one whit behind in their loyalty. Though they are farther removed, their interest is more vital; they have more at stake in the institution.

GENERAL ARTICLES

What is the Task of the Church?

By H. E. Eppley

This question is always up to date, therefore, should constantly be held before the vision of those claiming membership in the church. A constant gaze at the task is necessary to success.

The term "Church" as it is used here will not be used in any narrow sense as referring to any individual church, group of churches, or denomination. It will be used with the thought of the "Church Universal" in mind or the Church as Jesus understood it and as we have it portrayed within the Holy Scriptures. The Scriptures are the sole source of authority relative to the Church and in them we have set forth such facts as these: it has a divine Founder; divine general Directors; a divine Field-Director; a world-wide field, a divinely commissioned task; an unconquerable strength; and an eternal hope. We are concerned here with the task. However, we are not to be concerned at this time about the manner or the authority by which the task was commissioned but rather to ascertain what that task is.

A text taken as a starting point, is found in Acts 1:8, and reads: "But ye shall receive power, when the Holy Spirit is come upon you: and ye shall be my witnesses both in Jerusalem, and in all Judaea and Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth."

According to this text, the first step in the task of the Church is to be witnessing—"Ye shall be my witnesses." Not ye may be if you feel like it, nor, ye may be if opportunity presents itself and you cannot conveniently escape, but, "YE SHALL be my witnesses." The issue is clear and should be presented to each applicant at the time application is made for membership within the Church.

In Matthew 5:14-16 is found a splendid suggestion relative to being a witness for the Master or a witnessing Church. "Ye are the light of the world. A city set on a hill cannot be hid. Neither do men light a lamp, and put it under the bushel, but on the stand; and it SHINETH UNTO ALL THAT ARE IN THE HOUSE. Even so LET YOUR LIGHT SHINE BEFORE MEN; that they may see your good works, and glorify your Father which is in heaven." "Let your light shine", "ye shall be my witnesses." Does this not suggest that witnessing is bearing testimony by word of mouth and by action? There can be no witnessing without some object about which testimony is to be born. In the court room a witness is one who bears testimony in favor of another or an object. This is clearly set forth as the first part of the task of the Church. The testimony is to be born or given for Jesus and his words. The word is clear at this point. "Ye shall be my witnesses" are the words of Jesus. He is the Founder of the Church. His authority is without limit. He is the object of the witnessing. Again we see a vacancy in the apostolate. It is to be filled. Listen: "Of the men therefore that have compared with us all the time that the Lord Jesus went in and went out among us beginning from the baptism of John, unto the day that he was received up from among us, of these must one become a witness with us of his resurrection." Acts 1:21, 22. Only one could be chosen to fill the vacancy and that one must be a witness of Jesus.

What bearing does this witnessing have on the unsaved? "How then shall they call on him in whom they have not believed? and how shall they believe in him whom they have not heard? and how shall they hear without a preacher? and how shall they preach, except they be sent? even as it is written, how beautiful are the feet of them that bring glad tidings of good things?" Rom. 10:14, 15. The case of the unsaved seems from this scripture to be hopeless unless the Church bears witness of the Lord Jesus and his words. What a picture! Can we imagine precious souls spending an eternity in punishment and for no greater cause than the neglect of the Church to witness for the Lord Jesus and his words?

Possibly this failure to witness will have still another effect—one that will be serious to the believer. "For whosoever shall be ashamed of me and of my words, of him shall the Son of man be ashamed, when he cometh in his own glory, and the glory of the Father, and of the holy angels." Luke 9:26. Jesus is again speaking and uses the same two objects of the witnessing—"me and my words." Should the Church take this seriously? Will it wear a shamed face when he comes?

If there is to be witnessing there must be a place of witness-

"I Am Calling"

*I am the best friend of mankind.
I am hung about with sweet memories.*

In the minds of the greatest men on earth, I find constant dwelling place.

I live in the lives of the young and in the dreams of the old.

I safeguard man, with a friendly hand.

I am the essence of good fellowship, friendliness, and love.

I have gifts that gold cannot buy, nor kings take away.

*I bring back the freshness of life,
the spirit of youth.*

I meet you with outstretched arms and with songs of gladness.

Some time in the future you will yearn for the touch of my friendly hand.

I am your comforter and best friend.

*I am calling you! Now!
I am the Church.—The Churchman*

ing and the text is comprehensive here. "In Jerusalem"—the religious center, the home town of the sponsors of the early church. "And in all Judaea"—the home country around Jerusalem. The witnessing of the early church was to spread. "And Samaria"—beyond Judaea. "And unto the uttermost part of the earth." The territorial witnessing of the early church was limited only by the limits of the earth. Now we inquire, before whom is the witnessing to be? Again the text will help. Jerusalem—the church home, the residence of relatives, friends, loved ones and all those within close range of the home base. In one sentence, the witnessing was to begin right where they were and among those whom they knew and were in closest touch with. But next is Judaea. Here lived other relatives, friends, acquaintances, and those perhaps unknown. These are they who are a little farther removed and therefore have a little less opportunity to hear the good tidings. These are to be reached next. Then comes Samaria and here we may hold our breath. Samaria was the enemy country—the home of the enemies of the Jews who formed the early church. John 4:9 records: "Jews have no dealings with Samaritans." The enemies of the early church were not to be overlooked, neglected, or forgotten. They were to receive the witness also. And then a great sweep—"the uttermost part of the earth." This can mean only one thing, namely, all others—every nation, tribe and color. Surely the task of the Church today is no less.

This witnessing is the highway to the second part of the task. It is to make disciples. "Go ye therefore and make disciples of all the nations." Making disciples meant a growing church and the early church grew. In Acts 2:47 is the record: "And the Lord added to them day by day those that were saved." If the present day church would grow it has only one road to follow: witness for the Lord Jesus Christ and his words unto the uttermost part of the earth.

But the task is not complete here. It must proceed one step further. The third part of it is the teaching of the disciples after they have been made through the witnessing. It is the command of the King: "Teaching them to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." The new born babes are to be fed, exercised, cared for, strengthened, prepared for witnessing and for the coming of the Lord Jesus.

What a task—witness, make disciples, teach! And how marvelous the attending promise of the Master to those who faithfully perform the task—"and lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world."

Joshua A Leader

By Edna Nicholas

Joshua, Moses' successor, under whose leadership the children of Israel entered the Land of Promise, was forceful, simple and direct in his commands and very easily understood.

He was strong and courageous, he knew no danger, he endured hardships—difficulties did not deter him. He was especially fitted to lead men in long, hard campaigning; he was able to impart strength to his men, both individually and collectively; he inspired them with the hope that urges men to victory.

Moses was a mighty man but could not have led Israel more successfully than Joshua.

God raises up men for the hour—men to meet every emergency. I like to feel and know that God calls men from the common walks of life and silently prepares them to take up his work and that through their leadership his church is led to victory. As God prepared Joshua for the leadership of his people, so the Lord is still with his people and is preparing men and women to do his work.

Not only did Joshua possess great physical courage but his moral courage was of the highest type. He was sustained by meditation on God's precepts. "This law shall not depart out of thy mouth; but thou shalt meditate therein day and night, that thou mayest observe to do according to all that is written therein and thou shalt have good success" (Josh. 1-8).

No man can successfully lead his people without meditating on God's Word—he dare not be ashamed to be known as a man of prayer. The call comes from every quarter for men who do meditate and who are not afraid to pray. We need men of Joshua's type—strong and courageous and prayerful.

Joshua rested on the promise of God, "As I was with Moses, so I will be with thee." With this assurance victory is sure. "Fear not, for I am with thee," should always impart strength and courage. The battle cry "the Lord of hosts is with us" has echoed through the ages—today the echo is scarcely heard. The cry "Lo I am with you always" has ever been a source of strength to God's children and today we need men who can herald the cry "The Lord of Hosts is with us," along the battle front.

We need men with the courage of Joshua—men who know no defeat, men who are fearless, men who do not flinch at difficulties and who do not allow hardships to deter them, men who are determined to win.

Joshua was true to the trust imposed in him. He was the servant of the people because he was the servant of God.

Sorry to say that we have men today who through cowardice or fear or selfishness are no sooner placed in places of prominence by providence through his people, than they forget their responsibility and resort to all kinds of dishonest, and dishonorable things and court the praises of men rather than the favor of God—they conform to the popular customs of the world. The smiles of the world mean more to them than God's stamp of approval, "Well done."

They forget they are God's chosen and his elect. Ye cowards! Joshua will say to them. "If God is for us who shall be against us!" The battle cry, "The Lord of hosts is with us," echoes no longer along our ranks, inspiring men and women to do great things as in the days of Joshua. The cry for men who are true to the trust imposed in them is just as great today as when the children were being led to the Land of Promise. We need men who are capable of serving the people because they are servants of God.

Joshua was thorough in his work. "He drew not his hand back wherewith he stretched the spear until he had utterly destroyed the inhabitants of Ai." He neither feared toil and danger so long as duty called him—he never "let up" till his work was finished. Thoroughness is essential to good leadership—many lack the thoroughness of Joshua—their dislike for evil and danger often lead them to abandon their work before it is completed.

Had Joshua weakened in his campaigning the inhabitants of Ai would never have been driven out of the land. Joshua feared nothing except defeat.

Joshua lived not for himself but for his people. Unlike Alexander, Napoleon and many other world conquerors—he took no glory, aspired to no greatness, he courted no worldly honor. Herein lies his greatness. True greatness lies not in aspiring to place and power and in wishing the world to think we are great, but in lowliness of mind and self-forgetfulness. Again we need men of Joshua's caliber—men who live and work for his people, men who are able to keep self in the background and keep an eye single to his glory.

The influence of Joshua's example and instruction inspired Israel with confidence—under his leadership victory was sure because of his nearness to God. He blazed the trail for his men and led them to final victory.

The Lord called Joshua to a mighty work—the extermination of the foes of Israel. Our work today is no less great. We live in a world of evil—the powers of darkness possess our land. You and I are called to exterminate the foe within and without. We are as hard pressed as were God's people in the days of Joshua. We need to pledge ourselves to the downfall of evil and to light up dark places. We are to drive out the inhabitants of "Ai" and possess the land.

"To possess the land" we need men of Joshua's type—men who have power of leadership, men who are able both to inspire and retain the confidence of his people. The great cry today is for men who are not afraid to work, who are not deterred by difficulties, who are not satisfied until the last foe is driven out and who are true to the trust imposed on them by God and man. With men like Joshua we will enter and possess for Christ and the church.

Disaster Needs of Nation

Cause two National Appeals for Relief Funds in a Single Year

By Douglas Griesemer

Strikingly testifying to the wholehearted power of American sympathy aroused by distress, and a tribute to their faith in the American Red Cross, is the fact that this country, in the past year gave more than $20,000,000 for disaster relief through their Red Cross organization.

In one disaster, the Mississippi flood, the largest disaster relief fund ever raised in the United States, approximately $17,000,000, was contributed through the Red Cross. The Red Cross made two national appeals for relief funds during the fiscal year, the Florida storm occasioning the other call, for the latter of which the people contributed a sum that with the Red Cross appropriation from its own national funds, totalled $4,477,000.

An important aspect of this huge outpouring of material aid from the people is the fact that they responded spontaneously to the Red Cross appeal, and this organization was thus able to raise the funds needed for relief without other special machinery than its own nation-wide organization, represented by the local Chapters in virtually every community.

Important as these two relief operations are, they form only a part of the year's record in this field by the Red Cross, which administered relief in a total 111 disasters, including 91 in the United States of major or minor importance, and 20 others in our insular dependencies and in foreign countries. From April to June, while the floods were pouring down the Mississippi River Valley, the Red Cross provided relief in 21 other disasters, 11 of which were caused by tornadoes; 17,000 persons being assisted as a result of just one of these storms. The Red Cross assisted a total of 650,000 people as the result of the Florida storm, and the Mississippi flood, more than 600,000 being aided in the later disaster.

There was actually expended for disaster relief service for the fiscal year ended June 30, last, $8,216,893.31, exceeding half the total expenditures of the society for all its services, local, national, and international. This sum represents of course only the expenditures up to the close of books for the fiscal year; relief and rehabilitation measures necessitated by the Mississippi flood are still in progress and will be far into the year 1927-1928 according to the latest estimates. Up to the close of the fiscal year, there had been expended, or committed for expenditure in this disaster, $12,400,000.

The Red Cross in its Mississippi Valley relief fed and sheltered the hundreds of thousands made homeless, gave them clothing, launched one of the greatest peace-time campaigns for health in the country's history to guard the refugees and other inhabitants of the disaster zone against epidemics, both in camp and after they had returned to their homes; and as the flood receded, the flood victims were assisted to begin their lives again.

The rehabilitation measures included giving each refugee as he returned home, a supply of food, garden seed, plants and seed for a new crop, feed for his live stock, new implements to replace those lost in the flood, essential household goods and other supplies to tide over the early readjustment period. Many refugees returned to homes which had been under water for weeks, and had to begin their work again under the most disheartening conditions. In one community after another, gardens and crops newly planted as the flood uncovered the land, were inundated again by new rises. Some sections were flooded four times in succession, and each time the water destroyed the precious crops and gardens on which rehabilitation depended. Some of the returned refugees were dependent for weeks on the Red Cross for the essentials of life. Some countries were so badly flooded that even meager gardens and substitute crops could not be planted during the year. Live-stock and milk cows were drowned by thousands and poultry flocks lost, all complicating the food and living problem of the flood victims. The Red Cross met actual needs as far as possible, supplying milk cows and even farm animals, where the people themselves could not do so, and otherwise providing for their welfare.

A single item of the restoration in the valley included the shipment of 5,000 small farm dwellings which were delivered in sectional form so that they could be set up by the people themselves. They were used to replace lost homes where the former inhabitants could not do this from their own resources. The relief caravans, consisting of repair workers, motor trucks, portable derricks, etc., which the Red Cross organizes to facilitate its work in large disaster areas, was dispatched through the Mississippi Valley, aiding the people of small communities and isolated farm families to set their homes in order once more. Teams of doctors, nurses, and sanitary experts assisted in the post-flood health work. The disaster zone was divided into regional areas for better handling of the rehabilitation problem, and this work went forward all during the Summer and into the Fall.

In the course of the post-flood work, the Red Cross assisted in moving the town of Columbus, Kentucky, from its perilous site on the Mississippi river's brink, to an entirely new area at least half a mile up in the hills; the Red Cross also assisted in restoring Arkansas City, Ark., and Melville, La., to normal conditions, both these towns having suffered heavily from the flood.

The fact that disaster occurs without warning most of the time, and may strike any community, makes continuous readiness to respond an essential, of Red Cross relief service. This and the growing demand for its other peace-time services lend special significance to the Red Cross appeal for an enrollment of five million adult members during the Eleventh Annual Roll Call this year from November 11 to 24 inclusive.

Washington, D. C.

The Modern Church Organist

By F. Leslie Calver in Christian Herald

(Organist and Choirmaster, St. Michael and All Angels, Blackheath, London.)

Historically, the church organist is an interesting personality. He fills an important, time-honored post. His office dates from the days of the ancient Israelites; for he is, in fact, the descendant of "The Chief Musician" of the old Temple services, and, as such, is mentioned more than fifty times in the Psalms.

"There you are! I told you his feet had a lot to do with it!"

Such was the remark overheard from some one who was watching an organist play. Parallel incidents, showing how little the organist's difficulties are understood, might be multiplied.

Most readers will be familiar with the appearance of an organ, with its perpendicular series of pipes diminishing symmetrically on each side of the middle and longest; its horizontal rows of black and white keys, piled one upon another, and known as manuals; its formidable array of stops on both sides of these manuals, the bare idea of controlling which is so fearsome to the novice; its pedal-board beneath, consisting of wooden keys, much larger than those of the manuals, and so on.

The organist must first be a sound, not to say, brilliant pianist. The highest authorities are unanimous on this point. The organ is unique in one respect. No other musical instrument demands preliminary practice on another instrument of a totally different species. The organ is a wind instrument; the piano belongs to the string family.

Even accomplished organists continue to do much of their private practice at the piano. There are several reasons for this. In the first place, the organ is a rather inaccessible instrument. The organist may reside at some considerable distance from his church. When he could spare the time to go there for private practice, some special service may be in progress. Secondly, the organ having to be supplied with wind, cost money all the time it is played. A piano, on the other hand, can be used for any length of time (as, I am afraid, pianists' neighbors often thoroughly realize!) without costing a penny piece, apart from ordinary wear and tear. Thirdly, the fingering on the piano and organ is practically similar, though more weight in touch is generally required on the latter instrument. Fourthly—and this is curious—incessant organ playing does not make for the best possible organ touch! The greatest organists all recommend plenty of pianoforte practice as a corrective against that well-known tendency to "sticky" playing which the "king of instruments" is apt to induce.

How, it may be asked, does the organist manage about his pedal practice, seeing that he is so seldom able to gain access to his instrument? The reply is that pedalling troubles an accomplished player but little, though it is the department of organ playing most admired by the public. A good organist can pedal fluently throughout a long piece, and almost forget that he is doing so. His feet seem to fall instinctively on to the right chunks of wood, at which he seldom looks. As the psychologist would say, he relies very largely upon muscular memory. In his pupilage, pedalling probably bothered him a lot. Now he seldom thinks much about it—at all events, the "finger-work" is always his chief concern. Consequently, he is often content to practise "toeing and heeling" in imagination at home on the carpet while sitting at his piano. He may even perch himself on a high stool, and, to any amused onlooker, be aimlessly stamping on the floor! If he secures the right action, the correct notes will follow, when he comes to actually play them on the organ, almost as a matter of course.

But no organist can afford to drift into careless habits. Indeed, some of the greatest recitalists can not avoid occasional wrong pedal notes. Hence the organist often causes a pedal-board to be attached to his piano, by means of tapes connecting the piano-keys with the pedals. It follows that, when the feet depress the pedals, the corresponding piano keys go down, thus producing the required sound. This, however, does not tend to improve the "touch" of the pianoforte so used. Truth to tell, too, the noise resulting is seldom admired, for there is very little music about it.

Just as he draws upon his imagination for pedal practice, so the organist thinks out, away from his instrument, what combinations of stops he will employ. After some experience, he knows almost exactly what effect will be produced, even on the largest organs, by any particular combination.

One of the most difficult tasks of a church organist probably passes almost unnoticed by the majority of church-goers. He must be able to fill in gaps by improvising—that is, playing impromptu music. For instance, supposing the offertory hymn proves to be too short, the organist must go on playing, and stop just at the right time. Indeed, there are many occasions when improvising is an absolute necessity.

A good improviser never meanders aimlessly on. He plays on some definite idea, just as a writer takes a subject for an article, and proceeds to develop it. Some organists have an especial gift for improvising; others would scarcely like to be confronted with a cold print of what they play! A curious point is that a good improviser is often an indifferent composer. He frequently finds that, when he tries to write his ideas on paper, they have flown. On the other hand, good composers frequently shape badly at improvising, just as famous authors are often poor speakers.

Altogether, the finished organist probably spends at

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Obedience, the Condition of Religious Knowledge

By C. D. Whitmer

TEXT: If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine.—John 7:17.

Jesus, having gone to Jerusalem to attend the feast of tabernacles went up to the temple and taught. The Jews hearing him marvelled, saying one to another, "How knoweth this man these things, having never learned? Jesus answered them, "MY doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me," and added, "If any man will do his will, he shall know of the doctrine whether it be of God." In saying that he gave utterance to a truth which throws much light upon the nature of the Christian life and the method of its development.

First.—We should remember that the Christian religion as it concerns the individual is a matter of spiritual experience. There are some religious leaders in our time whose greatest concern seems to be over questions of industrial reform. There are others who emphasize social reform and social service. These things are not only proper but important, yet they are only by-products of the real functions of Christianity. One may be quite zealous about the attainment of these results and yet fail to promote the chief programme of Jesus Christ. For instance, we would hardly have credited Robert Ingersoll with any particular desire to practice or promote the teachings of Christianity, and yet he was not only a genial friend and an affectionate man in his family, but was deeply interested in public welfare of a general kind. Humanitarian motives, though deep and sincere, are not synonymous with religious motives. You might as well expect to give a boy an education by rubbing an encyclopedia on the top of his head as to expect to redeem the world by mere humanitarian methods. Moody was right when he said, "You cannot purify the water in a well by painting the pump."

When the angel announced to Mary that she should bear the child of prophecy he did not say, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus for he shall save his people from their hunger," or "from their diseases", but, "Thou shalt call his name Jesus for he shall save his people from their SINS." And when Christ came into his ministry, though he did perform miracles of feeding, of healing, of raising the dead, he again and again reminded the people that this was not his principal purpose. He even went so far sometimes as to evade the throngs who were seeking him for his physical ministrations.

Second.—The Christian life being a matter of experience, it cannot be understood by observation. One may go to a manufacturing establishment and looking at a great machine for the first time get a good idea of its construction and operation. He may examine the plans of an architect for a great public building and, although not familiar with architecture himself, derive a clear idea of the appearance of the finished building. These things are material, external, and therefore be understood by study, for they are perceived by the physical sense. But religion (I use the word in its Christian application) is an experience of the inner nature and therefore cannot be understood by an onlooker or even by a keen psychologist. A sound to be perceived must be heard; a sight must be seen; a perfume must be smelled. You cannot see with your ears or smell with your eyes. So a religious experience to be understood must be experienced. This is part of what Jesus meant when he said, "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation." And Paul says, "The natural man receiveth not the things of the Spirit of God, for they are foolishness unto him; neither can he know them, because they are spiritually discerned."

A little boy is born in a home. The tiny mite makes a wonderful change in the thought and plans of the father and the mother. They fondle and kiss the wee one and talk baby talk to it. As the bachelor and the maiden lady see this it all seems very silly and they wonder why the parents are willing to act in such a ridiculous way over the little piece of flesh weighing about eight or ten pounds. The explanation is that to the bachelor and the maid, the baby is an object of observation, while to the father and the mother, the baby is an experience in parental love. So the unregenerated man beholds the devout Christian. He sees him fondle his Bible, fervent and constant in prayer, delighting in the services of the church, loving to meditate upon religious things. It is a mystery to the hard headed, unregenerated man and he says, "How can these things be?" As Nicodemus of old said, his lack of comprehension arises from the fact that he is merely an onlooker instead of a participant through experience.

The way into the discovery of spiritual things is not by the path of logical reasoning alone. Spiritual discoveries are made by surrendering to the will of God and by coming into relations of affection with him.

God does not say, "Give me thy head, but give me thy heart." Hence the first step toward God is a challenge to faith. The unsaved man does not see clearly. He sees the great truths of God but dimly, "as trees walking." But let him do the will of God, which for him is not the performance of good deeds as yet, but simply the acceptance of a Christ whom he, thus far, but dimly apprehends.

As the scientist makes a bold guess based upon what he knows in a certain field, then takes that guess as a working hypothesis, applies the hypothesis by way of experiment and finds that the results sustain the hypothesis and prove it to be true, so the unsaved man must take Jesus Christ and his plan of salvation as a working hypothesis.

We have to take things in their order if we desire to come to an understanding of them. Imagine a teacher handing a book on chemistry to a young man. He takes it, and opens it to page 170 and says, "There will be no profit in studying this book—I can't understand it." Of course he cannot understand it, on page 170. But let him read page after page from the beginning of the book and when he gets to page 170, he will understand it then. The same commonsense method will produce rich results in the realm of religion.

The unsaved man has light enough for the first step, which is acceptance of Christ. The Master's invitation to the inquisitive soul always is, "Come and see." He who will not come will never see.

Third.—The text is full of suggestion not only for the man who is hesitating at the entrance into the kingdom but is meant also, for those who are already Christians, for it states one of the chief means of growth both in grace and in knowledge. The present rewards of obedience are not confined to the approval of conscience. God gives us very little more knowledge of spiritual things than we put into practice. The man who refuses to live up to his best understanding of his duty finds that the things of God become more and more meaningless to him until they almost fade away, while to him who is willing to obey comes the deepest insight into spiritual things. Perhaps that is what Jesus meant when he said, "My meat is to do the will of him that sent me," meaning, "my soul gains strength in doing the will of him that sent me."

The Christian religion is an experimental science whose most precious truths cannot be understood by perusing the best text on Christian Evidences that has ever been published, but must be learned by the laboratory method of experience in unreluctant and loving obedience. He who will not comply with these conditions, closes the door of spiritual knowledge in his own face. Faith does initiate and regulate practice, but it is also true that right practice influences and enlarges faith. Ruskin said, "every duty we omit obscures some truth we should have known." That was simply another way of saying, "If any man will do his will (so far as he understands it) he shall know of the doctrine," that is, he shall more clearly perceive spiritual truth.

As our years of life go by the printed text of our Bible will remain the same, but as we are responsive to God's will as already known, the explanatory footnotes will become more and more complete and helpful.

May it not be that this text throws some light upon the future of the church? Today the church fails to win the respect and allegiance of many because through the centuries faction and strife have dismembered the body of Christ into so many denominations. As we think of these words of Christ perhaps it is not too much to hope that as God's people in the various churches faithfully endeavor to do the things which they agree are the manifest will of God they will gradually move nearer together, not only in fellowship but in belief and in organization, having one Lord, one faith, and one baptism, until the time shall come when the great prayer of Jesus that his people may be one, shall be answered in a unified church in which there shall be liberty of thought upon minor matters, but whose united and supreme purpose shall be to "Crown him Lord of all." least five years in learning the pianoforte, and another five, or more, in acquiring proficiency at the organ, though possibly pianoforte and organ work may be done concurrently for part of the time. Certainly it is useless to attempt to play the organ before the initial difficulties of the keyboard have been overcome, and this can best be done at the piano.

Choir training is a section of the organist's work, compared with which playing is a subordinate consideration. to the man whose teaching is founded upon real science, choir training is a most fascinating branch of study. He is usually very particular about the singing of his choir, and, to the inexperienced person, his ideas in this respect often seem eccentric. His constant anxiety is to guard against securing "volume" at the cost of a coarse tone. It is a misfortune that the keenest singers are those most likely to err in this respect. Singing is popularly supposed to be the easiest branch of music to teach. Actually, it is the most difficult.

Truly the "Chief Musician" must be a many-sided man!

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

SAVED BY HOPE—Rom. 8:24-28. "We are saved by hope." The absence of hope is a most terrible defect in any one's life. On every hand we may witness failure, discouragement and moral defeat as a result of the passing of hope. Those who are constitutionally gloomy, who inevitably see the dark side, deserve the profoundest sympathy; they are fearfully handicapped. It is hope that saves in all realms of human experience. In religion we are rescued from sin by hope; it is the first quickening agent. That saving hope is brought into our lives by the mercy of God; it is in the merit and power of Christ that we hope.

TUESDAY

THE JOY OF THE LORD—Nem. 8:8-10. "For the joy of the Lord is your strength." There was joy in the hearts of the Israelites when they had returned from exile and the book of the Law was discovered and read to them. In the uplift of that spiritual ecstasy and feeling of divine nearness they realized a strength they had not known when they were in exile and separated from God. But such exaltation is not to be compared with that which results from the enthronement of the Gospel of Christ. Paul exclaimed, "I can do all things through Christ who strengtheneth me."

WEDNESDAY

THE SUPREME QUEST—Matt. 6:31-34. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God and his righteousness." Life should have a purpose; the life that has no goal, seldom has any worthwhile end. But of all the things that might well challenge life's efforts, nothing is to be compared with the Kingdom of God. When Christ is made the center, any other helpful thing can be added to life, but nothing else in the world is big enough to be made the center of any man's life. Nor can Christ be added to anything else that might be made the center.

THURSDAY

GROW IN GRACE—2 Peter 3:12-18. "But grow in grace, and in the knowledge of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." That is the thing that indicates the success of any life. One may gain wealth, position, popularity, power, but he is not succeeding as a Christian unless day by day he is increasing in spiritual stature and strength, and becoming more beautiful and Christ-like. When the vital things of life are faced, I do not envy any man his wealth, but I do covet the experience of the man who is growing in grace and in the knowledge of God.

FRIDAY

THE CHURCH AND ITS BUILDER—1 Cor. 3:9-11; Eph. 5:27. "A glorious church . . . holy and without blemish." The church has trouble when its members try to direct the building, but when the great Master-builder is allowed to have his way in every purpose and plan and in the placing and shaping of each individual life, all goes well and success is assured. We realize our highest individual destiny when we are determined to fill the place he gives us in his eternal structure, and the church is made glorious, without spot or wrinkle.

SATURDAY

A WONDERFUL CHANGE—John 16:20-24. "Your sorrow shall be turned into joy." In the days of the old the philosophers sought in their darkness and superstition for the stone that would turn all into gold, and in religion the world has ever sought that which would give surcease from pain and the burdens of life. In Christ the life of sorrow can be turned into joy. He came for that purpose—that we might have joy,—rich, abundant joy.

SUNDAY

A NEW CREATION—Psalm 51:1-13. Create in me a clean heart, O God; and renew a right spirit within me." That is the longing of every soul who is brought to see the sinfulness of his life as David did in the presence of Nathan the prophet. And when that cry goes up to the throne of grace, God in heaven will hear and give a new heart, a heart that turns after God as the sparks fly upward.—G. S. B.

Amos Pleads for Justice

Scripture Lesson—Amos, chapters 5 and 7.

Printed Text—Amos, 5:1, 2, 10-15, 21-24.

Devotional Reading—Prov. 21:1-7.

Golden Text—Let justice roll down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.—Amos 5:24.

LESSON LIGHTS

Time.—The prophecies of Amos were delivered about B. C., 793, and were probably written down soon after they were delivered.

Place.—They were spoken in Bethel, an important city in the south of Israel, and they were written probably in the home of Amos at Tekoa, six miles south of Bethlehem, twelve miles south of Jerusalem, in the kingdom of Judah.

Comments

We are not to think of Amos as a Puritan of his day. To be sure, most of the practices against which he inveighed have been brought within the easy and proper use of common people by the progress of invention and the increase of the world's wealth; but in his times these were unwarranted extravagances, especially sinful, since they were purchased by oppression of the poor. The wine-drinking is in a very different category, and is sinful still, and always.

1. A lamentation. The word translated "lamentation signifies not a spontaneous effusion of natural emotion, but a composition, longer or shorter as the case might be constructed with some art in a definite poetical form, and chanted usually by women, whose profession it was to attend mourning ceremonies for the purpose (compare Jer. 9:17)."—Prof. S. R. Driver. This dirge is verse 2. "It is like a passing-bell which should strike awe into the careless and hardened."

2. Cast down has a crashing sound in the Hebrew nitshah. It must be remembered that at this time the Northern Kingdom under Jeroboam II, was at the height of its power, having an extent as great as in the days of David and Solomon, and such a prophecy as this must have seemed ridiculously improbable. But only 40 years passed before the Kingdom fell.

10. They hate him that reproveth in the gate. The gate or gateway of a city was the centre of business and of social meetings, and also the place where court was held. The thick, stone wall afforded protection from the sun's rays. Seats were doubtless ranged along the sides of the entrance. A large part of the population went in and out of the gate to and from their labors in the fields. It was easy to get witnesses for a trial or for a commercial transaction. Compare Deut. 25:7; Ruth 4:1, 11; 1 Kings 22:10; 2 Kings 7:1; Isa. 29:21; Jer. 17:19; 19:2.

11. Here are enumerated many of the specific sins of the great men of the time.

13. Prudent . . . silence. Protests would do me no good, probably, but would merely endanger one's life. Amos was acting a part higher than mere prudence. An evil time. A time of peril.

14. That ye may live. God will not reject a repentant and sorrowing people. He is more ready to receive us than we to go to him. Jehovah . . . will be with you. Jehovah is the God of power, "One with God is a majority."

15. Hate the evil and love the good. The positive command as verse 14 is the negative. Remnant. Those who are left of true worshipers, saved from the destruction that would sweep the others away. Of Joseph. Whose two sons, Ephraim and Manasseh, gave their names to the leading tribes of the northern kingdom.

21. I hate, I despise your feasts. The reference is to the three great annual festivals, when the people were required to make pilgrimages to worship in their holy places, namely, the Passover, the Feast of Weeks, and the Feast of Booths. God has no pleasure in the forms of religion when the heart is not right with him.

23. Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs. Even the psalms used in the worship, to modern thinking perhaps the most spiritual part of the ceremony, were obnoxious to God because they were hypocritical: they came from the lips only, not from loving and obedient souls.

24. Justice, not ceremonies; not religious songs and temple worship, but justice; not costly sacrifices but justice.

Amos 7. Three visions are described in this chapter. First, a far-stretching pasture land ready for the cutting, and a swarm of locusts ready to settle down on it and destroy it utterly—which would mean the destruction of the nation. But Amos by prayer gained the postponement of this calamity.

Second, a fire so fierce and strong that it ate beneath the land and dried up the sources of spring and river, and would have destroyed the land itself, had not again the prayer of Amos postponed the final doom.

Third. Jehovah with a plumb-line testing the building. Is the wall true, does it lean from the perpendicular? If the latter, it must be torn down. That is the last dread decision of the heavenly Builder. It is a picture of final and absolute condemnation.—Illustrated Quarterly.

DELEGATES ENROLLING FOR "LOS ANGELES—1928"

When the Sixth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association was held in Washington, D. C., in 1910, hundreds in America who were eager to attend could not obtain delegate's credentials as the quotas were so quickly filled in their respective states. Now that the Tenth World's Sunday School Convention is to take place in Los Angeles, California, July 11-18, 1928, many are already making sure that they can be enrolled by securing their credentials now. Plans are being made for an attendance of 7,000 and the Shriner's Auditorium has been secured as the place of meeting.

The registration fee is $5.00 for each delegate except active foreign missionaries who are on furlough. It has always been the policy of the World's Association to give fully accredited foreign missionaries a credential without the usual fee and their application should be sent to the headquarters of the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. All others in the United States should send their registration fee of $5.00 to the Secretary of their State Council of Religious Education. Those in Canada should forward the fee, with the request for a credential, to Rev. H. C. Priest, 538 Confederation Life Building, Toronto, Ontario, Canada. The State and Provincial Secretaries will at once send a receipt for the fee to the delegate. When these amounts are remitted monthly to the World's Association in New York, a formal credential will be mailed to the delegate by that Association. If the address of the State Secretary can not be learned, application can be made to the World's Sunday School Association, 216 Metropolitan Tower, New York City. Some Brethren Sunday school workers have spoken to us of their intention of attending the World's Convention. This announcement is to warn them and others of the importance of registering promptly.

WHY I LOVE THE BIBLE

Because it glows with the light and love of Christ, because it shows me him who walked the earth and hung upon the cross that he might save such men as I, because it brings me what he revealed of the living God and Father whom to know is life eternal.

Because it shames me, inspires me, and calls me upward. It is the book of faith and hope and love, of comfort, holiness, and power, of salvation and eternal life. It is my truest visible guide to the right knowledge and experience of God, the true estimating of myself and my life and the spirit in which I may live worthily with men.

Because out of it I may gather and have gathered a little book most precious, a Bible from within the Bible, which I bind to my heart and carry in my memory and live within lights and darkness, a treasure of the strongest and sweetest words for the soul that were ever known.—William Newton Clark.

PRAYER

Lord of Life to thee we look for guidance and protection. Thy way is wisdom and all thy paths are pleasantness. Help us to walk therein. Deliver us from blind guides who know thee not and whose end is destruction. Bless this land with leaders of honesty and courage that our achievements may not be like fading flowers, and all our people that they may increase in wisdom and righteousness. Let us not weary in well doing. May we not worship ourselves. Teach us thy hatred of robbery for a burnt sacrifice that all the gains of earth may be just and right, and as learners at thy feet may we ever find the way that is best in the striving. Preserve us in peace that Christ may come into his kingdom and that his praise may be sung by every wind that blows. For his name's sake. Amen.—Selected.

New C. E. Experts

Ten young men and women at the Shipshewana Training school for Brethren folks completed the course in Christian Endeavor methods and principles. They have just recently received their recognition from the International Society and are now worthy and permitted to wear the Expert Endeavor pin. This was an intensely interesting class and many other Endeavorers should plan for this recognition next summer.

New Societies. We recently have learned of several new societies. Some Junior, some Intermediate and two Senior. We need more. Here is an organization that is teaching stewardship and tithing, also emphasizing life-work recruits such as but few organizations are doing. All will agree that our church stands in need of these very things, Funds and Workers.

New Appeal. Through our Booster Committee, you have already heard that our Endeavorers are lending every effort toward the Krypton work in Kentucky. It is a worthy goal and should make a real appeal. Send your pledge at once. More later. Any questions, write Secretary, or President.

E. M. RIDDLE, President.

A Suggestive Program

Here is a suggestive program for a live Christian Endeavor. The program is so arranged that it can easily be made to suit local conditions. For a Society not so active the percentage need not be so high for the first year until after the society becomes more efficient. The points can be increased each year. If there are yet any pastors of the Brethren church who think Christian Endeavor is a dying organization I would advise using a program somewhat after this suggestive plan. I am sure that such a program will challenge young people of the Brethren church and make Christian Endeavor a live, working organization in the local church. Try it for a year and report the results.

I. Organize (Organization).

1. Society thoroughly organized and each member working at his or her job.
2. Society responsible for organizing a local Junior Endeavor.
3. Society responsible for the organization of a Christian Endeavor in some church in community where there is no society.

II. Mobilize (Enlistment of Recruits).

1. Society increasing its membership 30%.
2. Each member of society acting as Big Brother or Big Sister to some local Junior Endeavor.
3. At least 75% of Society tithers.

III. Magnetize (Maintaining Attendance).

1. Society having an average attendance of 75% of its enrollment.
2. Each member making a special effort to have at least one visitor present at each service.

IV. Energize (Volunteering for Service).

1. 75% of society volunteering for some definite work in the local church.
2. At least two persons out of Society volunteering for definite full time Christian service.

3. A call given at least twice a year for Life Work Recruits.

V. Specialize (Training for Efficiency).

1. Each member of society reading at least one book on the following subjects:

Evangelism, Stewardship, Life Enlistment, C. E. Work, Church Work, Missions, etc.

VI. Evangelize (Personal or Team Evangelism).

1. Every member of Society making a definite effort to win at least one soul to Christ during year.
2. Every member of society a member of some church.
3. Every member a regular attendant at church services.
4. At least 25% of members attending prayer meeting.

VII. Fraternalize (Unselfish Service).

1. Society conducting a worthwhile monthly social.
2. Society ministering to some neglected group in community (Prisons, county homes and farms, shut ins, etc.)
3. Society aiding through offering of clothing, food or money to some neglected group away from home.
(Near East, famine, Earthquake, flood or storm sufferers).
4. Society giving a special offering for Kentucky Work.
(Also sending clothing at regular intervals).
5. Society giving special help to our foreign missionary work.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for November 6)

Junior Peacemakers. Phil. 4:8, 9

"This is our place for a snow fort. We had one here the last time that it snowed and I guess the place is ours." Bill felt that the other gang of boys had mistreated him and everyone that was with him just by choosing the place for a fort that he liked best.

Phil was one of the boys who was busily at work piling snow and packing it, so he said, "Just because your dad helps to buy things for our playground you think you own it, don't you, Bill? Well, you don't, the playground is just as much ours as yours. We have started our fort here and we are going to build it here."

Bill was just ready to have a good hard fight with Phil when one of his gang called out, "If we don't get started on our fort we won't have it built by the time that the enemy is ready to attack. I see a better place for a fort than this. We will build our fort higher on the hill and then we will have an advantage over this fort. If we win the battle, we will have both forts."

Soon the second fort was being built and everyone was working so hard on it in order that they might have their fort ready for the attack of the enemy. They were so busy and happy that Bob, the boy, who had made peace between the leaders did not even have time to think of the fact that he had been a peacemaker.

The next day was Sunday and it happened that Phil, and Bill, and Bob, and most of the boys were in the same Sunday school class. Now this is the lesson that they had. The teacher told them the story:

"One time after Abraham and Lot had reached a far away country, their servants began quarreling over the land. Both of these men, Abraham and Lot, had large herds of cattle and sheep. When Lot's men found a good place to pasture, Abraham's men were sure to try to use it, too. And just the same thing would happen if Abraham's men found a good place for pasturing."

"Now, Abraham realized that something must be done. He did not want these men quarreling all or the time, so he decided that he and Lot would have to divide the land. At the time they were near a big high hill, so Abraham said to Lot, 'Come with me up to the top of this hill and we will talk over this trouble among our herdsmen.'

"When they reached the top of the hill, they looked out over the new land that they had come to. Now on one side there was a long, rich, level plain, but on the other side there were hills and the country did not look as rich. That must have been an awfully hard time for those two men, don't you think? Maybe they were tempted to have a fight and see which could win and take the best country. Would you think that they would do that? No, no, of course not. One of them was a very unselfish man. He would rather take the worst than fight or have a quarrel. This man was Abraham. He showed his unselfishness by saying, 'Here are these two sections of land. One of us will take the one and the other will take what is left. You may have your choice.'

"Lot chose the plain and Abraham did not say a thing unkind because he did. Instead, when Lot got in trouble a few years later, Abraham rescued him, showing that he could be a good sport when he got the worst of the bargain."

"Now Abraham was a Peacemaker. He was always unselfish. I wonder how many of you boys are going to try to be unselfish and to always be peacemakers?"

Phil and Bill and Bob and all of the boys held up their hands so after that they were all peacemakers and Bob did not have to do the peacemaking all by himself.

The Last Message Before Sailing

42 Rue Milliere, Bordeaux, France.
 October, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

Once more I have the pleasure of addressing you on this last Sunday of my present furlough.

The arrival of Brother and Sister Taber in Paris, September 16th was for me a great joy. I had not expected them before the 20th but they landed at Liverpool and arrived at Paris the same day, which I consider to be quite a feat.

Brother and Sister Taber are now continuing their studies at the Alliance Francaise where a joyful progress in their difficult studies I am sure will await them. They will study there until February 28th, by which time plans for their next step will have matured. Their presence and aid during my last days of preparation was to me a marvelous blessing.

On October 4th I left Paris for Bordeaux. The last days in Paris having been fully occupied with other affairs, it is here in the homes of friends that I shall have the privilege of bidding you farewell by letter.

Here also I have found time to attend to the accumulation of business which always accompanies a departure,—pressing correspondence, accounts, inventories, last arrangements with the boat company as to passage, baggage, etc. Today, Sunday, I shall have the privilege of speaking twice, once in French to a small company of Christians in the home of Professor Henry Devaux where I am being entertained and once in English at the Salvation Army Hall, where the message will be interpreted by Commissaire Albin Reyron, Commander of the Salvation Army in France and Belgium, who will himself also give the principal address of the evening.

No word has been received from the missionaries since last writing as they believe me to be already upon the way. A cable will be sent them tomorrow or Tuesday.

Although going forth alone, I have never been more surrounded with love and friendship. The hospitality of Bordeaux friends has been marvelous. They have especially commended me to the "Commissaire" of the boat, who has promised them to show me special kindness. I have also been put in touch with one or two of the passengers and believe God's special blessing will attend our acquaintance.

The weather which has been so dismal and gloomy during all my stay in Paris is now beautiful. Brother and Sister Taber can hardly believe that the climate of France is so humid, so warmly has the weather smiled upon them, seemingly for their special welcome and for my special farewell. All these things combine to make easier and pleasanter a voyage which at best must be long and difficult and for which I ask your special prayers. I have booked for Matadi at which place the boat arrives November third.

We are due to arrive at Douvala October 29th. The possibilities of disembarking there grow less and less. The automobile road, is, however, open as far as Bania. I trust all of our missionaries may in the future follow the Douala route.

Faithfully yours,
FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

Krypton, Kentucky

The approach of winter is heralded by the transformation of the hills to wondrous pictures of beauty. From any vantage point the varied hues of yellow, red, gold, scarlet and crimson, set amidst the greens, form a panorama of rolling billows, and fill one's heart with joy. It helps one to say with David of old, "I will lift mine eyes to the hills from whence cometh my strength." Of course, we understand it was not just in the trees, rocks and soil that gave David spiritual strength, for if this were true today conditions might be different in the hearts and lives of the people who live in the valley. We well remember a statement of one of our African workers on furlough. "Where nature's grandeur is the most splendid, men are vilest in sin and corruption," (or words to this effect). Sometimes it seems that is doubly true here. "But thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

We are rejoiced to report we have had a season of spiritual refreshing in the recent past. Brother James S. Cook, now pastor at Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, was with us in a revival effort the latter part of September. You will remember that it was Brother Cook who began this work at Krypton several years ago, he having been away seven years prior to this visit. There is no doubt but that his short sojourn here was an unusual blessing in more ways than one. First, was the Word of life which he reiterated in his messages of prophecy, all burdened extensively (but not overburdened) with the all-important fact of the swiftly approaching and nearness of the return of our Lord for his church. We were surprised and rejoiced at the interest these deep things of prophecy created in our people here, especially some who had not seemed to be interested in anything of a religious nature. Secondly, we were glad for Brother Cook's presence, because it was good to see the joy in the meeting of old-time friends. On the last Sunday a basket dinner was a feature here in the church yard, which was handled very orderly and gave further opportunity for fellowship and renewal of acquaintance. That same Sunday evening a far more blessed feast was enjoyed inside the church building when a large number sat around the Lord's table in the fall love feast. Brother and Sister Grant McDonald, who are now located at Riverside, and long-time friends of ourselves, were with us over this week end, adding to the wholesomeness of the occasion. This was not their first visit here, so that they met old friends also, and Sister McDonald's voice welcomingly brought to us the Gospel in song.

But another of special reasons we feel

Brother Cook's visit was timely. We had found the Krypton work in a somewhat disorganized and chaotic condition and had not been able to entirely overcome this handicap, primarily because no records of membership were available. Brother Cook was the one man who knew and understood things from the beginning, so that we worked out a plan for an entirely new beginning. We asked all those who were still of the faith and desired to line up in the support of the local church to come forward and make a re-statement of the same. Many gladly did this, and in each case we had a season of prayer and gave some vital instruction on the value of membership in the church militant, but especially being a child of God and a member of the church of Jesus Christ triumphant. There are several living at some distance from here who we are sure desire to retain their membership here. These will be reached by correspondence. Soon we expect to complete this organization by drawing up a simple form of constitution and bylaws and have this passed on by the members in business session.

The direct results in the way of new confessions are nine (three of these having confessed the Sunday previous.) Also an elderly lady, a typical mountain woman, but with a heart of love for the Lord, who has been exceedingly faithful at services, wishing to keep her two children here in school, but a Baptist since girlhood, designated her desire to be rebaptized as a member of the Brethren church.

All these new converts are young people, some rather young, but they came out without a particle of pressure of any nature; nor was there any death-bed stories told. Just children, and as such discounted many times, but let us repeat right here that we are convinced more every day that that is the hope of this work. It is altogether imperative that we start from the ground and build on these whom we can train and nurture here in school day by day, year after year if Brethrenism and clean, true righteousness is to be established in these communities.

On a whole, the school work is very promising. The attendance is unusually regular, considering the extremely lax habits which exist in connection with the average county free school. There are, of course, some serious problems and bitter disappointments on the one hand, but they are offset by the gems we find and the joy of helping them on the other hand.

Now, we take this occasion of calling attention to the need for clothing again this year. If you could only peep in and understand as those understand and appreciate who have "peeped" in, you would not perhaps, be so tardy regarding this particular matter. Riverside and ourselves, jointly, have sent out many letters, enclosing return postal cards, in which you may secure special bags for the shipment of clothing. We send these bags to you when you say so. It seems there has not been quite the response from the churches which this deserves. Then, too, those who have received the bags are holding same for a considerable length of time before returning. Will you not kindly come forward in this matter.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

As is well known to the readers of the Evangelist, Brother Orion E. Bowman passed away at his home in Dayton, October 7th. Inasmuch as Brother Bowman was president of the College Board, I attended the funeral which was held in the First Brethren church in his home city, Sunday, October 9th. It was the largest funeral I ever attended. Dr. Beachler, his pastor, had charge. I have written my appreciation elsewhere and the Evangelist has carried many lines regarding his sterling worth so that I need say nothing more here. We held suitable memorial exercises in the College Chapel on the Wednesday morning following his death.

Professor Anspach has returned from his visit to the two western conferences and Professor DeLozier from the one held in Pennsylvania. Others of us here went to the Ohio conference at Canton. I hope that all these conferences were familiar with the new regulation, viz., that they elect and not merely nominate, members of the College Board from their districts. There was a recent change in the constitution to this effect. Ohio elected Brethren Miller, Bowman, and Balch for the three year term. Brother B. F. Zercher, member of the local church, and at present Mayor of the City of Ashland, was elected to fill the unexpired term of Brother E. J. Worst, recently deceased. The Ohio Conference also decided that in the case of the death of Brother Bowman, Brother George Kem of Dayton, should fill the unexpired term.

Professors DeLozier and Anspach report interesting sessions at their respective conferences.

The new Gymnasium is completed and we held the dedication exercises last Thursday evening, throwing open the entire building to friends and guests. It was decorated with palms and ferns and the playing floor was partly seated with chairs. Those of us here interested in the coming National Conference, were impressed with the way in which the building accommodated the crowd and are of the opinion that the Conference can be taken care of here perfectly so far as an assembly room is concerned. Moreover, there are many other side rooms offering conveniences for a crowd such as may be expected to attend our national gathering.

Mr. Savage, Professor of Physical Education at Oberlin College, and Mr. Townsend, Commissioner of High School Athletics for Ohio, were the speakers. Oberlin, Wooster, Baldwin-Wallace, Cedarville, Ohio Wesleyan, and Wittenberg were personally represented. Twenty-three other colleges, including all of the colleges of the Church of the Brethren, sent letters of felicitations and congratulations. The College Band, under the direction of Mr. Max Stearns, rendered music. The Band appeared in their new uniforms, black broadcloth lined with gold silk and with purple insignia. There uniforms were in part the gift of the local Rotary Club. I do not believe there is a better twenty-piece amateur band anywhere. They outdid themselves. The Boys' Glee Club under the direction of Miss Helen Fowler, teacher of Voice, also made its first public appearance and performed very creditably. All in all, the exercises were impressive and satisfactory. Mr. Balch, chairman of the local campaign committee of last year was present and made a short talk. As usual, he spoke in an optimistic and cheerful vein.

We were recently inspected by a representative from the State Office of Public Instruction and received his hearty commendation for what we are attempting to do here.

Professor Mason recently addressed the Schoolmaster's Club of Mansfield.

Professor Anspach attended the psychological meeting at Wittenberg College (Ohio) last Thursday and Friday. He reports a very profitable time.

Professor Haun represented the College at the inauguration of the new president of Denison University, Granville, Ohio, on the same dates.

Homecoming next Saturday, October 29, when we play Manchester College. A special feature has been arranged for former students and alumni. So you had better come

SOUTH BEND, INDIANA

Since the pastor's vacation the Brethren church of South Bend, Indiana has had a very full program and there is every indication that it shall continue equally full throughout the year.

The first efforts were concentrated upon the Bible school in September. The first Sunday was Home Coming Day; the second was Recognition Day when all the officers and teachers were recognized and installed; the third was Promotion Day, when the pupils were promoted to their advanced classes in the school; and the fourth Sunday was Rally Day. This program gained much impetus for the work of the new church year.

In a city like South Bend where thousands of dollars are invested in both the highest and lowest types of entertainment that appeals to the people, it is absolutely necessary to put on the strongest young people's program possible. Our Senior Christian Endeavor has been completely re-organized and efforts are made to make it a going concern. Some of their activities are, fostering and presenting a sacred recital by Mrs. Helen Kilmer DeVries; preparation of the missionary drama, "Robert and Mary"; and the sale of Bibles and distribution of tracts. One of the best features for our young people was the Young People's Banquet and Rally of the Northern Indiana Brethren churches when 176 young folks surrounded the tables in the basement of our church. This is a movement started by our good brother, Rev. W. I. Duker, who invited us all for a similar occasion to his church last spring, and followed soon afterward by another gathering in the Goshen church sponsored by Rev. H. F. Stuckman. Our young folks are now anxiously awaiting the next meeting which will be at the Nappanee church where Rev. S. M. Whetstone promises to take care of the largest attendance of this group. The pastors of Northern Indiana most heartily recommend to pastors of our groups of churches to thus get their young people together. It works. It is profitable. This Sunday evening, October 23 we are having a Young People's service, when the young folks will have a large part in the program. On this same Sunday we are planning to organize our Intermediates into a Christian Endeavor society and help train them for the work of the church.

Our W. M. S. is doing very commendable work in all departments. This is the best organized society it has ever been our privilege to see function. Much credit is due them for the general interest in the church.

The average attendance at our prayer meetings is not as large as might be desired but the interest and spirit is very fine. Last week reports were brought by the delegates to our district conference during the prayer meeting hour which carried the enthusiasm of the conference back to our church.

Last Sunday evening we had our semi-annual communion service. There was a wonderfully fine spirit of fellowship and communion manifest. We were gratified to have had Brother G. W. Rench with us in this service as well as in the morning worship hour when he preached for us.

We are preparing to observe Father and Son Week during which time a special sermon will be preached and a banquet with an appropriate program will be held.

Our next and chiefest interest is our revival campaign which will begin November 13 and conclude December 4th. Our Deacons are organized and church visitors have been chosen and a meeting set when all shall gather for inspiration and instruction and be sent out two and two into the field. The pastor of this church is proud of his Board of Deacons. They were real spiritual backers and accomplish much good work. The church has called the services of Mr. and Mrs. Harry E. Richer of Peru, Indiana to direct the singing and prepare the children for their parts in the meetings. The pastor has been asked to do the preaching. We are organized for a great meeting. Pray with us for power.

N. V. LEATHERMAN.

BRYAN, OHIO TO WARSAW, INDIANA

August 31st we closed our pastorate in Bryan. We had been the shepherd here for nearly five years and these years of service were very enjoyable and profitable to the church and to ourselves. We were used in the church and out of the church, and in every case tried to serve our Lord in the best possible manner. This pastorate was a happy one, first because a fine spirit of co-operation prevailed. Second, the high esteem of the community for the pastor and family. Last and not least, their love for the truth, the word of God.

This congregation has been loyal to every cause of the church; each special day receiving its proper emphasis and offering. A distinct reason for increase in the missionary offerings of this church is due to several new titheers.

It was not easy to think of leaving the Ohio conference, where we had been for eight years. Neither was it easy to leave our hundreds of Christian Endeavor friends over the great state of Ohio, whom we had tried to serve for five years as state Stewardship superintendent.

During our stay in Bryan, we saw 84 members added to the church; needless to say we saw some going out in that length of time, by letter and death. We solemnized 45 marriages, conducted 74 funerals, of this number a small percent were members of the church. Three Daily Vacation Bible schools were conducted. Approximately 700 pastoral calls were made each year.

Warsaw

To make the transition a bit easier, we moved as we came to conference at Winona. We found the church anxiously awaiting our coming, so that all the work could be planned and started at once with the new conference year. The first Sunday was an unusual one for both the church and pastor. A beautiful and impressive installation service was conducted. It was in charge of Brother Eppley who was still at Winona. The following week we were invited out for supper, which later we found was a reception at the church basement.

The Grisso family who labored here about three years did a substantial piece of work in Warsaw and left it in good working order. We will write more concerning our new work when we have become better acquainted.

Our Rally Day last Sunday, October 16th, was satisfactory to all. The attendance was 242 in Bible school and an offering of $96.00. The entire morning was a combined session, with a program in which a number of classes participated as well as individuals. During the afternoon, we spoke at the Dutchtown church, where they were Rallying in a Home Coming service.

May we all be diligent at his work until he comes!

E. M. RIDDLE.

THE FIRST BRETHREN CHURCH Whittier, California

The church at Whittier has not burdened the "Evangelist" with reports of her work during the years of her existence so this somewhat lengthy recounting of her organization and growth may be of interest as the writer closes a pastorate of almost fourteen years with this people.

It was at the close of the year 1913 that we moved to Whittier and began prayer meetings and Bible studies in the homes of the members living in and about the city, about six families altogether. As soon as the rains were over for the winter a tent was pitched and a revival meeting begun. The other Brethren churches of the District were very faithful in helping in attendance and giving and in supplying workers for house to house visitation and the men to conduct the campaign. Brother Bauman doing the preaching and Brother Broad leading the singing most of the time. At the close of a four or five weeks' meeting the church was organized with a membership of forty-five, over half of whom had never been acquainted with the Brethren people.

In the years that followed many people were saved and many who were believers sought this "Whole Gospel Church" for a home, until over three hundred different individuals had become members during the time that we served them as pastor. However the roving spirit which still prevails in the west, together with those lost by death, letter and dismissal have kept the membership somewhere around the two hundred and twenty five mark for the last several years.

When the church was organized there was no property owned by the church and not very much owned by the members of the church, but they all had a mind to give what they could. Individuals of the other churches helped to the extent of about twenty-five hundred dollars and the rest was supplied by those who were members of the church or those who became members later. This increase in membership was accompanied by increased consecration of money until within ten years the property and all building debts were paid for and the church has lots 100x140 feet with a splendid well preserved building, the combined value of which is close to $50,000.00. Considerable of this came through advance in property values as the location is within three blocks of the center of a city the population of which is estimated to be approaching the twenty thousand mark. Over $100,000.00 has passed through the hands of the treasurers during this time and not one red cent has come by any method save the free will offerings of the people. It pays to follow the Lord's plan in supplying money for his church for none of the members of this church can be called wealthy, and most of them who are accumulating property have been in debt during the years they have been giving so splendidly. Many of them attribute their personal success to the fact that they have been partners with the Lord in money matters.

It is difficult to close a pastorate of such long standing. The ties that have grown so tender through the years are hard to sever. It was almost impossible to say good-by, in fact it was not necessary to say good-by, for it is only a short drive to our present charge and we can see each other frequently, yet our work as pastor has closed and we will not think of visiting in the homes, if it will keep the people from giving their hearts to the new pastor as sincerely as they gave of themselves to us. During the last weeks the expressions of appreciation of our ministry were very touching. We are unworthy of such gratitude but it was given so simply that its sincerity cannot be doubted and it will always remain a happy memory. The final expression was in a combined service; a farewell to the old pastor and a reception to the new. It was a most happy event. When it was all over and we tried to estimate the value of gifts bestowed by the church and friends we discovered it to amount to several hundred dollars. Words fail us, but in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ we thank you, Whittier.

On the day we removed our study to Los Angeles Brother Clarence Sickel moved into Whittier, so there was not an hour when the church was without a pastor. We count Clarence as one of our boys in the faith, having taken his public confession of Christ and having baptized him several years ago while pastor at La Verne. Brother Sickel is a man of the Book. He knows the Lord and loves to tell about him. The people of Whittier are receiving him and his family with open hearts and our prayer is: that their ministry together will bear fruit meet for the Master's use. Brother Sickel will serve the church as pastor until Sister Sickel's health permits their return to their work in South America. May spiritual and temporal blessings attend both pastor and people every step of the way.

STOCKTON, NEW JERSEY

Dear Readers of the Evangelist:

I wish to give you a report of the work and progress of the Brethren church at Sergeantsville, New Jersey. We are not great in numbers but we have an opportunity for service; that after all is the true mission of the church.

Our Pastor, Rev. William Steffler, is a real live wire and under his direction we have made great progress in the improvement of the appearance of our church, and I can truly say we have made spiritual progress also. Our dear Sister Steffler is also working very earnestly with her group of young women which she organized into a class of which any church could be proud.

The improvements in the church have been the purchase of a new Estey two manual organ, operated by a very capable and faithful organist, Mrs. Emmert R. Wilson. The organ is run by electricity. We also purchased a good grade of velvet carpet for our church floor. This is a plain carpet and adds much grace to the appearance of our church. The church has also recently installed a bulletin board lighted by electricity. This has been commented upon by many people in the community. Our pastor keeps very appropriate verses of Scripture on the board, as well as our regular services. Let us hope we may save some soul by the power of Gods' word by this means.

Last April we enjoyed an Easter Cantata rendered by the Philadelphia choir. The crowd was too large to be comfortably accommodated, and all present reported that they enjoyed the service.

The 28th of May we enjoyed the fellowship of all our members and friends at an all day service. The three addresses of the day were as follows: morning, Rev. William Steffler, afternoon, Rev. R. Paul Miller, evening, our Brother Samuel Adams also of Philadelphia.

The summer months did not show a very keen interest in the Sunday morning services due to members being away on their vacations. Our pastor nevertheless is very optimistic and is looking forward to better interest and attendance this fall and winter.

Our Sunday school has been reorganized and under the leadership of our faithful Superintendent, Brother Willis C. Myers, is progressing wonderfully. The superintendent gives us very good outlines and practical talks on the lesson each Sunday. The Sunday school is not large but is growing. In spite of our small numbers, we were better represented at our county convention, held in Flemington, October 6th, 1927, than some of the larger schools.

The Christian Endeavor also reorganized for another year's work. Our Christian Endeavor is a real live one and has proven its worth to the church in many ways. The church cannot be successful without the Christian Endeavor to train its young people. The Society was well represented at the State convention. Everybody who attended reported having had a fine time.

September 11th we were greatly favored by having with us a male chorus of 22 voices from Bethlehem, Pennsylvania. Our church was crowded and the people were inspired by the sacred music rendered from the choir of Spirit-filled men. (Our pastor is personally acquainted with the leader of the choir and I am sure that was a big factor in getting such a treat).

On Sunday, October 16th, we enjoyed blessed fellowship at our love feast and communion. Our attendance was not one hundred percent and we know that those who were absent missed a blessing, which those present received.

For the benefit of those who have labored at Sergeantsville as pastor or friend, I will state that we now have a macadam road leading to our church at Calvary. Former pastors will appreciate the improvement and will realize what it means to the work.

The Brethren church may well be proud of its church in the garden State.

Corresponding Secretary.

GOLDEN RULE SUNDAY, DECEMBER FOURTH Purpose

The immediate beneficiaries of International Golden Rule Sunday are the orphaned children of the Near East. Their parents were killed or died of persecution, deportation, exposure or starvation in connection with the various disasters of the late war. The children are practically all under sixteen years of age. All of them are too young to be thrown upon their own resources.

How Observe It

It is proposed that wherever possible on Golden Rule Sunday, all persons who are disposed to make a practical application of the Golden Rule, provide for their Sunday dinner approximately the same menu that is provided by Near East Relief for the tens of thousands of orphaned children in its care; that the dinner hour be given to a consideration of the needs of those less fortunate than ourselves. Then, having entered into fellowship with them in the Golden Rule communal meal, that they make such generous offering or pledge for their support as we should wish to have made for our own children if conditions were reversed.

A Home Day

Golden Rule Sunday is first and foremost a home day. Then father and mother and children gather about the table, knowing that similar family groups all over the world are doing the same thing. And in the enjoyment of this home fellowship meal and in gratitude of heart for the happiness of the home, the thoughts will be turned to those orphans who are less fortunate and human sympathy will move hands and heart to make a gift for their welfare. A suitable Golden Rule home meal is a hearty vegetable soup or a meat stew or baked macaroni and cheese with stewed apricot, dark bread and cocoa. Near East Relief orphans grow plump on this diet.

Helping Without Pauperizing

In accordance with the philanthropy-without-pauperization plan of Near East Relief, 2,948 refugee women of Syria, Greece and Constantinople were given employment in the Near East Industries during 1926. These women with their dependent children number 10,000 persons supported by industry who would otherwise be dependent upon the world's charity.

The women are Armenian and Greek deportees from Turkey, forced out of their homeland at the time of the Smyrna holocaust. They are expert needlewomen and weavers; home crafts are their tradition.

"Those Who Dwell in Darkness"

There are two hundred blind children, victims of trachoma, in the care of Near East Relief. It has been a great problem to prepare these defectives for self-support in countries where, since the war, it has been impossible for many of the able-bodied to find work. The recent successful placement of four blind boys as trained weavers in Syria, is the first satisfactory result of effort inaugurated by Near East Relief to demonstrate a solution of its blind problem.

The above practical demonstration of the educational value of the specialized work Near East Relief has done for its defectives has inspired the French Mandatory Government in Syria to contribute, unsolicited, 30,000 francs for the educational work of the Ghazir Blind School, which is specializing in weaving.

If You Could See!

Following is a letter received by Charles V. Vickrey, General Secretary of Near East Relief, from Robert P. Skinner, United States Minister to Greece.

"I have rarely found myself more deeply moved than in the presence of those hundreds of helpless children, so many of whom bore the marks of suffering and disease and all of whom had been rescued and were being given a chance in life through your organization. If America could see those children face to face as I did, you would have no trouble in raising funds in abundance for carrying on.

"All good wishes for the success of your work, which is indispensable to the life and happiness of these waifs and strays of the Near East, whose childish gratitude is so touching and genuine."

On International Golden Rule Sunday, which falls on December fourth this year, Mr. Skinner will join with the American colony in Athens and the 500 orphan children there in observance of the day.

If you are moved to observe the day and make an offering to this worthy cause, send it to the Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

THE ANCIENT QUESTION

With rapid readers, the list of fiction of a high order is finally monotonous, and one of our great libraries reports a hopeful turning toward the "lives of great men." Some of us marvel at the aversion of certain very choice minds at the mere mention of a painstaking study of a great biography; for to many of us it is the perennial spring from which we take our draughts of faith and hope and love. It is always a human characteristic to be happy in finding others coming to one's own place of observation; and thus we are cheered by having an authority like William Roscoe Taylor tell us that biography is more attractive to large numbers of readers than it has been in the past; and, indeed, is on the threshold of what he thinks may prove to be a golden age. Fiction is so uncertain in its effect upon the character of readers. The adventuress who is nauseating to a wholesome nature may be a most winsome, appealing creature to an immature, emotional mind. Seldom does biography glorify evil, but more often traces the long stairway by which the ascent has been made from threatening impediment to victorious achievement. It is the personal touches and sketches and lives in the Bible that gives it that universal appeal to men of all nations and all times. Lincoln read the Life of Washington and was never willing, after having that knowledge, to be useless to his country.—The Presbyterian.

ter? It is really no hardship and practically no expense on your part and it means so much to the work here.

And, above everything, brethren, pray for this work here, and that we might be guided very definitely by the Holy Spirit in carrying on in the name of Jesus Christ and to the glory of the Father.

A SOCIOLOGIST AT SEA

In my first article I tried to describe for you our experiences during the first part of the voyage. In this I shall give you some reflections which have occurred to me in the first week at sea. For twenty years I have had all too little time for reflection. The pressure of duties, the calls upon my time for one thing or another, some of them by my students, some by others outside the immediate circle of those who have a claim upon my time, has left all too little time for long continued and deep—that is, as deep as I am capable of—meditation. On the ship there is nothing to do but eat, sleep, read, write and reflect. There is no post office bringing me mail that must be answered, no telephone asking if I will address the women's club, or fill the pulpit for some minister who is sick or away, or be a member of some board or committee. I am master of my time as I have not been for what seems like ages. I need not get up in the morning until breakfast, which is not until 8 A. M. I can lie down for a nap at any time I wish. Time—for the first time in my life, I seem to have an abundance. At last I have time for reflection. You are the victims.

Some Books I Have Read

I am a slow reader. I brought along several books which I had started to read but which I had not found time to finish. I have finished one, THE LOCOMOTIVE GOD, by Professor William Ellery Leonard, one of my colleagues at the university of Wisconsin. A year or so ago Professor Leonard, who is Professor of English, and who is widely known as a poet, published a long poem which he called TWO LIVES. This poem is one of the most tragic things I have ever read. It is the poetic telling of his own domestic tragedy. After coming to Wisconsin as a bachelor he fell in love with the beautiful daughter of one of the old professors. After falling in love with her he found out that she had been in a sanatorium for the insane, and that her mother and a brother had committed suicide when insane. A university chum of his had married a sister of this girl. He felt that he should marry her even though he knew of her affliction. He loved her, and thought his marrying her might help her. Only a short time after their marriage in a fit of insanity she committed suicide. Her people turned against him and made life almost impossible for him. Wild tales about his cruelty to her were circulated, and he almost lost his position in the University. The poem is the tragic story. This later book, THE LOCOMOTIVE GOD, is a prose study of his own personality. Ever since a little child he had been possessed with strange fears which distressed him and made him misunderstood. He attempted by the methods of psychoanalysis to discover what in his experience had led to the development of these foolish fears. This book is the record of his case. It is well known by modern psychology that often in one's experience there occurs some very painful incident which is forgotten, just because it is painful, but which operates unconsciously on the person concerned in producing conduct which he does not understand but to which he feels irresistibly impelled. As he looked back into his own history by the methods of psychoanalysis he discovered that when he was only two years old he was dreadfully frightened by a locomotive. He found no evidence of nervous instability in his family, so ruled out a hereditary basis. This terrible scare was accentuated when a few years later he had another great fright at public school. Then the book goes on to show how that event in his early history had followed him through all his life and has made him a very miserable man. The book is one of the most illuminating as a case study of this kind. I have read a good deal in this field and have found nothing written with such power. It might as well have been called THE LOCOMOTIVE DEVIL.

Another book I have been reading, but which is not yet finished, is Spengler's THE DECLINE OF THE WEST. Spengler is a German metaphysician. I am not strong for metaphysics; hence the book has made no great hit with me. However, I am digging conscientiously through it, for I want to know what he has to say. It is hailed in some important quarters as a very epoch-making book. Well, to make the matter short as possible, it is a philosophy of history. As nearly as I can put it in simple words, Spengler thinks that civilization is in a period of decline. To prove this he surveys the chief historical cultures and finds that they all have gone through periods of spring, summer, autumn and winter. They go through these various stages of growth and decline, not because of anything that men may do, but because of destiny. Our civilization shows all the characteristics of decline according to his theory. That statement does not do justice to his statement, but is the best I can do in a few words. It is tough material. Do not start to read it, unless you are prepared to read it very slowly and then be satisfied if you understand only a small part of it. The author is a learned man, no doubt, but his light and airy way of determining standards make it seem very foreign to one who has been trained in a modern scientific method.

A book which is a great contrast to Spengler, and which I have read on the ship this week, is Erskine's THE PRIVATE LIFE OF HELEN OF TROY. Erskine is Professor of English at Columbia University. It is easy to read. I did it in a day. It is of particular interest to any one who knows his Homer. Years ago as a college student I read Homer's ILIAD in the Greek, and have read it in translation a number of times since. Erskine takes up the story after Troy has been destroyed by the Greeks, and after Menelaos has taken Helen back to Sparta. This is not told in Homer. Erskine imagines what happened in the household after the return. The central character, of course, is Helen, who had run off with Paris, the Trojan, and who now returns as the captured wife of the king, Meneleos. The book is a discussion of modern family problems on the basis of Homeric characters. The author makes Helen out a very clever woman, very "modern," wise in her relations with her husband and with her child, Hermione, and Orestes, her nephew, who marries Hermione. She manages Meneleos, who is made out a rather stupid conservative. It is interesting as a fictional delineation of the character of Helen. It makes her the heroine, and does injustice to Meneleos, as he is revealed in the poem of Homer.

A week we have been on the sea with but one short few hours on land at Havana. As I have sat day after day watching the illimitable expanse of ocean, or walking the upper deck have bared my face to the breezes of the far flung heavens I have felt the immensity of physical Nature. How remote seem the works of man! How unimportant seem his deeds mirrored in the daily newspaper! No wonder fishermen, sailors, and desert shepherds feel the closeness of Nature and Nature's God. It is good for a man who has been closely confined within walls, and whose life work has been with books and the busy life of men on land needs to get away from it once in a while to rest and refresh his spirit by communion with the winds, skies and ocean. I now understand better than ever how it was that Jesus even in little Palestine wished to get away once in a while to some secluded spot and pray and rest.

Except for the daily bulletin of radio news which is posted every day at noon on the ship's bulletin board we are cut off from what is going on in the world of men. We strangely feel no great sense of loss. The ocean and the sky fills our souls. So far we have quiet seas. The throb of the ship's engines pulses on hour after hour until you grow insensible of them.

Out here on the immensities of ocean one's mind is prepared to appreciate the sublimities of great poetry and some of the sublime passages of Job. The sonorous passages of Eschylus and Job reverberate through the mind, which so long has been filled with the trivialities of a man-made world. While there is not everything in the geographic theory of history, as Buckle and some other geographers would have us believe, yet without doubt the mind of man is attuned to the music of wave, of rugged mountain, the sighing of wind through tree-tops, and the flash of star above a wind-swept sea. I may get tired of ocean and wide spaces before I am through with this trip, but just now I am listening to the music of the spheres, to the voice of Nature in her sublime moods. It is a treat I have long waited for. It is good.

Next the Canal Zone and Panama.

For if there is, of necessity, a complete, permanent, and satisfying good intended for man, and no such good is to be found in the earth or earthly things, we must proceed farther and look for it somewhere else, and in consequence of this conclude that man is not quite extinguished by death, but removes to another place and that the human soul is by all means immortal.—Robert Leighton.

Armistice Day a Day of Peace

Armistice Day is a day set apart in commemoration of the closing of the great World War. Nine years have elapsed since that memorable event, an event which set the world in an ecstasy of rejoicing so universal and intense that history has nothing to equal it. The great mass of the people had a theoretical dislike for war before 1914, but after four years of being driven to the slaughter by the war lords of the world and witnessing the best manhood of every land sacrificed in the world's most awful holocaust; after the fearfully enervating experience of a sustained and intense hatred, kept steadily burning by an inflaming propaganda; after years of the most reckless destruction of property and the draining of treasuries, accompanied by irreparable impoverishment and loss of home and even of country in certain parts of the world and the most heartless profiteering and shameful selfishness in other parts, the world had grown so war-weary and disgusted with the whole war game that nothing was more passionately longed for nor earnestly and persistently prayed for than peace. When that eleventh day of November came in 1918 on which hostilities ceased and the world got the news that it was released from war, emotions of joy and thanksgiving ran so high that they could not be contained, and pandemonium reigned while the world was crazed with rejoicing because of peace.

But the world could not be drilled in hatred and in war for four long years and get entirely free from it in a day. When the overwrought emotions had subsided and the reaction had set in, it became apparent that men could not so readily be changed from demons of war into disciples of peace as it seemed might be possible on Armistice Day. Suspicion and hatred, the spirit of bitterness and strife, greed and selfishness, and other such base passions which are the invariable accompaniments of war and which had been developed to an alarming degree among all nations and peoples, could not so quickly give way to peace and goodwill. While fighting on the world scale in which it had been engaged had ceased, yet bitterness and strife, desire for revenge and dickering for advantage continued with scarcely any abatement of fury, rather with more seeming aggravation because of being curbed in expression in some respects by the sheathing of the sword. And during these nine years the forces that have stood for international righteousness and peace have been struggling against great odds to bring the vicious and war-making elements into subjection. And the struggle has been as difficult and at times as disappointing in our own land as in any other.

Armistice Day affords the church an opportunity to wield an influence on public opinion against the forces that make for war and in favor of peace and Christian idealism. And it seems to us that the opportunity is fraught with a great responsibility, and that the church can have no excuse for holding her peace, that she ought to put the tremendous weight of her influence back of the movements launched for the lessening of the causes of war and the promotion of individual and national conduct that will tend toward international harmony and goodwill.

It is a time for the prophets of God to speak out in no uncertain tones against such vicious political tricks as we see being staged at this very hour in the second greatest city of our land and which stir up race and national hatreds and lead the people away from God and the principles of righteousness and peace.

We need to proclaim the teaching and exemplify the spirit of Christ in our attitude toward the foreigners that come within our doors, rather than stir up sentiment against them as certain Nordic forces are doing. The spirit of love and of helpfulness, the readiness to teach them our American ideals by word and example and to give to them the light of the Word of God, will accomplish marvels and is much more becoming to members of the church of Christ than joining in the popular condemnation of the foreigner, who, it is being proven by unprejudiced and reliable investigators, is little more to blame for the crimes of America than are so-called Americans themselves.

Also, we need to speak forth with strong conviction the will of God with regard to the outlawry of war. The church can never bless war, if it is to be true to the teaching and example of its great Head, Jesus Christ, and if war is such an evil, the church is under obligation to do what it can to bring the whole war system into desrepute and the nation to rely upon peaceful methods of settling international disputes rather than upon force.

And the voice of the church must be against the teaching of war to our children in the schools and colleges of our land. We are not awake to our duty and responsibility along this line. We are allowing the War Department rather than the church to guide the lives of our young people. The "Committee on Militarism in Education" brings to our attention certain developments along this line that should challenge our lukewarmness to the situation. From their recent bulletin we quote these statements:

"55,000 school and college boys in the U. S. today are forced to take military training or leave their chosen colleges and schools."

"203 institutions compel participation in military drill."

"81 colleges and 21 high school systems by contract with the War Department require male students to take 3 hours a week or more in military science and tactics."

"Boys as young as 14 are given War Department courses in these high schools. Pre-war Germany did not begin military training at this early age."

Our militarists have gotten to the place where they boast of the earliness with which they begin to train the youth for war, and the boys in training are given to understand that it is for the serious business of aggressive war that they are in training. Some of us have imagined that such training as was given in our schools and colleges was primarily for the development of the individual, a sort of recreational program. But the following quotations from military text books used in our schools and colleges dispel that idea. We read:

"The object of all military training is to win battles."

"In this world of ours force is the ultimate power."

"The mainsprings of human action are self-preservation and self-interest, in a word, selfishness—the 'touch of nature which makes the whole world kin.'"

"The object to be attained by training is to enable the Army to wage offensive warfare. While training must cover certain phases of defensive doctrine and police doctrine, the Army must definitely understand that these are only means to the definite end—offensive warfare—and every individual in the military service must be imbued with the spirit of the offensive."

Against such militarizing influences we must speak out in the interest of peace and the progress of the Kingdom of God. Let this Armistice Day be indeed a day for the promotion of the spirit of peace and goodwill and the denunciation of all that makes for the wickedness of war.

Straining Morals in Defence of Morals

That is what a certain noted reform leader did recently when he advocated a questionable policy in support of Prohibition. Dr. Clarence True Wilson, secretary of the Methodist board of temperance, prohibition and public morals, speaking before the Rock River conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, is reported to have urged his hearers to support any candidate for public office who is pledged to the dry cause, regardless of his convictions and reputation in other matters. "If rumors of dishonesty have been broadcast about the dry candidate," said Doctor Wilson, "do not let that deter you from giving him your support. The government has judicial processes by which it can sieve out those who are really dishonest." The Christian Century observes that since that speech was made in Illinois, Doctor Wilson's remarks were obviously intended to justify the support given by the organized dry forces of that state to a certain aspirant to the United States senate. Leaving unnamed that personality alluded to—for we are concerned only about the principle involved—we challenge the rightness of a policy of such utter disregard of other moral problems in the interest of promoting the effectiveness of Prohibition.

We would not be misunderstood. This is no time to utter a single word that might result in lessening popular concern for the enforcement of Prohibition, much less any that might cause any church member to react more indifferently toward his responsibility thereto. That spirit is already too widespread, and the church must bear no small portion of the blame. It was its let-up in temperance instruction after Prohibition had become a part of the fundamental law of the land that is largely responsible for our being threatened with a generation that is lacking in enthusiasm for, if not conviction regarding, the prohibition of the liquor traffic. The church must show again its old zeal for the instruction of the people and the quickening of conscience regarding the evils of liquor drinking, and must do what it can to keep public sentiment strong and expressive on Prohibition enforcement. The matter of selling and drinking intoxicating liquors is a moral problem, and there can be but one right solution to it—that is prohibition, there can be no compromise. The church cannot afford to show even a slight indifference towards so vital a moral problem.

But the church must seek to be consistent. It has no right to wink at, or to condone one evil while it smites another. It is true that success in moral reform work has come about largely by concentration upon specific evils, but such a policy need not cause one to be indifferent toward other and equally lamentable evils. It is possible to successfully fight the liquor traffic without giving comfort and shelter to grafters and perverters of the people's will and rights. And we dare say that the battle that is waged clean and free from suspicion is most effective in the long run. If the church or agencies working in its behalf are careless about their alliances, and when occasion seems opportune they readily join hands with men and movements of questionable character, the people in whose support they must depend will finally lose faith in them and so they will defeat themselves by their own methods. Moreover the people will readily discount the professed dryness and promises of law enforcement on the part of office-seekers who are confessedly dishonest and who are linked up with a machine that makes for corruption. And why should they not? Who would expect such an one to be scrupulous about keeping his pledge?

But even though some points in the temperance warfare may be gained by unholy alliances, it must be remembered that Prohibition is not the only moral issue with which the church is concerned and it cannot afford to give tacit assent to dishonesty and political corruption in order to make a slight gain in Prohibition. It should do its utmost for Prohibition, but it should not forget that there are other ways in which it can, and is obligated to, work for the advancement of righteousness among men, and it ought not to be encouraged to pursue a course that will jeopardize its usefulness along these other lines. In fighting "the sin of drunkenness" the church must not close its eyes to "the vice of greed and covetousness", and it is a pity that it should be counselled to do so by so respected a leader of the temperance forces.

The pleasure that leaves a bad taste in the mouth is not genuine.

Christianity is not a matter of race or boundaries, and he who professes to be Christian and yet draws the line on color or nationality or class, has but an imitation of the real thing.

A man should not be greatly disturbed because he is criticised, if he has been sincere and has done his best; it is the indolent, careless, unfaithful worker who should wince under criticism.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Dr. C. F. Yoder gives us some encouraging news concerning the work in South America. A number of new converts await baptism and other evidences of progress are reported.

The General Conference Secretary, Brother O. C. Starn, says he is waiting on district conference secretaries for their material for the "Brethren Annual." Brethren, do it now.

Dr. Florence N. Gribble, our pioneer missionary to Africa, has completed her furlough and, feeling much refreshed in body and having engaged in much profitable study in France, she is now embarked for her return trip to her field of work.

We have a report this week of the graduation of a class in Teacher Training at Hagerstown, Maryland, with the pastor, Dr. G. C. Carpenter, as teacher and commencement speaker. We congratulate the graduates, and also the teacher. Let us hear what other schools are doing along this or other lines.

Brother Herbert H. Rowsey, secretary of the Mid-west district conference, provides us with a good report of their recent sessions at Hamlin, Kansas, where they were guests of Brother W. H. Schaffer and his loyal people. Various other voices as well as the word of the secretary bear witness to a very successful conference.

Dr. J. C. Beal tells of the closing of his second pastorate at Sunnyside, Washington, where during the two years sixty members were added to the church and other evidences of growth were to be seen. He also records the principal features of his evangelistic and Bible lecture work in which he has engaged since Conference. Good meetings were held at Garwin, Iowa, and Ankenytown, Ohio, and he lectured at the Illiokota and Mid-west district conferences.

We are unable to add anything to the beautiful tributes in this issue by Dr. Beachler and Dr. Bame, paid to our lamented Brother Orion E. Bowman and whose passing was recently noted in these columns. But it is our feeling that all the fine things that are said about this outstanding layman were fully deserved. From our contacts with him we have judged him to be one of the noblest men we have ever met. What an inspiration such a life is! And how wonderful to have lived and wrought so nobly! May he, being dead, yet speak to us of the greater heights we may attain through the grace of Christ.

PASTORS, your cooperation is requested in behalf of a greater offering for Home Missions. In cooperation with the General Home Mission Board we are putting out next week a special Home Mission number of the Evangelist and a large extra number of copies will be printed. These extras will be mailed out to pastors of churches where not every family is a subscriber and with the request that they distribute them, one into each and every home. Special care is being exercised to make this an attractive number, and we hope pastors will cooperate in putting these Home Mission messages into every home. Buy some stamped wrappers at your post office and mail them out. You have the membership list and the Mission Board does not.

A Correction—Brother E. M. Riddle informs us that the last paragraph of his recent newsletter was omitted in publication. We have failed to find the copy for the paragraph in question and so cannot explain where or how it occurred, but nevertheless we gladly make correction. According to his letter this is the content of the last paragraph: A fine farewell reception was tendered the Riddle family by the congregation and friends of Bryan, Ohio, at the country home of C. F. Brown. The superintendent, Mr. Dunkin, presented lovely gifts: a walnut and mohair rocker, a console table and mirror, besides other gifts from individuals. The Bryan W. C. T. U. presented a gift and gave a farewell reception in our honor. The S. M. M. also remembered Mrs. Riddle with a silver gift. This correction is due the kind friends of the Riddles.

He who has conscientious scruples against pledging a specific amount for church support lest he might not be able to pay, very often has feelings against giving at all.

GENERAL ARTICLES

Gospel Church Government

By L. G. Wood

(Address given before the Mid-West District Conference at Hamlin, Kansas, October 12-14, 1927, and voted by that body to be published in The Brethren Evangelist)

The basis of what I have to say on this occasion is found in the Bible and reads as follows: "Now therefore ye are no more strangers and foreigners, but fellowcitizens with the saints, and of the household of God; and are built upon the foundation of the apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ himself being the chief corner stone; in whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto an holy temple in the Lord: in whom ye also are builded together for an habitation of God through the Spirit."—Ephesians 2:19-22.

Let us carefully notice the descriptive clauses in this Scripture: "Household of God." "Foundation of the apostles and prophets." "Temple in the Lord." "Habitation of God," and "FITLY FRAMED TOGETHER." These terms certainly suggest a prayerful study of the organization, conduct and government of the institution here described, which is none other than the Church of Jesus Christ. And from these terms we conclude that the church originated in the mind of the Infinite one; therefore it is called, "Household of God", and "Fitly framed together" is conclusive proof that its Organization and Government is not of human origin. The Church was foreshadowed in the Old Testament by many types and figures, but did not really exist then. Its first real manifestation in the world was under the ministry of John the Baptist: "The law and the prophets were until John: since that time the kingdom of God is preached, and every man presseth into it."—Luke 16:16.

Its formal organization began when Christ called out twelve ordinary men from the ordinary walks of life, to be his apostles, and under his personal ministry it developed into a body of witnessing believers. It is the building of which God is the builder, and as in the creation, the three persons of the Holy Trinity are closely associated and directly engaged. It is the betrothed bride of Christ, therefore is called the "habitation of God." Having made the covenant of betrothal, hence acknowledging but One Lord, One faith, One baptism, One Head, One form of doctrine, One body, One form of government. In connection with church government I love to think of what our Lord himself said: "But be not ye called rabbi: for one is your master, even Christ; and all ye are brethren." Matthew 23:8. Of course the church is not merely an organization, but an organism, with Christ as its head.

One of the great proofs of the inspiration of the Scripture, is the system and order of their contents: I do not refer to the division into chapters and verses, but to the subject matter of the holy Scriptures. It is often said that, "Our God is a God of order and not of confusion." This is true, and just as true concerning the government and the conduct of the Lord's business as it is concerning the doctrines and ordinances of worship. May we notice some "rules of order" as found in the Bible: "Let all things be done decently and in order", 1 Corinthians 14:40. "Let all things be done with charity." 1 Corinthians 16:14. "Let all things be done to edifying." 1 Corinthians 14:26. "Do all in the name of the Lord Jesus." Colossians 3:17. I do not claim that these set forth church government; but they certainly do give the Bible "rules of order", for the conduct of the Christian's life, whether in the worship service, or the business meeting of the church.

There are several theories concerning New Testament government: 1—Some claim that the New Testament precedents of church government, are in no way binding on us.

2—That all of the details are given and are binding. 3—That the essential principles are given but liberty is allowed for adaptation to new conditions.

How shall we decide which theory is correct? Not by denominational tracts or publications for they contain biased interpretations. Not by the fathers even, for they disagree among themselves and with the Scriptures. If we be a Bible people, as we claim to be, the Scriptures themselves must be our guide and authority. Is it important that we know the form and spirit, of Gospel church government? We Brethren believe that it is: First because obedience is a cardinal virtue of the Christian, and obedience requires that an honest effort be made to discover the will of God and do it. "He that hath my commandments, and keepeth them, he it is that loveth me."

John 14:21.

Second, because the forms which are divinely given have a significance which is lost if the form be changed. "See," saith he, "that thou make all things according to the pattern shewed to thee in the mount. Hebrew 8:5. Third, God's ways are always best for the accomplishment of his purposes in man. They would be best to follow, even if they had not the Divine command back of them. Church organization and government, were not of the "hand-me-down" type, neither were they prescribed by a ready-made constitution; but were the results of growth, and each new step being taken as the need arose. An organism "growing unto an holy temple in the Lord."

A church can be over-organized, but when it is, it is not a Gospel church, for it was not so in the Apostles' time. When the number of disciples increased, until some were being neglected, the Apostles appointed some men over that special work. This is perhaps the beginning of the office of Deacon, in the Gospel church. Acts 6.

Even the formula for baptism, as contained in the great commission, does not seem to have been used until after Pentecost; But doubtless it was acted out in the baptism of our Lord. In fact, the meaning of none of the ordinances, could have been fully understood, until after Jesus had made the great sacrifice, and the Holy Spirit came to interpret its meaning. However, in the personal ministry of our Lord, he not only indicates the foundation of the church (Matthew 16:18) and gives the principles of discipline (Matt. 18:15-18), but also furnishes the elements of all church doctrine, ordinances, and government, to be wrought out and consummated by the power of the Holy Spirit in the yielded lives of men.

ELDER L. G. WOOD

Pastor, Fort Scott, Kansas

There are two permanent officers in the Gospel church, they are Elders and Deacons. A comparison of passages such as Philippians 1:1 and 1 Timothy 3:1-13, will show that they are the permanent officers in the Gospel church. Of course others are mentioned, as Teachers, Pastors, Evangelists and others; but these as their title implies, were of a temporary nature, instead of permanent. The authority of all church officers, is moral rather than legal. If Jesus had given legal authority he would have given means of enforcing it, but such means is lacking. The members are exhorted to obey the leaders (Heb. 13:7, 17, 24), but the leaders in turn are exhorted not to "lord it" over God's heritage (1 Peter 5:3). The authority of any one in spiritual things is in proportion to the moral influence springing from his strength of mind and humility of character (1 Thess. 5:12-13).

There are three types of church government to be found among the various denominations: The Episcopal, the Presbyterian and the Congregational.

(1) The Episcopal form of government is represented by the Roman Catholics and the church of England. Others have a modified form of the episcopacy. This form of government is characterized by centralized authority. It claims the infallibility of the church, rather than of the Scriptures, and that this infallibility is vested in the Pope, as the visible head of the church and Christ's representative on earth.

This is of course a false claim, and is based upon the perversion of the words of Jesus Christ himself, as recorded in Matthew 16:16-20. They fail to distinguish between "Petros"—little rock—from which the Master gave Peter his new name, and "Petra"—great rock—upon which he would build his church. Christ did not say he would build his church upon Peter, for he himself is the "Chief Corner Stone" and the Apostle Peter himself is very careful to tell us so (1 Peter 2:4-9).

(2) The Presbyterian form of government is very much like that of the United States, being representative in character and the session and synod taking the place of bishop or pope. Authority assumed by the church always tends to the weakening of the authority of the Word.

(3) The Congregational form of government is found among several denominations, and branches of denominations, as Baptist, Christian, Congregational and our own, Brethren church and others. It is based upon the principle of local independence of churches in local matters. This does not exclude co-operation in matters of general interest. The extreme form of independence does not exist as churches with it are doomed to extinction.

Some advantages of this cooperative, congregational form of government: First, this form of government is Scriptural. While no definite commands are laid down for the complete organization of the church, yet we have the precedent of the early churches which were plainly congregational in their polity. This does not mean that they were independent of each other for they were not, but they each supervised their own local affairs, and in matters of general interest they cooperated with one another.

It is a satisfaction to be Scriptural in position.

Second: The congregational form of government places responsibility upon all the members. In matters of doctrine, discipline, finances, and the support of the general work all the members have a part, and from this feeling of responsibility comes a larger interest on the part of the whole church.

Third: The feeling of responsibility develops the Christian character of the members, and the church as a whole becomes stronger because of it. Personal responsibility quickens the conscience and develops earnestness, while dependence upon others for guidance in matters of conscience leads to moral death. Voluntary giving is therefore better than the assessment plan in the end although it may not be as effective at the time. And voluntary confession of sin to God is better than the monthly confessional before the priest. The education of experience, also, which all so much need, makes the system of congregational government a splendid means of developing strong, consecrated Christians.

Fourth: This system of government provides a larger field for recruits for leaders. Since all have a part in the affairs of the church all are interested, and all become familiar with the principles and methods of the church. Therefore when leaders are needed they can readily be found from the rank and file of the membership.

For precisely this reason a democratic form of political government is better than a monarchy. The despotism may be more brilliant and effective for a time but "Government of the people, by the people, and for the people", is the most stable in the end.

Fifth: The congregational form of government generates originality in the work of the various congregations and this produces a larger variety of experiences. This diversity of methods and experience brings progress.

Sixth: As a natural result of all these things we may expect a greater permanency in this form of church government. Royal families die out through natural decay. One man rule in the church fails from the same cause. The papal court has too often been corrupt and wherever power is made permanent in the hands of a few there is danger.

Let us accept God's plan of work and abide by it, knowing that it is best even though we do not always understand how.

I am a firm believer in the district, supervision of all pastorless churches, and as to the further relation of the local church, to the district and general conferences, I refer you to the "Manual of Procedure" as published in "The Brethren Pastor's Complete Handbook", to which more prayerful attention should be given.

Church members are to be faithful as stewards (1 Cor. 4:2), loving as children (Ro. 8:14), obedient as members of the body (Ro. 12:5-9), pure as the bride of Christ (Rev. 22:7), and holy as the temple of God (1 Cor. 6:19-20). This means success in the Gospel church. God holds the church just as responsible for its conduct as for its creed.

We must preach the truth, then live the Gospel as we preach. To be sound in faith and preach the Gospel without living it, is to attempt to bluff the Almighty. The Gospel church is sound in the head and pure in heart, and the promise is that such shall see God.

My indebtedness is hereby acknowledged to Dr. C. F. Yoder's booklet: "Gospel Church Government", published many years ago, also "The Brethren Pastor's Complete Handbook", which should be used more than it is, and several other sources from which information has been gleaned.

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

XI---Eld. Isaac Kilhefner

By Martin Shively, D.D.

Often as I write these brief sketches concerning some outstanding servants of God and of his church, there rises up before me, in memory, a great host of other good men, whose service was not given in the ministry, but in the laity—men and women too, to whom much of the credit should be given, for instances of unusual success which crowned the effort of men in the pulpit, but folks of whom you never heard. If I should live to complete the series of articles, which I undertook over a year ago, and in the preparation of which I have found it impossible to be regular, I shall want to write about some of these also, but for the present, I must ask your indulgence, and hope you will patiently wait until I shall have finished with this group of about forty of the ministers, whose names were household words only a short generation ago, but who, having passed on to their great reward, are all but forgotten, except by a group, which grows constantly smaller.

When my last paper,—number X, was printed, telling about one of the most prominent of the Brethren ministers on the Pacific Coast, the cut which once had shown the readers his beautiful face could not be found, and most of my readers have not the remotest notion as to the likeness of Elder John P. Wolf. Well, one thing cheers the heart of those who love the Lord, and who in common with us all, shrink from the oblivion into which most men descend after they have left this world some years.—The Lord whom we serve, does not forget.

Brother Kilhefner was a native of Pennsylvania, having been born in Lancaster County of that state in 1850. But when a lad of four years, he came with his parents to Ashland, Ohio, and this was the section which he called "home", until he went to the home above in 1892. He was a farmer preacher to the end of his days, except for the brief venture in business at Gretna, in connection with his pastorate there. He was brought up in the Tunker fraternity and united with the church in 1877, soon being called to the ministry, in which he served with his father, both being ministers in the Dickey church, near Ashland. He cast his lot with the "Progressive" movement, and cheerfully took all that was involved in the step, serving faithfully and with distinction until his death. He was greatly blessed in the faithful wife, who freely shared in all the experiences of a pioneer ministry, and I always considered Amanda Kilhefner a most unusual woman. As for that, I am fully convinced that in practically every instance, the seeker after cause, will find close to the man who has won laurels in his relations with the world, a woman of great soul—either wife or mother. In the days immediately following the unfortunate division in the church, preachers among the "Progressives" were scarce, the demands heavy, and the people poor in this world's goods, so that the man who was willing to work, found plenty to do, if he was willing to do the work for the nominal compensation which the people could offer. Brother Kilhefner was much in demand, and so far as I know, he never refused a call for help, if it was physically possible to respond to it. During the winter months he was almost constantly engaged in evangelistic work, which resulted in the organization of new congregations in Ohio, Indiana and Michigan. And when he worked, he worked with all his might, both physically and mentally. Yes, he was a tremendous worker, and his messages could be heard a goodly distance from the place at which they were offered, and so far as I remember, he never failed to send his point home. I fear that it was this very hard work, and the exposure to which he was often subjected, that hastened his end, for he died at the age of 42, when, ordinarily, he should have had many years of service before him. But he gave himself absolutely without reserve,—all that he had, and I doubt not, the rest into which he has entered, with all it has brought, has furnished ample compensation to his devoted soul. He was not only unusually active in the work of the ministry, but served the church as the most active man on its district mission board,—his death making a vacancy which was very hard to fill.

ELDER ISAAC KILHEFNER

Perhaps a year before his death, he left the farm and became the pastor of the congregation at Gretna, Ohio, near Bellefontaine,—a congregation which he had organized, I believe, some years before. A small combination building was erected, part dwelling house, and part business room, and here he served the community in the double capacity of pastor and purveyor of the physical necessities of life. As he was making good in both fields, until kidney trouble forced cessation, and which quickly terminated in release from the flesh.

My acquaintance with Brother Kilhefner began in 1886, when I came to Ashland College, and here I met him often, and a friendship developed which was only terminated by his death. During these days, I knew him better, perhaps, than any of our ministers, and his going, bereft me of one of my closest friends. And now his good wife, too, is gone, and he lives only in the congregations which exist because he lived,—in the lives of those whom he led to an acceptance of the Lord, in whom to live, alone, is life. But he lives too in the lives of his sons, and among our people, particularly, in the life of that son whom we know best—E. L. Kilhefner, long a member of the Foreign Mission Board, and for years a member of the General Mission Board, a member of the Board of Trustees of Ashland College, where he serves in a position which his father served before him, and as a trustee of the Ashland city church, as well as the most widely known member of the congregation, or at least next to Dr. Miller. "Ed" is like his mother in that he is unassuming, friendly, and always good natured, and like his father in the depth of his convictions. Isaac Kilhefner did not live in vain, and like righteous Abel, "his works do follow him."

American Aid Abroad When Mississippi Floods Bring Record Disaster

By Douglas Griesemer

International aid when disasters overtax the resources of the country afflicted is one of the greatest agencies for peace and understanding in the world today, a fact brought home on each occasion in which such service has been rendered.

The people of the United States have in the past become so accustomed to the thought that they should assist other people in distress that they can scarcely realize how the picture of a tremendous disaster in their own country affects those of other nations.

The spontaneous feeling of sympathy for the American victims of the recent Mississippi Valley flood evoked abroad is characteristic and significant. These sentiments were virtually world wide, coming from China on one side of the globe, and from many European nations on the opposite, while the peoples of our own insular and territorial lands joined fervently and effectively in the relief task.

A random list of the countries from which expressions of sympathy and offers of assistance were received in behalf of our flood sufferers includes Cuba, Chile, Guatemala, Germany, Poland, Japan, France, China, Santo Domingo, besides the Philippines, Hawaii, Guam, Porto Rico, Haiti, the Virgin Islands, Panama Canal Zone, and many others, among which messages were received from various neighboring countries of South America which showed they were indeed neighbors in the best sense.

The quick response of the people of the United States, in which our churches have shared heavily, whenever calamity has swept any part of the world, was recalled by many of the foreign sympathizers. This was symbolized by the Republic of Cuba, whose national Red Cross Society and whose Government, both recalling assistance from the people of this country in the past year when a devastating storm struck the country about the time of the Florida disaster, sent substantial contributions to the flood relief fund. People of Cuba, as well as their Government, joined in this demonstration, remembering that our hand had been extended to them even while our own Red Cross, in behalf of the whole country, was fighting the ravages of the Florida storm.

Similar sentiment marked a message from Germany, in which country strangely enough, a disastrous flood occurred shortly afterward, enabling our Red Cross in behalf of America once more to offer its service. As it happened, the people of the affected country were able to provide their own relief, but the incident was an impressive demonstration of international feeling of the highest plane.

It emphasizes the fact that no stronger bond exists between the peoples of the world than the individual Red Cross societies of the respective nations. Through our own organization, the people of this country in the past year extended relief in 21 disasters in foreign lands, besides the meeting the unprecedented demands on their hearts by people of the United States struck by calamity. In the Mississippi Valley alone, the Red Cross was called upon to feed more than 607,000 helpless people, in which the people of the whole nation united to make such a task possible through their material support. Altogether in the past year, the Red Cross served as a medium for relief in 77 disasters at home, including the Florida storm and the Mississippi flood. National appeals for contributions to relief funds were made by the Red Cross in these two relief operations, in which the country's churches responded heavily not alone in this respect, but in actual relief work on the scene.

Whenever such disasters have occurred, the American Red Cross by popular support and acclamation has been assigned to act as the agent of relief for all the people; a position, in fact, warranted by its Congressional charter. The surest way in which such efforts can be made continuous for each coming year is for everyone to join the Red Cross ranks and support its work by membership. The invitation this year to thus enroll will be extended from Armistice Day to Thanksgiving, November 11-24 inclusive.

Sympathy

By Dr. Charles F. Yoder

There is a beauteous grace which sits enthroned
In the world's heart and reigns a queen,
Her gentle scepter extending over men,
Doth touch and bind in one all hearts which beat
Throughout the circle of the world. Her word
Doth gather all the grating sounds of earth,
And, like the magic harp, doth give them back
In harmony.

The meeting place of Heaven and earth she is,
The touch of human need with grace divine.
The child of love and pain she is, for once
The Heavenly Father bending low in love,
The thorn of human woe did touch his heart,
And from the gracious drops that flowed there sprang Sweet sympathy.

Aye, like the unseen hand that clasps the light,
Of earth's broad sky in all its varied hues,
And pours it forth in one warm, golden stream,
So sympathy doth compass every life,
And takes unto herself its bright and dark,
And weaves them into one soft light of hope Perpetually.

She touches pain and makes it sweet to bear.
She touches loss and changes it to gain.
She touches joy and lo, she doubles it.
She touches sorrow and it shrinks away.
She blunts the avenging sword and lifts the slave
From out his narrow bonds to larger life
And destiny.

The fairest flower earth's garden can afford,
The softest light that comes from Heaven above.
The brightest star that decks the crown of love,
The gentlest note that floats on mortal ear,
She suffers with the suffering, she hopes with those who hope,
The tie that binds, the queen of hearts that love,
Is sympathy.
Rio Cuarto, Argentina.

"Among so many, can he care?
Can special love be everywhere?
From the great spaces, vague and dim,
May one small household gather him?
I asked: my soul bethought of this;
In just that very place of his
Where he hath put and keepeth you,
God hath no other thing to do."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Prayer of Intercession

By Geo. E. Cone

(Address at a Morning Prayer Service at the late National Conference at Winona Lake.)

It is quite likely that all too few of us know what intercession in prayer is and thus too few of us practice it in daily life.

The Prayer of Intercession is, perhaps, the hardest of all the forms of prayer into which we may enter. The reason is that it has specifically to do with our infirmities and needs. It takes real study of God's words; real heart searching, real study of the day in which we live and its relation to God's will and plan in order to present before him the needs of ourselves and especially the needs of our fellowmen. To understand our own iniquities and those of our fellows and be able to plead before God as we should, as we are enjoined to do, is a difficult task.

I. Intercessory Prayer Enjoined.

Perhaps with many of us we have not noted the fact that the Bible, speaking for our God, enjoins intercessory prayer.

Please let us note the following:

Job 42:8, "My servant Job shall pray for you" . . . etc.

Psalms 122:6, "Pray for the peace of Jerusalem." We recognize that this was for Israel. We are here pointing out the fact that Intercessory Prayer is Enjoined so note as we proceed and we shall come to the place where we are included.

Jeremiah 29:7, "Seek the peace of the cities whither I have caused you to be carried away captives and pray unto the Lord for it. . . ."

Joel 2:17, "Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine heritage to reproach."

Matthew 5:44, "Pray for them which despitefully use you, and persecute you."

Ephesians 6:18, "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all saints." . . .

I Timothy 2:1, "I exhort therefore, that first of all, supplications, prayers, intercessions, and giving of thanks be made for all men; for kings, and all that are in authority."

James 5:14, "Is any sick among you? let him call for the elders of the church; and let them pray over him, anointing him with oil in the name of the Lord; and the Prayer of faith shall save the sick." . . .

John 5:16, "If any man see his brother sin a sin which is not unto death, he shall ask, and he shall give him life for them that sin not unto death."

Certainly the last few are for those of the present dispensation of grace, for you and me of today. How can we pray for all saints; for kings and all in authority; for the sick; for those who sin not unto death without first knowing God's word, the Bible, and what it teaches? How, unless we know some of the needs of these? How, unless we are intercessors in the truest sense of the word? These things we are enjoined to do.

II. Examples of Intercessory Prayer.

To be sure we are making no attempt to be exhaustive in this study, that would be impossible in the time and space allotted to me. A few examples: Abraham, Genesis 18:20, 23-33—his intercession for the cities of the plain. Moses, Exodus 17:8-16—As he held the rod of God high while Joshua fought with Amalek and he was stayed up by Aaron and Hur.

Exodus 32:30-32; Exodus 33:15-17; Numbers 11:2; 14:13-20; 21:7, 8; Deuteronomy 9:18, 19, 25; 10:10; Psalm 106:23. Samuel, 1 Samuel 7:5-12. A prophet, 1 Kings 13:6. Elijah, 1 Kings 17:20-23. Elisha, 2 Kings 4:33-36. Daniel, Daniel 2:17-23. Peter, Acts 9:40. The church, Acts 12:5-12. Paul, Acts 28:8.

Through the ages to our own present time there are pleas for intercessory prayer. Today we need intercessory foreign missionaries; intercessory home missionaries; intercessory educational leaders, and in fact we need intercessors in every walk of life and for all the work of the extension of the witness to Christ in the world. But how do it? We are told that we will not be left to do this in our own strength or by our own power.

III. Our strength and help in Intercession is from God through the Lord Jesus Christ and the blessed Holy Spirit.

1. We are very plainly taught that Jesus Christ is now at the right hand of God as our Intercessor. Romans 8:27, 34; Hebrews 7:25. And he left us one of the greatest and most wonderful intercessory prayers that is anywhere recorded and this is in John 17. This is Jesus' great Intercessory prayer recorded for our instruction and strength. Instruction, that we may know what intercession is. Strength, in that he has included us as his followers, that we might be partakers of the blessings with the Disciples of his day on earth.

2. We are taught that the Holy Spirit is to teach us what to pray for and to guide us in our prayer.

The disciples said to Jesus, "Lord, teach us to pray." (Luke 11:1), for they did not know how to pray as they ought and came to him to be taught. We today do not know how to pray as we ought—do not know what to pray for, nor how to ask for it—but there is one who is always at hand to help (John 14:16, 17). He knows what we should pray for. He helps our infirmities in this matter of prayer, as in other matters (Romans 8:26, R. V.). He teaches us to pray. Two of the most deeply significant passages in the Bible on the subject of prayer and the leading of the Holy Spirit therein are found in Jude 20 and Ephesians 6:18. (I am indebted to Dr. Torrey for calling these facts, set forth in these two passages, to our minds in his book, "The Power of Prayer and the Prayer of Power"). In Jude 20 we read, "But ye, beloved, building up yourselves on your most holy faith, pray in the Holy Ghost", and in Ephesians 6:18, "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit, and watching thereunto with all perseverance and supplication for all the saints." The prayer in which the Holy Spirit leads us is the prayer that is "according to the will of God" (Rom. 8:27). When we ask anything according to God's will, we know that he hears us and we know that he has granted the thing that we asked (1 John 5:14, 15). This prayer according to the will of God will have the intercessory element inextricably woven into the very warp and woof of it. Beyond question all of us would be of greater use to the Master if we were intercessors.

Isn't God Good

By Bertha Inwood Michael

Isn't God good?—

*The God who hung the universe in space
And fitted every star to fill a place;
Whose power holds all the heaven with its might
And gives each planet air and heat and light.
Who holds the comets as they swiftly race
And sends the meteor showers through endless space.*

*All wonderful, all powerful God is he
And yet he stoops to care for you and me;
Yes, God is good.*

Isn't God good?—

*He made this earthly dwelling place of ours
A place of light and shadow, sun and showers;
He gives us food and water, shelter, care,
Riches and beauty in the earth and air;
He gives us music—from the sea's loud roar
To songs of woodland birds about our door;
He paints each tender flower and butterfly
With beauty that delights both you and I—
Yes, God is good.*

Isn't God good?—

*To give a land where we may dwell in ease
And worship him in any way we please;
Where right is honored—wrong is under ban
And all work for the common good of man;
Where wisdom, love and kindness e'er have led
The weak are strengthened and the hungry fed;
Ah, though he rules the universe on high,
He gives these blessings unto you and I.
Yes, God is good.*

Isn't God good?—

*To give us loved ones by our own fireside;
And though our souls with trials oft are tried
He gives us grace to stand them day by day
If earnestly we always watch and pray;
To think he loved us well enough to give
His Son to save our souls that we might live,
Should make us love and rev'rence and obey
This God of love—and every one can say,
Yes, God is good.*

THE PEW AND THE PULPIT

It takes an audience as well as a preacher to make a sermon worth hearing. Bad sermons may mean bad hearers, quite as often as a bad preacher. Mental indolence, heart indifferences, petty thoughts, narrow prejudices, will suffice to ruin the eloquence of a Chrysostom, and make the tender wooings of a Jowett as unavailing as the thunders of a Parker. There is no more deadly heresy than the notion, alas, too popular, that churchgoers have only to "get good", that is, to receive everything and give nothing, beyond a small money contribution.

How often even an individual hearer may help or mar sincere and earnest preaching every occupant of a pulpit knows. The effect of a sermon is not a question of its length. Some discourses of ten minutes are nine minutes too long. Others are all too short when they occupy an hour. It is the hearer who makes a sermon long or short, quite as much as the preacher. There may be a happy or useful medium in this respect, but the modern heartless and mindless demand for shorter sermons, and even shorter services, for mere brevity's sake, is but a device of godless superficiality against which every preacher who is loyal to his message and his Master will stand firm.—Dr. Frank Ballard, in "Christian Findings after Fifty Years."

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

SPIRITUAL MEDDLING—John 21:20-23. "Lord, and what shall this man do?" It was a useless and needless question, a meddling into matters that were not Peter's concern. If Jesus had answered him, it would not have helped him one iota; "it would not have lit a single lamp along his road", to use the words of the late Dr. Jowett, "it would really only have darkened his goings." Peter's temptation comes to the door of every one of us,—to dabble into things that do not concern us, and which tend to confuse our minds and to cause misunderstandings with others.

TUESDAY

THINGS THAT REMAIN—Heb. 12:25-29. "That those things which cannot be shaken may remain." What changes have taken place during the eighteen centuries since these words were spoken! Many wonderful strides forward have been made. The world has outgrown many things. But there are some things that cannot be fluffed off with the advancing years; they are immovable; they cannot be shaken. Such is a conviction of the presence and reality of the Lord Jesus Christ, and the wonderful work of grace that he accomplished. Jesus remains, and all the spiritual realities that are assured because of him.

WEDNESDAY

THE GREAT NAME—Psalm 111:1-10. "Holy and reverend is his name." There have been, and are, many great and good names to inspire men's hearts and to ennoble their thinking, but none can compare with the name of the "holy One of Israel." Other names pass from age to age, but the name of Jesus is ever glorious. It is the name of power and of love and of grace. It is the name by which we are renewed, the name by which we approach the Father, and the name at which all knees will bow in worship and adoration.

THURSDAY

A MIDNIGHT PRAISE SERVICE—Acts 16:19-25. "And at midnight Paul and Silas prayed and sang praises unto God; and the prisoners heard them." The most unusual thing about this midnight singing was the condition under which it was done. They were sitting in a Roman prison with their feet fast in stocks and their bodies were racked with pain from the terrible beating of the thongs. It is easy to praise God for the happy experiences of life, but to praise him at the midnight hour, when the outlook is black and when persecution and suffering have gripped us—that is a test at which most of us fail.

FRIDAY

THE TASK COMPLETED—2 Tim. 4:5-8. "I have finished my course." What a sense of satisfaction and of triumph it must have brought the great apostle as he faced death, to know that he had completed his task. But the secret had been in keeping steadily at it when others would have rested or taken an easier course. Only he who improves every hour of his day can say when the night comes on, "I have finished my task."

SATURDAY

THE PEACE LOVER—Gen. 26:16-22. "And he removed from thence and digged another well." Isaac greatly prized the family heritage; he spent much time in reclaiming the dilapidated wells of his father Abraham; sentiment was strong with this ancestor-loving patriot. But peace and good-will meant more to him. This is his strong point, the thing that made him great. We need some Isaacs today, men who in international and individual affairs are ready to yield some paltry material advantage for the sake of peace.

SUNDAY

THE GREATEST THING—1 Cor. 13:1-13. "The greatest of these is love." There is no such powerful and permanent a force in the world as love. It may not be apparent at first, but ultimately we see that everything yields before its constraining power. He is invincible who is armed with Christ-like love.—G. S. B.

Lesson Poem

There's a wideness in God's mercy,
Like the wideness of the sea;
There's a kindness in his justice,
Which is more than liberty.

For the love of God is stronger
Than the measure of mankind
And the heart of the Eternal
Is most wonderfully kind.

Comments

We are drawing toward the close of the long tragedy of the northern kingdom. God would not destroy the disobedient nation without a final appeal, and that appeal was made by Hosea.

The name Hosea is the same as Hoshea, that of the last king of Israel. It means "salvation." It was the original name of Joshua. Joshua and Jesus merely add the name Jehovah—"Jehovah is salvation."

We know nothing of Hosea's personal history beyond what we can learn from his writings. He was the son of a man named Beeri, and was, probably, not connected with any prophetic guild—what we should today term a "layman" in distinction from a "clergyman." His work therefore was the more telling when a divine impulse drove him to public work.

Hos. 6:1. Come, let us return, etc. There is a difference of opinion as to whether these verses are the words of a half-repentant nation who have discovered that God was too strong for them, and quoted as such by the prophet as following the last verse in chapter 5; or whether it is an appeal to the people by the prophet himself.

4. A morning cloud, which disappears very quickly as the sun rises higher, and brings no relief in rain. Dew. Here the emphasis is laid on the shortness of its existence.

Hos. 11. Israel is compared to a little child whom his father loved (v. 1). When Israel was a child, then I loved him. He went astray early. And yet the Lord helped him as a father teaches his child to walk, and carries him when weary in his arms. Note how this expresses the early history of Israel, which is a romance, a story of wondrous beauty and love. (v. 4). I drew them with cords of a man, as a human father loves his first-born boy, drawing them with bands of love, all that overflowing affection could do. Yet Israel went astray like the prodigal son, and the Father exclaims in infinite pity; (v. 8). How can I give thee up, Ephraim? ... How shall I make thee as Admah?—a desolate ruin. Yet "Ephraim feedeth on the wind." (12:1) "the parching east wind that combines the ideas of destructiveness and emptiness," worse food than the husks that the swine did eat.

This picture should have moved the hearts of the people to repentance and love. "The goodness of God leadeth to repentance."

1. Called ... out of Egypt. This is history; but it is also a prophecy, as we see from the reference to it in Matt. 2:15.

2. The obstinacy of the people, who resisted those God sent to them, becoming worse as the time went on and more prophets sought to win them.

8. Ephraim. Often used as a name for the whole northern nation. Admah ... Zeb-oiim. Two of the lesser cities involved in the destruction of Sodom and Gomorrah (Gen. 19; Deut. 29:23).

9. I am ... not man. Man would be piqued at such behavior in a son or dependent. Man would be furiously angry at the thoughtless nation. Far more merciful and loving is our God than any earthly father.

14:4. I, Jehovah himself is now speaking, will heal their backsliding. The horrible disease of apostasy. Will love them. His love had never failed, but they should now realize how strong it was.

5. As the dew, which kept the land fertile where rain was so scarce. It was rather a "night mist" than the slight moisture we are more accustomed to. He shall blossom. Not only grow, but increase in beauty. Roots as Lebanon. Strength added to beauty.

6. Beauty ... as the olive tree. The true beauty of character as shown by one's actions. The olive tree is outwardly ugly, but bears an abundance of most useful fruit. It means usefulness in the world, not mere perfection of outward form.

7. His shadow. The brooding, hovering, overshadowing love of God, watched over his people. The prophet again speaks, giving another picture of the increase in beauty and usefulness which should distinguish Israel when she at last should return heartily to the Lord.

8. Jehovah again speaks. Ephraim. The leading tribe of the northern kingdom used to represent the whole people. This was true. After the captivity the Hebrew people never again lapsed into idolatry. I, Jehovah, am like a green, an evergreen, changeless fir-tree. Probably the cypress is meant.

9. Who is wise, etc. A final epilogue. The wise will learn the ways of the Lord and walk in them, for they are right. The just will follow them. The transgressors only shall fail to obey, and fall therein.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Practical Points

Professor Moulton sums up Hosea's teachings in four particulars: (1) God is Love. (2) God asks for Love. (3) God will judge those who slight his Love. (4) He shows us Love triumphing over judgments.

"Every time there comes hurled out of God's holy book with tremendous power the awfulness of man's sin, there comes after it the record of the overpowering, magnificent love."—Margaret Slattery.

What modern nation or what person does not need the lesson we are studying today? "For how much better is London or New York, in many respects, than Samaria?" Our nation is proud of its wealth and power, but these two things lead to worldliness, which is our greatest peril.

"I am told that the only side upon which Edinburgh Castle was successfully assailed was where the rocks were steepest, and where the garrison thought themselves secure."

Our sins must be acknowledged, humbly before God and frankly before every one who should hear the confession for an reason. Then we are simply, in Christ's strength, to obey Sam Jones's oft-repeated injunction, "Quit your meanness!" We are to "cease to do evil, learn to do well."

God Seeks Men

"God seeks men in all ages, both before and after Christ, it has been the clear conviction of devout souls that God sought them much more ardently and persistently than they sought God. The truth which shines most conspicuously in the experience of all the saved is that they were saved by God and not by themselves. If human experience is to be trusted at all, if it in any case reflects the substantial verities of the spiritual world, then we may hold it as proved in the uniform experience of men that God somehow communicated to them a living energy, and not only taught them what to do, but gave them strength to do it."—Marcus Dods.

"God is good even if men are sinful and forgetful. Psalm 105:45 says God remembered unfaithful Israel for his covenant, even if it was a covenant that they had broken. God's goodness is unchanging, even toward men of evil. There are mysteries in his providence; there are tragic consequences of sin for which the good suffer vicariously with the wicked. The Book of

TEN GRADUATES IN TRAINING COURSE

The Teacher-Training commencement at the First Brethren church last evening was well attended and the program interesting throughout. A class of ten young ladies and young men received teacher training certificates which were presented by Dr. Mary Laughlin, chairman of the committee. The pastor, Rev. Dr. G. C. Carpenter, was the teacher of the class and gave the commencement address, speaking on "The Teacher's Task." He said in part:

"Every faithful teacher holds a high position, whether the salary in dollars is high or not. The position is high because the responsibility is great. The position is higher than that of the cashier of a bank or the governor of a state or the president of a railroad, because the teacher is dealing with immortal souls. The teacher must know the Bible and not only teach the principles of Jesus but live them in his own life."

Follow Me

The coming of our Savior is a call: Follow me. How? Where? There is no other test. He does not come that we shall succumb, lie down, do nothing, go on as we were. He comes commanding, "Follow me."

Let me tell this story of Grenfell of Labrador. We know what God has done through him: miracles. He tells this of lowly places where he has met and caught the vision. He says:

I can only say that I have been lifted out of myself and nearer to God, and got a clearer vision of what God means to human life, many more times in schooners' fo'c'sles, or in Labrador cottages, than I have in any cathedral or other preaching place. Take this example: One night, in a Labrador house, I was trying to work out what the father and the mother of a large family of children could do to fend off starvation during the winter. Their last barrel of flour had been opened. It was then only early in November, and they had nothing in sight for winter in the way of food except what they should shoot or trap, 'till June should come around again. Not long before, a man further North, late in the spring, with his family starving, had driven out his wife and eldest son to go South and seek a neighbor who might feed them, and had then killed his small children with an ax and shot himself. Even as I sat in the cottage, a knock came at the door, and my friend went out into the entrance porch, and I heard him talking to a neighbor. I then distinctly heard him ladling out flour from his barrel into a baking-tin that the neighbor had brought. "What were you doing, Tom?" I asked him when he came back. "I was lending Uncle George a pan of flour," he said. "Is he out of it already?" I inquired. "Yes, he is," was the reply. I then asked him: "Will he ever pay you back?" and he said, "I do not think so; I do not think he can." I asked, "Then why do you do it when your children are already hungry?" The man looked into my face and said simply: "What would you do, doctor?"

It is Matthew himself speaking in his own gospel who says, "Jesus ... saw a man called Matthew sitting at the place of toll and saith unto him, Follow me." Why Matthew and not each of us? No less, then, he see you and me at the place we are; and to us, act by act, in character, purpose, influence, life—

"Day by day his sweet voice calleth, Saying, 'Christian, follow me'."

In the name of the Father, and the Son and the Holy Ghost. Amen.—Central Christian Advocate.

JUNIOR ENDEAVOR

By Virginia Haun

(Topic for November 13)

Paul, a Traveller Who Served God Acts 13: 13-16

Just a few years after Jesus was crucified and arose from the dead, there was a certain young man named Paul who was converted. This young man had refused to believe in Jesus for a long time but after he was converted, he began working very hard for the Master. Now in the days when Paul began his preaching, the Christians were having a very hard time. In some places those who believed in Jesus were killed even, but Paul went from place to place preaching. Sometimes he got in terrible trouble with people who did not want him to preach but he always had many good friends among those whom he told about Jesus. The book of the Acts and some of Paul's letters that are in the Bible tell us all about his ministry and the experiences that he had.

One time while Paul was traveling about preaching, he came to a little town called Lystra. And it happened that while Paul was preaching he saw a man among his audience who was crippled. Paul watched this poor crippled man. The crippled man seemed to be listening to every word that was spoken and soon Paul realized that the crippled man was among those who believed the things that he was preaching. When Paul saw the faith of this poor man who had had such an unhappy life, he went to him. Just think, this crippled man had never walked, not in all the long time that he had lived. Wouldn't you have been happy if you could have been in Paul's place? But maybe you don't know what Paul did. I'll tell you. Paul went to the crippled man and said to him, "Stand on your feet and walk." Then the crippled man arose and walked. Wouldn't it be wonderful to be able to do things for people like that? It must have made Paul very happy indeed to have this power given him by Jesus to help people.

When the people of the town saw the lame man walking they were so astonished that they did not know what to do. They could not understand about Jesus for they had not heard Paul preach very much up until then. The people gathered together and said to each other, "Who can these men be?" You see another man named Barnabas was with Paul. The people of Lystra had always believed in many gods. They believed in a god named Jupiter who was the chief of all the gods and then they believed in Mercury and Mars and many other Gods. It was hard for them to understand about Jesus for Paul had not been preaching very long there. I think that that was the reason that these people decided that Paul and Barnabas were gods. They called them Mercury and Jupiter. And then a large number of people began bringing gifts to Paul and to Barnabas and they wanted to offer sacrifices to these two men just as they did to their many gods.

My, but Paul and Barnabas were surprised. They did not expect the people to think that they were gods. Then they began talking and trying to explain that the man had been healed through the name of Jesus and that the people ought to worship Jesus and not the messengers of Jesus. It was almost impossible to make that big crowd of people understand that they were not to worship the men who could heal crippled people. However, Paul and Barnabas finally persuaded the crowd to believe them when they said that they were only men.

Then a very terrible thing happened. Some people from another town came to Lystra. These people did not believe the things that Paul had preached to them and they made it very unpleasant for Paul in their own town. Now what do you suppose they did? They persuaded the people of Lystra to believe that Paul was a wicked man. Just think of that. Paul had been traveling many, many miles, walking most of the time, just to preach about Jesus. Now these people came to Lystra and persuaded the town to believe that Paul was wicked. Then a very awful thing happened. This big crowd of people gathered up stones and hurled them at Paul. When they thought that he was dead, they took his body and threw it outside of the city.

Jesus was with Paul and helped him so that he did not really die. You would think that Paul would have felt so sick and worried after such an experience that he would have gone on home at least to rest a while. But Paul was a very wonderful man and so he went on to the next city and preached again. Thus he spent his life traveling for Jesus.

SUNDAY SCHOOL NOTES

Job strikes a deeper note that certain portions of the Psalms and certain chapters of Isaiah familiarize us with, the idea of the innocent suffering for the guilty. But can we doubt that God's truth endureth forever, or that his mercy is everlasting?—Selected.

Rio Cuarto, Argentina

Since last report we have held a week of special meetings in commemoration of the completion of 1900 years since the beginning of the ministry of Jesus. The meetings were well attended and the spiritual results excellent. The membership has been quickened and several renewed their consecration, while several new converts have applied for baptism. One of these is a fine young man employed by the railway company. Another is a young married man who was converted by a sermon on the second coming of Christ. He not only has given himself to the Lord but brought an offering of $100 Argentine ($43.00 U. S.) saying it is part of what he should have been giving to the Lord before and didn't.

Two more boys were baptized on September 25th when we closed the series of meetings with a day of fasting and prayer. A young widow woman converted in Laboulaye is now living here and attending the meetings. She gave proof of her sincerity in Laboulaye by rejecting a wealthy suitor for her hand because he would not first accept Christ. We teach our people not to be unequally yoked with unbelievers, but some live in country places where they have no chance except with unbelievers.

We have isolated believers in Canals and Rosario who have formed Sunday schools on their own account and report a good attendance. There is to be a Sunday school teachers' training conference in Buenos Aires this coming week and the secretary of our school is planning to attend at his own expense. Thus there are constant indications of growth in the work, but we long to see it grow faster. The masses are still indifferent or hostile. The men especially are mostly members of different labor or trades unions and these are usually dominated by the irreligious and communistic elements. Unless a man is a strong character he finds it hard to endure the sneers of his companions. However, we find many signs of growing appreciation of our work also. In past years I could not speak to the prisoners in the penitentiary here because of the opposition of the chaplain, a priest, but now I am invited to speak whenever I wish to do so.

We have just received the news of the Conference at Winona and are glad for the advance steps taken. With the return of our absent workers we hope to witness a great advance in our work during the coming year, although we shall greatly miss the efficient help of Sister Nielsen, who will be leaving on furlough within several months.

There is an interdenominational movement to pray for a continental movement of evangelization. The time seems ripe for such a general movement and we ask the brethren of the homeland to aid it also by their prayers.

Embarked

S. S. Amerique, 60 miles from Bordeaux,
 At Anchor, October 12, 1927.
 Dear Friends:

Strange things happen indeed. Here we are, after 24 hours of voyage only 60 miles on our way.

Yesterday was a day of excitement. At the last moment I found that through Professor Deveau in Bordeaux I could get some much needed drugs which because of their toxicity had been refused me in Paris.

The morning was spent in their search. A cablegram was sent to the field and lunch was just to be served before a hurried departure, when Professor Deveau in whose home I was a guest, arrived with the announcement that the crew of the Amerique was on a strike and that the boat would not leave yesterday.

So lunch was leisurely eaten, and I retired to my room to rest. At last everything was done, and ready for the departure. I felt a feeling of relaxation not hitherto recently experienced, and was soon sound asleep. Suddenly I was aroused by a commotion in the house, a frantic knocking at my door and the word that the boat would leave in ten minutes. One minute to put on shoes and wraps, another to catch up suitcase and bundles, and jump in the automobile which the kind friends had waiting for me, several minutes' rapid driving to the quay, a breathless rush through passport control and customs, and on the boat at last! A moment or two of unexpected delay permitted me to bid my friends goodbye, then the gang-plank was withdrawn and we were off with only a part of the crew, and a somewhat larger proportion of passengers. 60 miles down river we dropped anchor. Since we have been waiting for detachments of passengers and crew who have arrived in relays. One more boat-load is due before we leave. These drastic measures were taken by the company to prevent the remnant of the crew from disembarking. We hope to be off tonight.

The rest of yesterday afternoon and that of the twenty-four hours on the river have been very agreeable. Now I must face with new courage twenty-three days at sea, persuaded that our heavenly Father doeth all things well and will safely bring us to the desired haven, i. e., the haven HE desires for us.

Since reaching Bordeaux I have learned that yellow fever is raging in West Coast ports, especially at Senegal.

You will yet receive this in time, I trust to pray for God's special protection all along the way, from this and every other danger. Brother and Sister Taber were well, happy, and busy when last I heard from them (letter written October 10th).

Yours in his Service,

FLORENCE N. GRIBBLE.

IN THE TONGUES OF AFRICA

The second largest of earth's continents, Africa, has a vast number and variety of languages, most of which are peculiarly its own. It is true, there are Asiatic and European tongues which have been imported into Africa by those who have migrated thither from the neighboring continents. So, in ancient times, we know that men brought from Asia the group of languages spoken in northeastern Africa known as Semitic languages. To this group belong the Arabic, the Ge'ez or "Ethiopic", the Amharic, and the Tigre and Tigrina—all of which are confined to Abyssinia and Italian Eritrea, except the widespread Arabic. And in modern times men of Europe have brought the English, Dutch, French, Portuguese, Spanish, German, and Italian languages, in connection with colonizing, commercial or missionary movements.

Besides these two linguistic invasions of Africa, one modern, one ancient, many scholars believe that there is evidence of a far more ancient invasion of a family of languages known as Hamitic. This family is represented today, for example, by the language spoken by the Riffs of Morocco—those tribesmen who have lately been making so much trouble for the French and Spanish armies—and by the language of the Somalis of extreme East Africa—those tall fellows who have taken a rather conspicuous place in the armies of Europe's colonial powers.

After subtracting all these families from the list of Africa's languages, there remain two well-marked families that are what we may regard as characteristically African, indigenous to the soil, at least as far back as science can trace. These are known as the Sudanic and the Bantu tongues. The former of these is very simple in its structure, almost without inflection, largely monosyllabic, and depending much on the "tone" on which the word is sounded to distinguish its meaning—in all these respects resembling the Chinese far off in Eastern Asia. The latter, the Bantu, is marked by long words, made up of elements put together according to definite laws, and most strikingly distinguished from similar languages elsewhere by the fact that what is added to the root of the word to determine its meaning is not appended at the end, but prefixed to the beginning, of the root. This is what causes us so much difficulty in identifying the names of an African country, language and people. We make our dictionaries and gazeteers on the alphabetical principle, governing the order by the first letter of the name, then by the second letter, and so on. But what can we do with such a problem as this?—a tribe that calls itself collectively Ba-suto, one of its members a Mo-suto, its land Le-suto, and its language Se-suto? Some have made the rule to use the base or root of such a word, namely, s-u-t-o, as the key to cataloguing it everywhere and always. But even then much confusion remains in identifying country, language and people.

There is no clear line that separates these two language groups from each other, geographically. But, on the whole, the Bantu group lies further south than the Sudanic group; while especially in the west the two are inextricably mingled.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The annual homecoming which was held last Saturday, was in most respects the most satisfactory in our history. The weather was ideal, not too cool nor too warm for the comfort of both the players and the spectators.

Ashland played Manchester College, the first athletic contest ever held between the two schools. Score, Ashland 22, Manchester 6. It was a good, clean game.

The grounds were decorated with Purple and Gold, the Ashland colors, and with Black and Gold for the visiting team. The new gymnasium made a fine appearance with the flags of both schools flying. It accommodated the two big squads of some 25 each with ease.

The College Band with its new uniforms greatly added to the enjoyment of the day. Also the Freshmen were so well organized and did their parts so well with the ushering, leading the children's section of the cheering, selling things for the benefit of the Band, etc., that everything moved off smoothly.

After the game, the Alumni Association gave a beef barbecue to former students, present students, and graduates. The weather was fine and several hundred stood around enjoying the refreshments and renewing old acquaintances.

Several hundred former students returned for the occasion and it was good to see them here. A mammoth bonfire was kindled in the evening which had been prepared several days before by the Freshmen. It rekindled old flames to see men in the gloaming who had in former years borne Ashland's banners to victory. The old Ashland spirit was exhibited everywhere and friends seem nearer and dearer on such occasions.

Dr. Bell, Rev. Stuckman and Rev. Ashman were trustees present from a distance. Many other prominent alumni were present whose name I would like to list, but space forbids.

Sunday morning Dr. Bell preached to an unusually large audience as many of the visitors stayed over. Communion was held in the evening with a very good attendance.

Thus the week ended in a blaze of glory and the new one began with excellent religious inspiration. Dr. Bell expects to begin his canvass now in Ohio. He is doing a man's work and I bespeak for him an enthusiastic reception wherever he goes for the work of the College.

Three more weeks to Thanksgiving vacation. Thus time moves on and ever on and our tasks, whatever they may be, are either done or left undone. School years slip past one by one. The school grows older and older, extending its influence,—and at the same time waits and waits for the happy culminating day when it shall have reached a goal, not the final goal, but a goal, viz., with finances sufficiently secure to give us the standing that our intrinsic worth by right demands.

EDWIN E. JACOBS.

SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

I closed my work with the Sunnyside church on September 1. This was my second pastorate with these people. During the past two years the Lord saw fit to bless our work together. During that time sixty persons were added to the membership of the church. This was the result of a fine spirit of cooperation on the part of the congregation since it was impossible to have a special evangelistic campaign. During this time the Lord made possible the largest Foreign Missions offering in the history of the congregation. We were fortunate in having Rev. Earl W. Reed with us. His presence not only made the work easier but it also made possible the starting the new work at Harrah, Washington, a work which promises great things for the future. One outstanding characteristic of the membership of the Sunnyside church is their love for the Word. They never tire of listening to an exposition of the message of the Book. This congregation has already given workers for the foreign field and at the present two excellent workers have offered themselves for the African field and are only awaiting the final call of the Board. At least one from this congregation is waiting the opening of the way whereby he may enter the ministry.

Just before leaving for National Conference a farewell reception was held in honor of the retiring pastor. Many of the members of the congregation were present and a most pleasant evening was spent together. Many words of good will were given expression and a gift in money, sufficiently large to make possible attending National Conference, was given their former pastor.

I shall always remember with real joy the pleasant fellowship of the past years and I especially thank all who contributed to the success of the work and all those who did things that brought joy to their pastor and helped lift the load. My prayers and best wishes are given for the church and their new pastor, C. C. Grisso, and I covet for him a most faithful and loyal support on the part of the membership.

Garwin, Iowa

Immediately after National Conference I began a meeting in the Carleton church near Garwin, Iowa. The church is under the leadership of Rev. W. E. Thomas who was called to this pastorate the first of September. This is the old home of Brother Thomas and this fact should be a source of real joy to the pastor and to be an incentive to do the very best piece of work of his entire ministry.

I found here a group of faithful people who, in spite of local discouragements, showed a willingness to work and I believe a worthwhile piece of work was done during the three weeks we labored together. I found here a real hunger for the Word. This hunger was especially manifest on the part of the ladies of the congregation. As many as twenty gathered for the afternoon Bible studies and so great was their interest in the study that when rains made the roads impassable for automobiles these good women hitched a team to a farm wagon and gathered the members of the class for the study. I am convinced a real hunger for the Word has been created that will bear fruit in the years ahead. Everything possible was done for my comfort and the fine meals and excellent entertainment bears evidence of the hospitality of these people. While the ingathering was not as large as we had hoped, yet when local conditions are considered, all felt that a constructive piece of work was done which will bear fruit in days to come. I covet for these people and their pastor the greatest possible success.

Ankenytown, Ohio

Boarding the train at Marshalltown, Iowa, at 11:52 after the Sunday night service at Garwin I traveled approximately six hundred miles and was at Ankenytown, Ohio for service at eight o'clock on Monday evening. Brother Lindower, the pastor had well advertised the meeting and there was good interest from the very beginning. Despite the very busy season good crowds were maintained throughout the entire meeting and the Sunday night crowds taxed the church building to its capacity. Here, too, I found a hunger for the Word and a deep interest in the messages was manifest. It was a real joy to work with Brother and Sister Lindower. These talented young people have given themselves to his service and their ministry in song was a real help in the meetings. They showed their real interest by being present at practically all the services, arriving from Ashland in spite of their heavy work in the college.

Since Ankenytown was my old home in past years this visit gave me the opportunity to renew acquaintances and visit with members of my family. My home during the meeting was with my brother and his wife. I was also privileged to visit in the homes of other members of my family as well as in the homes of old friends. This was an opportunity that meant much to me.

The time for the meeting was all too short for a field such as we found here but all were more than pleased with the results. The pastor has already reported the outcome of the effort, but one thing of importance to the local work is that heads of families were in the number taking a stand for the Lord. One man of over seventy who had not been in the services for many years was one of the converts. When I left him he was greatly rejoicing in his new-found faith. At the close of this meeting I was privileged to visit Ashland College for just a short time. I was pleased to note the many improvements and glad for the outlook for real success in future years.

Leon, Iowa

My next stand was at Leon, Iowa, where I attended the Illiokota Conference. I found here a live bunch of ministers, hungry for the Word, and if I am permitted a prediction, we will yet hear of these young men who are now leading in the work of the district. It was a real treat to fellowship with these young men on fire for God.

I was privileged to speak three times during the conference and I also remained over Sunday and spoke for the Leon brethren five times. At two of these services I spoke on "The Law of the Octave", using a stereopticon. For the most part I was entertained in the home of the pastor, Rev. Claud Studebaker. I enjoyed this privilege very much. I was permitted to share the hospitality of the Elder J. W. Garber, and the Merrill homes. Everything possible was done for me in each of these homes. On the morning of the day I left Leon I was privileged to speak to the Leon High School pupils. This was a fine opportunity and was made possible because of the fact that Brother Studebaker is a member of the School Board. I was especially impressed by the large number of young people and school teachers in the Leon congregation and am convinced that this church has a real future.

Hamlin, Kansas

By traveling well into the night I was able to reach Hamlin for the last day of the Mid-west Conference. I found here a number of persons whom I had known in past days. It was a real joy to meet here a number whom I had met in Ashland College. I spoke twice during the conference and remained over to speak for the Hamlin church on Friday night. I was also privileged to speak at the High School on the last day of the conference. Mrs. Schaffer, the pastor's wife, who is a teacher in the city schools, made possible this opportunity. While I was in Hamlin I was cared for in the pastor's home. No pains were spared to make my stay with them pleasant. Brother Schaffer is fitting into the work in fine shape and the Hamlin church should move forward.

I am now at Carleton, Nebraska, in a meeting with Rev. C. R. Koontz, an acquaintance of days at Ashland. The meeting is starting off in good shape. Full report will be given later. Suffice it to say that the attendance at the afternoon Bible study has reached the high-water mark so far this year.

Pray for the work in which I am engaged. To him belongs all the credit for whatever degree of success is attending the effort.

J. C. BEAL.

ILLIKOTA CONFERENCE AT LEON, IOWA

The Illiokota District Conference was the very best that I have ever attended anywhere, this year. We had a longer session than has been held for several years and there was the fine spirit of fellowship which a Brethren Conference should have. Every message rang true to the Word of God and there was much discussion of Bible truths during the intermissions. The delegates seemed to be anxious to understand the Bible better and to grasp the means whereby they could be more greatly used of God in his work.

Brother W. I. Duker, President of the National Sunday School Association, was present to present the needs of the Sunday school people and especially the means whereby the young people may be held and trained for the work of the church. We are sure the Conference thanks him and the Association for his presence with us and the message he brought us.

Brother Chas. L. Anspach was with us to present the College address and all were well pleased with the splendid address and the fine way in which it was presented. The college has rendered us a fine favor by releasing our Brother Anspach for this time that he might be present with us.

We were favored by having Brother Anspach present the facts in regard to the Superannuated Ministers' Fund, the Brethren's Home and the Publishing interests in brief yet telling form. Certainly we shall feel our privilege in caring for these interests more keenly than in the past.

Perhaps the outstanding feature of this year's conference was the fact that we were privileged to hear Bible lectures from our Brother J. C. Beal. Certainly we were fed upon the Word in these lectures. Brother Beal has spent much time and thought with the Word and we were given the benefit of this in every possible way. The Bible lectures were not the greatest benefit of Brother Beal's presence with us. At least not for many of us. His fine spirit of helpfulness in personal conversation on Biblical themes and explaining problems is perhaps of greater benefit to some of us than the lectures, though they were certainly splendid.

The conference as a whole wish Brother Beal God's rich blessing as he goes here and there in the work of the Master.

We feel that it will be of interest, not alone to the Illiokota people, but to the brotherhood to know of the officary of the conference for this conference year, so we send herewith the list of officers elect.

The brotherhood may be assured of the vital interest of this district in all of the various and varied work of the Brethren denomination. It wishes God-speed to every organization and every individual in the church so long as they are true to the Blessed Book and true to the plea of the Brethren church.

Resolutions

We, the delegates of the Illiokota district of the Brethren church, in conference assembled, do thank God for his benevolent mercy and grace in making possible our re-assembling amid such pleasant circumstances as we have encountered at Leon.

As a conference, we also desire to go on record as standing for certain definite factors in our religious life, and to this end be it

Resolved, That this conference heartily endorses and adopts the position of absolute loyalty to the Scriptures taken by all the ministers who have spoken at this meeting; that we as a conference recommend a program of Bible studies for our young people, taught by competent Bible students who believe in the Bible as written.

That the Sunday schools of our churches, through all their avenues of endeavor, take a sound, firm position on these same outstanding teachings of our church, so that the boys and girls growing to maturity may recognize in the Brethren church not merely a denomination, but a real body of Christian people striving to obey in their entirety the teachings and commands of Christ the Lord.

That all Sunday school classes, as far as possible, be taught by converted, experienced and trained teachers.

Recognizing the home as God's first institution for man, that we strive to have more family altars in our homes; therefore, be it resolved, that our ideal is a family altar in every home.

That, while the chief work of the church is winning souls to Christ and training them for the Christian life, good citizenship is a by-product of the Christian life; so we as Christians should do all we can to uphold the laws of our country, and to shield the young from the snares set for them by the bootlegger, the tobaccoist and the promoters of impure shows and impure literature.

That we reaffirm our loyalty to District, Home, and Foreign Missions.

That we thank most heartily Rev. J. C. Beal for his inspiring and thought-provoking ministry to us during this conference, and that we pray God's richest blessing to continue with him during the year.

That, having enjoyed ourselves immensely in this conference, we extend a hearty vote of thanks to the pastor, Brother Claud Studebaker, and the members of the Leon church for the kindness and efficiency of their care for us.

J. S. C. SPICKERMAN,
MRS. RAY A. EMMERT,
F. W. GARBER.

MID-WEST DISTRICT CONFERENCE

The Mid-west District Conference convened at the Hamlin, Kansas, church on October 11, 12, and 13. Despite the fact that it had rained for several days before the conference, and the roads were not in good condition, the attendance was good. At the evening sessions, standing room was at a premium.

The program was such as to draw a large attendance. For the first time in a number of years we had three out-of-state speakers on the program. Prof. C. L. Anspach, Head of the department of Education in Ashland College, brought us two informational and inspirational messages. Dr. J. C. Beal, representing the Evangelistic and Bible Study League, gave two masterful Bible lectures and Miss Gertrude Leedy, General Secretary for the W. M. S., brought a vital address on "The Devotional Life."

The speakers from the several churches of the district who gave splendid addresses included the following: Brethren Koontz, Eglin, Wood, Myers, E. E. Lichty, Schaffer, Kemper, Guy Lichty, Landis, Lowman and others. Mrs. L. G. Wood and Mrs. W. H. Schaffer also gave worthwhile addresses.

The devotional life of the conference was strengthened by having the following leaders: J. F. Hornbeck, J. H. Burnworth, S. Lowman, N. P. Eglin, Mrs. Clarence Overfield, Mrs. H. H. Rowsey, and Miss Twila Snyder.

The music of the Conference was a special feature. In addition to the splendid congregational singing we had the following special talent: The Morrill Orchestra, The Falls City Trio, the Kimmel Sisters, Mr. and Mrs. R. C. Berkley, Miss Nellie Prater, Miss Mildred Lichty, and Mrs. E. Shelton.

The business sessions of the conference were harmonious and encouraging. E. E. Lichty, treasurer of District Mission Board reported:

Balance from last year$332.86
Total received, including balance brought forward 899.11
Paid out during year 596.00
Balance on hand 303.11

The district statistician's report was presented showing: 8 churches in district. 8 reported. 8 churches and 6 parsonages owned by the churches. 406 male members and 609 female members, making a total of 1015 members. Added by letter and relation, 12; by baptism, 36; making total additions, 48. Lost by death, letter, etc., 17, making a net gain of 31. Number of revivals held, 5. Prayer meetings being conducted, 3, with an average attendance of 14.

Under "finances" the church houses were valued at $60,000.00; parsonages at $19,000.00. Total valuations, $79,000.00. Under money paid out the following was reported, Pastors' salaries, $9,578.18; Evangelistic services, $369.98; Current expenses, $2,649.58; Improvements, $358.81; District missions, $635.00; Home missions $455.32; Foreign missions $1,236.77; Superannuated ministers $142.40; Brethren Home, $79.86; Ashland College, $132.05; Brethren Publishing Co., $123.11; Miscellaneous, $367.33; making a total paid out, $16,128.39. Total amount in treasury March 31, 1927, $307.56. Deacons reported 19, deaconesses 8, elders 11.

The District Mission apportionments were announced as follows:

Falls City, Nebraska,$200.00
Morrill, Kansas, 110.00
Carleton, Nebraska, 100.00
Hamlin, Kansas, 75.00
Portis, Kansas, 75.00
Beaver City, Nebraska, 60.00
Ft. Scott, Kansas, 25.00

The Conference decided, upon motion of the District Mission Board, to grant the same support to Fort Scott and Mulvane as given last year.

Motion prevailed that the Mid-West District Conference agrees to assume six hundred sixty dollars of an indebtedness of sixteen hundred sixty dollars against the Fort Scott church on condition that the National Home Mission Board assume the remaining one thousand dollars of this indebtedness.

Committee on Revision of Ministerial list presented the names of twenty elders in good standing in the district, and five on an uncertain list. The uncertain list was referred to the District Ministerial Examining Board for investigation.

Motion prevailed to place the contract between the Nickerson, Kansas church and the Brethren Publishing Company in the hands of the District Trustees, who shall see that the terms of the contract are carried out. This contract refers to a gift of five hundred dollars to be known as the Tract Revolving Fund.

Morrill, Kansas was selected as the place for the 1928 conference.

The following resolutions were adopted: We the delegates of the Mid-west Conference of the Brethren church, in conference assembled, do thank Almighty God for his benevolent grace and mercy in making possible our reassembling amid such pleasant circumstances as we have encountered at Hamlin.

As a conference we desire to go on record as standing for the position of absolute loyalty to God's Word taken in the "Message of the Brethren Ministry."

We recommend for each congregation a program of Bible studies for our young people, taught by competent Bible students who believe in the Bible as written; that all Sunday school classes, as far as possible, be taught by converted, experienced and trained teachers.

Recognizing the home as God's first institution for man, that we strive to have more family altars in our homes, our ideal being a family altar in each home.

We reaffirm our loyalty to District, Home, and Foreign Missions, to Ashland College, the Brethren Publishing Company, and the benevolences of the church.

We tender our thanks and appreciation to Dr. J. C. Beal, Prof. C. L. Anspach, and Miss Gertrude Leedy for their helpful and inspiring messages; and to the Morrill Orchestra for their message in song and music.

We extend our hearty thanks to the Hamlin church for their courtesies and the efficient way in which they have entertained the visiting delegates, and we urge a larger representation at the next conference at Morrill.

Respectfully submitted,
C. R. KOONTZ.

IN MEMORIAM ORION E BOWMAN

Orion E. Bowman, son of Elder John J. and Catherine Bowman, was born at New Lebanon October 27th, 1879 and departed this life Thursday night, October 6th, at the age of 47 years, 11 months, and 9 days.

Brother Bowman lived his life in Montgomery County. Since his early young manhood he pursued first the profession of teaching, and later that of Attorney at law, having received his training for these respective professions at Ohio Northern University at Ada, and the American School of Law at Chicago. His teaching was in schools in Harrison and Madison Townships. His practice of law has been in this city. And of the many responsible positions he has held as an attorney our city daily papers have made mention.

On June 1st, 1902 Brother Bowman was united in marriage to Ardella Mae Newsock. Dayton became their place of residence and has remained so until our brother's death. Into this home two sons were born, Byron B., and Walter E. Walter having preceded his father to the spirit world at the age of six. There remain to mourn the death of the deceased, the wife, the son Byron, two brothers, Mr. Perry Bowman of this city, and David Bowman of New Lebanon, and a sister, Mrs. Alice Shively also of Dayton; besides numerous other relatives and literally a host of friends.

Something like 20 years ago Brother Orion Bowman entered upon the Christian life and united with the College Street Church of the Brethren under the ministry of Dr. Charles A. Bame. Some few years later, in 1909 he became a member of this congregation. Of his tireless activity and service during the years in various capacities both in the church and church school much could be said in very highest commendation and praise. The committee on resolutions has dwelt upon this noble and unstinted service.

But the service of Brother Bowman to his Lord and his kingdom went far beyond the confines of this congregation. He was recognized in this city and in the Brethren denomination as a layman of outstanding ability and of undivided loyalty to Christ and the church. Few, indeed if any, laymen stood higher in our denomination than did Orion E. Bowman. To him belongs the distinction of being the only layman ever elected Moderator of a Brethren General Conference—a position which he filled with rare and creditable ability. With the Dayton Council of Churches, the Council of Religious Education, and the City Y. M. C. A., as well as other religious movements of this city, Brother Bowman's name and influence have been linked up in vital ways. In our denomination there is hardly an organization or movement which has not felt his invigorating touch and influence—Our college, our Foreign Missionary interests, our Home for the aged at Flora, Indiana, to all of these he has given much and valuable service and support. At various times he has placed at the disposal of his denomination legal advice and service which meant much and of which the public perhaps knew nothing. And this he did cheerfully and gratuitously.

Orion E. Bowman was possessed in a splendid way with the spirit of true service—may I say, unselfish service. He loved to serve. And faithfulness was a bold, outstanding quality of his character. Whatever he set himself to do, whether in his home, in the church, in the city, in his denomination, or in the work of his profession he did it faithfully and to the very best of his ability. This is one of the sure marks of strong, deserving character.

He was truly a courteous, Christian gentleman—considerate and kind. He maintained always such a poise, such a control over his words and emotions as might well be the object of envy of most men. He was a man of convictions. He demanded the right to think for himself, but he never betrayed any inclination to deprive his fellowmen of the same right. And we must believe that he was fairminded enough to credit with sincerity those who might not agree with him. Possessed of a lovable, sunny, genial spirit it was only natural that he would make and hold many friends. This he did, unmistakably.

Brother Bowman was a hard worker. It is just possible that he worked too hard. He loved his profession. He was very happy in his work. He prospered. And it was his testimony that he was successful because he made Jesus his silent partner. He was a faithful tither. He kept two sets of books—one for God and the other for himself. Needless to say he kept the one with as great care as the other.

I have held off until now to say that it is entirely probable that Orion E. Bowman appeared to the very finest and best advantage in his home. He was a home man. He loved his home, and our sadness is intensified today in the thought that he had to leave so very soon a new and beautiful house which was also an ideal home. Some of us will not soon forget the dedication of that home. It was the desire of Brother Bowman and wife that their new home should be set apart and dedicated with a fitting service. And I am happy to say that the religious note was predominant in that service. God was to have a place in that home. We sung some sacred songs. The remarks that were made were religious in nature. And a final part of that service was the unveiling of a beautiful picture and that too was a very religious, very sacred picture—The vision of the Cross—Our Lord in the Garden. Brother Bowman's home was a sacred place to him.

I saw him often in his long illness. I saw him endure great suffering. Many times we read together from God's word and prayed together. Not once did he fail to say, Thank you, and come again. Not once did I see him but that he asked about the church and the church school. Not once did I see him but that he was remarkably brave, and cheerful, and uncomplaining. I have never seen anything quite like it. It was beautiful and inspiring. And those who were nearest him during those long months of discouragement and suffering, testify that not once did his patience fail or his kindly manner forsake him. He was a game fighter for health. But when it became evident that disease would win, there was a calm resignation and a willingness to go. Everything was done that a loyal wife and loving friends could do to help him win back his health. But disease triumphed. But, just as it takes the darkness of night to bring out the stars, so we were enabled to see in this man's long illness the beauty of his character, and the worth of true religion in its power to sustain and anchor the Christian amid the grim and desperate experiences of life.

Orion E. Bowman only lived 48 years. And yet, it is not, how long we live, but how well we live. What do we live for? What are our motives and purposes? What are the things we strive hardest for? These are the things that determine the worth of a man's life.

Think of the large part this man had in the vital things of life! Think of his accomplishments! Think of the many directions in which his influence has gone out! Truly Orion E. Bowman has lived well. He has lived on the higher levels. The world is better for his being here. We are better for knowing him. He has left to his wife many sacred and beautiful memories. He has left to his son the finest heritage a father can leave to his son—a clean, noble, manly record, and a Godly example. Let us all live so as to meet him over there.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

ORION E. BOWMAN—An Appreciation

The life of no man, perhaps outside of immediate relations was ever more closely interwoven with mine, than the subject of this sketch. We first met perhaps, in 1902. Though we had both attended the same college, the Ohio Northern University, and mayhap have been there at the same time, we had our first meeting where his life was to blossom out in its finest and fullest usefulness, in the religious atmosphere. We both were young; he, several years younger than myself. He a young school teacher and myself having just a few months before, left that interesting field for the work of the ministry. It was in the little College Street church, the scene of many a happy experience for both of us, that this first meeting occurred. It was in a revival service and the invitation was being given—a simple holding up of the hand for confession—and responses were not coming when I said, "Surely some one here wants to start the procession toward heaven, tonight! Will not some one hold up your hand and be that one?" The young teacher's hand went up like a flash. Through my tears, I can still see it, and in my grief, I treasure it as a precious memory. What a procession he did start, that evening. Several at that meeting, and ever since, young men and with them, young ladies have followed his leadership on toward the heavenly HOME. So young, so vigorous and so influential, he has gone on, and waves back to the youth to follow on to release and victory and reward—triumph. For ten years after that climactic night I was to be associated with Bowman in the work of the Lord, and for ten years more, in the general work of the conference and on vacation, our lives were to meet. In crisis times, he would call me back to Dayton and on occasions, tell me that he regarded me as a spiritual father to himself and family. I saw him rise to prominence and have said more than once, that I expected some time to have the privilege of voting for him for high office in his native state; but the Lord had other plans. I saw this young teacher become a candidate for congress; become deputy probate judge; and candidate for that important office only to be defeated by the wet gang whose low principles made no appeal to his lofty and sacred ideals, and who defeated him because he would not bow to them.

I saw him rise, in the officiating of his local church and of our National Conference, to the highest honors and to faithful and dignified discharge of his duties and then felt keenly the stroke that leveled that mighty arm and felled the giant that was Orion E. Bowman, amid tears and grief. How we prayed that the Lord would reverse the apparent course of the disease that was to take him away from us! On the occasion of my last and recent visit to Dayton, he called for me, with his pastor, to administer the anointing service which was one of the most impressive I ever conducted. He was weak that day—too weak to arise from his bed. I asked him if he cared to pray and he answered "yes." Without a discernible tear, he committed his soul to God, offered his completely surrendered life to him if he would heal him, and then resigned himself to the Divine Will. And so, he was gone; gone ahead; gone forward; gone to reward. But his life will go marching on, in an inspiring memory, in the inspiration of hundreds of lives made better as he touched them and lifted them out of the commonplace into the spiritual. I have no doubt that he left a considerable fortune; but that were a slight heritage he has bequeathed to those left behind. Small is the gold that perishes and the tinsel that tarnishes; for it is the spiritual that abides and his life was a spiritual life. I have a mental picture of him before that large Sunday school in the opening services with closed eyes and prayerful lips that will remain even when mortal eyes are closed to vision. Who will take his place or who can? Who will live the clean, honest, sacrificing life that he lived and lead multitudes with consecrated, spiritual judgment, not only in his own denomination but others? Who will believe with all his heart, the fundamental tenets of the faith and exemplify that charity and tolerance to the beliefs of others, that characterized him? The Lord only knows and he alone can raise him up. To him be the honor and the glory; to us, the hope that he will.

CHARLES A. BAME.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

OPEN FOR EVANGELISTIC MEETINGS

I am in a position to hold some evangelistic meetings during the winter.

Would be glad to correspond with churches desiring the services of an evangelist, and also with churches in need of a pastor.

Jesus, the Light of the World

As one enters the chapel of Ashland College and passes down the center aisle, he finds himself facing the beautiful replica of Holman Hunt's "The Light of the World." It hangs alone, the only work of art in the room, and as one contemplates it and studies its beauty, he has a feeling that nothing else is needed. It dominates the entire room with its presence, and from its exalted position behind the pulpit it seems to cast a hallowed spirit over the sacred desk that forbids all standing there save those with high and holy purpose. This reproduction in brown and white gives little conception of the beauty of the picture. The rays from the lantern throw the light on the most exquisite coloring of flowers and mantle. The halo brings the head of Christ into relief, and attention is drawn to the hand knocking at the closed door, on which is neither latch nor knob. The thought of the artist is that the door of the heart opens only from the inside; but one has the feeling as he waits and watches that surely the door will open to admit the radiant Figure standing on the threshold.

EDITORIAL

Why an Aggressive Home Mission Program?

It is not to arouse sentiment for the formation of such a program, that we raise the question, but to do our bit toward enlisting support to Home Missions to such extent as to make an aggressive program actually operative. Our problem is not lack of vision on the part of the leadership, but lack of zeal on the part of the church. We have challenging objectives set before us, but we need missionary convictions and missionary giving on the part of the brotherhood at large to bring about the realization of these objectives. The reason why we are not going forward more rapidly in extending the Gospel and in building churches in the homeland is because we are not convinced sufficiently of its importance. Let a task once be laid heavily upon our hearts and there will be no lagging in our efforts toward its accomplishment, such as has been the case with our Home Mission work.

In the first place, our people must be made to realize more fully that Home Missions—that is, preaching to the places near at hand—is a part of the divine program of Kingdom building, and that it is the first step in that program. We need to learn again the divine order. Luke (24:47) reports that Jesus made the disciples to understand that the work of grace he had wrought was to the end that "repentance and remission of sins should be preached in his name among all nations, beginning at Jerusalem." And in The Acts (1:8) the same inspired writer tells us that Jesus charged them as his final word, "ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." We are to begin in the homeland—not to stay there, of course, to the neglect of the more distant parts, but we must start there and not neglect it. We have all but reversed the order. We have been enamored by distant scenes. We have allowed the play of our imagination to stir our pity at the consideration of the poor heathen in foreign lands, but when those same heathen become our neighbors, we turn up our noses at the mention of them. We shed tears at the portrayal of the terrible physical and spiritual need of the millions of the unevangelized in other lands, but the equally lost condition of millions of unevangelized and unchristianized men and women in our own land scarcely disturbs our thoughts. We have no right to take any less seriously the task of evangelizing the heathen lands, but we must not take a hop, skip and a jump across the homeland in order to get there. Christ died for America as well as for lands afar off.

Our people, in the second place, do not half realize the great need of America for the Gospel and for Whole Gospel churches. We imagine that our own country is evangelized, if not Christianized, because possibly our own community is well supplied with preachers and churches, or possibly because our people are living in the light of civilization we do not realize they are groping in spiritual darkness. William A. King, secretary of the Home Mission Council of America, writing in the "Gospel Messenger", says, "A religious survey made of the country a few years ago disclosed the fact that more than half the population of America is unchurched, and a large part of this number unevangelized. There are great groups of population and wide stretches of country in the United States that are practically unreached. Fifty-eight million people according to this survey are outside of any kind of church, Catholic, Jewish, or Protestant. There are whole tribes of Indians practically unevangelized, like the Navahos in Arizona and New Mexico. Of the 35,000 Navaho Indians on the reservation not more than a few hundred have been won to Christ. They are living in ignorance, observing their old time rites. There are four million Jews in the United States, two million in New York City. Leading Jewish rabbis in New York have said that not more than ten per cent of the Jews in New York are loyal Jews. They have forsaken the synagogues and the faith of their fathers. Rabbi Hlau has said that the American Jew 'is the most tragic man in human history.' The entire Protestant church is spending less than one hundred thousand dollars a year to give the Gospel to the Jews. There are many other large groups of people for whom the church is doing but little." We do not know the bigness nor the urgency of our task. We have heard of the need of a little section of the mountaineers of Kentucky, but we have not realized that they number millions and that they run the length of the Alleghenies. We have heard of a few clamoring mission fields, but we have not known of the vast sections, even whole groups of counties, without so much as a church or Sunday school, and that there are 5,000 towns west of the Mississippi unchurched. Nor do we know of the large numbers of Dunker peoples—more than 10,000 of them—living isolated from the church of their choice, many of them in groups here and there that offer splendid opportunities for building Brethren churches. Among such appealing opportunities, one in particular has been calling persistently with each renewal of Evangelist subscriptions to send a man down in that southwestern town and care for the Brethren people there and build a Brethren church. If we but know that this is the day of our visitation with a great need and a challenging opportunity, we surely would rise to the occasion.

Then, we wonder if our people really love their church and prize its message as highly as they ought. If denominational loyalty ran high, if convictions were strong in the thing for which our church stands, if we really believed that the whole Gospel Message is what the world needs more than anything else, we would be willing to work hard and to make great sacrifices for the propagation of our cause. We do not discount for a moment the spirit of cooperation and fraternity that has sprung up between the churches; on the contrary we consider it a long stride forward, nevertheless we believe an enthusiastic denominational loyalty to be essential to the most aggressive church extension and kingdom building. And we can hardly believe that there is a strong and an intelligent appreciation of the worth of our denominational ideals and tenets where there is such unconcern manifested toward church extension.

Also, there is a lack of appreciation of the fact that our church was born with a missionary spirit, that its first expressions of spiritual zeal were in home missions, and that it is incumbent upon us, if we would prove ourselves worthy of our heroic church fathers, to maintain the high standard they set. Dr. Otho Winger in his "History and Doctrine of the Church of the Brethren",

Some Significant Figures

111,000,000 population.
58,000,000 unchurched
51,000,000 rural dwellers
350,000 Indians on reservations
3,000,000 mountain dwellers
11,000,000 Negroes
35,000,000 foreign born Americans says, in speaking of the first church formed at Schwartzenu, Germany, in 1706, "This congregation was not only obedient to the truth, but was given great power to witness to others. From this mother church went forth missionaries who preached the Gospel in other parts of Germany, and were the means of establishing other congregations." And after persecution had driven the Brethren to America, soon after establishing the first church at Germantown, Pennsylvania, they launched a home missionary campaign and a mission band of fourteen with Peter Becker at its head, set out to bear witness among the pioneers. As a result of the meetings they conducted on that tour, eleven souls were baptized, two congregations were organized and two ministers were elected. And it was that live missionary spirit that caused the Dunkers to grow in numbers so rapidly in those early days. And if there had not come a time when the missionary fire died down, the history of the Dunker church in America would take much longer to tell, and we dare say its course would have been more pleasant and harmonious. May Brethrenism of our day ring true to the apostolic character displayed at the church's beginning, that the church may be greatly extended, the whole Gospel presented to many new hearts and the Kingdom of God enlarged.

Ohio's First Church and Indian Mission

Tuscarawas county, Ohio, boasts itself as being the location of the first church ever established in Ohio and the most successful Indian mission of the eighteenth century. It came about in this manner: David Zeisberger, a noble missionary who had been conducting missions among the Indians in western Pennsylvania, was driven by unprincipled white men from his stations accompanied by his Christian Indians. They arrived at Big Spring, near New Philadelphia, Ohio, on May 3, 1772 and erected temporary dwellings. Three months later John Heckewelder followed with two hundred additional Indian converts. The next day after their arrival the town of Schoenbrunn (Beautiful Spring) was laid out in the shape of an inverted T, and the building commenced.

The town grew rapidly and a year later it consisted of a church, 40x36 feet, a schoolhouse, and sixty houses, besides huts and lodges, all built of hewn timbers. The date for the erection of the church is given as September 19th, 1772.

The mission was carried on in a most successful manner during the next four years, after which time, on April 19, 1777, it was closed down by the heathen Monseys and Zeisberger and his faithful converts compelled to leave. They gathered about the church for a last service before razing it to prevent its desolation. However the entire village was later laid waste by hostile Indians.

Mitchner, in his History of Tuscarawas County, says, "Zeisberger's moral courage alone saved the border states from being overrun by the savages in that crisis (Revolution), and perhaps he thereby saved the union."

At this same locality, we are informed by a souvenir folder and road map published by the Tuscarawas County Automobile Club, occurred on March 7th and 8th, 1782, one of the blackest deeds ever perpetrated in the early life of this country. Ninety-six peaceful Indians were tricked and murdered by a force of one hundred men under Colonel Williamson, who was sent out from Fort Pitt to retaliate for outrages committed along that frontier.

These violations, however, were acts of hostile Indians, instigated and inflamed by certain apostates and others who endeavored to further the cause of the British station at Detroit.

Colonel Williamson and his force found the Indians busily engaged in gathering grain and other supplies preparatory to removing it to their famishing brethren at Sandusky.

The whites approached the Indians as friends and caused them to lay down their arms under the pretext of taking the Indians to Fort Pitt where the supplies of food were greater. Then the Colonel bespoke his real mission which ended in the brutal massacre and the burning of bodies and huts.

While this event deserves, as our Tuscarawas friends suggest, to be counted among the blackest deeds of early history, yet all too often the white men were characterized by treachery and dishonesty in their dealings with the red men. And for this reason it is no wonder that such slow progress has been made in Christianizing the Indians.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

If you are not a regular reader of THE EVANGELIST, subscribe now and go with us through the new year.

A table giving certain statistical information regarding the Home Mission points was crowded out of this issue, but it will appear next week.

We call the attention of our young readers to Miss Virginia Haun's story in this issue on Christian Endeavor page, adapting the Home Mission message to their minds in a beautiful manner.

We are happy to be able to present the likenesses of our group of Riverside Institute workers and of the workers and students of Krypton. The letters from these fields set forth the situation in ways that should challenge our loyal support.

The Sunday schools and Christian Endeavor societies are called to cooperate in the Thanksgiving Offering for Home Missions. Elders W. I. Duker and E. M. Riddle, presidents respectively of the National Sunday School Association and the National Christian Endeavor Union write to their constituents in this issue.

The American Red Cross will hold its eleventh annual Roll Call from Armistice Day through Thanksgiving—November 11-24—when all are cordially invited to become members of this great organization. Membership dues paid at that time maintain the work of the Red Cross—local, national and international—throughout the year.

Our news department is given over entirely this week to reports from the various mission points receiving aid from the General Home Mission Board and they are universally encouraging. With such good returns on our investments in missions we ought to be encouraged to give more generously so as to make possible the establishing of missions at still other prospective points.

Pastors, please cooperate with the Home Mission Board by the prompt distribution of the extra copies of THE EVANGELIST sent you. See that every home gets a paper. Mail them, or in some other way see that they are carefully distributed. The Board is counting on you to get its messages to the people. The issue that is at stake is worthy of your inconvenience and effort. It will take cooperation to secure the banner Home Mission offering which is so much needed.

The Business Manager is "making hay while the sun shines" by taking advantage of this unusually large circulation to bring his message to many hitherto unreached Brethren homes. We hope many will heed his appeal and send in their subscriptions, and that pastors will seize this opportunity to put "The Evangelist" on the Honor Roll. Every member needs it. You cannot get half as much out of your church membership as you ought to get if you do not read your church paper.

Because our "Announcement" department was crowded out this week, we are giving place in this column to the following: The church at Fremont, Ohio will hold its fall communion service on the evening of November 13th and extends the invitation to neighboring Brethren. The church at Roann, Indiana is without a pastor and invites any one interested to write to Charles F. Baker at Roann. Also Dr. Louis S. Bauman, treasurer of the Foreign Missionary Society, 1330 East Third Street, Long Beach, California, says, "On the way home from National Conference, I somewhere lost my memorandum book, in which was record of some money that was given me at Conference for Foreign Missions. Up to date, the book has not been returned to me, and I fail to remember all the parties who gave me money. I have a record of those who gave me checks, but if any one who reads this gave me cash, will you please write me, naming the amount and the purpose for which it was given?"

HOME MISSIONS---Our Challenging Task

Christianity a Missionary Religion

By G. W. Rench, D.D.

Christianity is not only evangelical, but also evangelistic and missionary. True disciples are ever alert to tell its saving story to their fellow men. Christians without missionary zeal have permitted their lights to grow very dim. With many, their light seems to be going out.

Dr. James Moffatt has well said, "Today the world is loud with voices speaking against God, denouncing Christianity. We don't need to be upset about that; that has always been the case. The world is full of people talking about God, discussing religion in various aspects, and we forget that Christianity will never survive by listening to people talking about God. Christianity begins and continues and thrives as we hear God speaking to us. The great weakness of our service today is that we are not giving enough time to hear the voice of God. We are making our worship too much of a lecture or a concert, and we are failing to do as our forefathers did, with all their defects. Our fathers knew that worship meant to be still and know that God is God, to hear the voice of God speaking, and that is at the heart of the Christian service."

Some of the early apostles seemed inclined at first to concentrate their efforts upon the Hebrew people. But stimulated by the untiring zeal of the apostle Paul, the missionary program of the early church soon made wonderful strides. Then, immediately following the martyrdom of Stephen, a severe persecution of the Christians was inaugurated by the Jews. The followers of the Lord were compelled to flee for safety. Perhaps it was the hand of God pushing the young robins out of the nest. For, as a result of this, the key verse setting forth the program of all scriptural missionary endeavor is proclaimed: "They therefore that were scattered abroad went about preaching the word" (Acts 8:4). Here is where the church in general, and the Brethren church in particular, falls down. As long as Brethren people have no convictions that the particular teachings of the gospel for which our father stood, even by standing alone, are matters of choice rather than the commands of God, there can be no New Testament fervor in missionary work. For years we have had leaders sold completely to what is known in the religious world as "comity." This means that where the field is fairly well churchied, the denominations already there being the judges, other faiths must stay out. No difference how much of the teaching of Jesus is never heard in those fields, it is contrary to "comity" to enter with the full gospel. Our people locating in that field therefore must throw to the winds some of the plain commands of God and unite with the denominations already there. In New Testament times they went everywhere "preaching the word." But we are now reaping the fruit of what we have been sowing for years. About four times out of five when Brethren people are locating in some city where we have no church they are advised to unite with some church already established, instead of "preaching the word" and establishing one of their own. We have lost the New Testament urge of missionary work. We have turned over to our mission boards the work of proclaiming a full gospel. In New Testament times they all remained faithful to their Lord's teachings under penalty of being cut off from the Lord's people if they refused; but now we say, "Let George do it." How would this look if found in the 8th chapter of Acts: "I am through school; if the church of God can use me, I am ready for a church, otherwise I will join the . . . the . . . O, well, any of the sects!" How far would Paul have gotten with a program like that? And Alexander Mack and his little company back in 1708, who would have heard of them, HAD THEY MADE THE TRUTH of secondary importance? And yet, under God, every one of us in the Brethren church having received the truth as God led them to see it, are under the same obligations TO MAKE THAT TRUTH KNOWN as they were! Here is the urge—missionary urge—in our field of labor. Are we committed to the truth as it is in God, is the question? Truth as it is in God is not determined by the size of the crowd. Prospects for a big church? What has that to do with the truth which God has placed in our hands and which he has commissioned us to proclaim? "And the Lord said unto Paul in the night by a vision, Be not afraid, but speak, and hold not thy peace; for I am with thee, and no man shall set on thee to harm thee: for I have much people in this city. And he dwelt there a year and six months, teaching the word of God among them" (Acts 18:9-11). Here is the New Testament standard: God's truth must be proclaimed at all costs. Compare this with the mere time-server, the fence-jumper, who whines, "Lord, I will preach what you want me to—in a fashion—at $3,000 per—; especially, if there is room for advancement."

Now, how can we set the church to the task of making known the whole truth of God as revealed in his precious Word?

First, come to the aid of our Mission Board in the Thanksgiving offering. This Board is the agency of our own creation. They can not appoint men to preach the wonderful Word only as we put the means into their hands to pay the bills. The board is made up of our own brethren—men whom we know and love. There is not a board in our church but that is not spending far too much of their valuable time in trying to accomplish great things with the little placed in their hands. Little money and cheap men are the bane of all our boards. Let's do a lot of thanks-living that our Missionary Board may have occasion for a real thanks-giving. Every member of the church, old and young, ought to be made to feel that they are not worthy a place in the membership unless they deny themselves the price of some pleasure to give toward swinging this pleasure-mad world closer to the New Testament standard of Christian living. Come on, let's do it.

"I pleaded for time to be given;
He said, 'Is it hard to decide?
It will not seem hard in heaven
To have followed the steps of your Guide.'

"I cast one look at the fields,
Then set my face to the town;
He said, 'My child do you yield?
Will you leave the flowers for the crown?'

"Then into his hand went mine,
And into my heart came he,
And I walk in a light divine
The path I had feared to see."

Secondly, we must pray more for an awakening church to the crying need of the home field. The habit of placing our little offering in the envelope and dismissing the whole affair as if it were no concern of ours, is the cause of much of the LUKEWARM CONDITION we find in our churches. And here goes again: if the things we stand for as a people are not essential, as many teach (no difference what God says about them) why, of course, we will not pray about the home work as sponsored by our Mission Board. Where there is no conviction of heart, how can you expect men to pray—or give very much either? If the message of "The Christ of the Indian Trail" is true, morality is all India needs; her schools and colleges can take care of that. As a church let's believe in our mission, or quit the field, and quit now.

Thirdly, we must have more man-power in the mission work of the church. We are leaving the whole task to our boards, and work and pray as they may, they can not do the work alone. Every preacher must get busy. The layman must talk their church and what it stands for in office, shop, and club. "They went everywhere preaching the word", is the New Testament model. First believe it, and believe it is essential to our salvation, and secondly, preach it. It is a sin for large congregations to sit idly by instead of pushing her standards into the surrounding community. May the spirit-shadows of Swihart, Brown, Hilderbrand, Mason, Summers, and Bauman once more call from the heights to come up and possess the land. They did not wait for mission boards to make it easy to go.

A New Church a Year

H. F. Stuckman, Newly-Elected President General Home Board

Brother H. F. Stuckman, who is the capable pastor of the strong Goshen, Indiana, church, was recently introduced on the mission page as the newly-elected president of the General Home Mission Board. He undertakes his added responsibilities with large vision, great zeal and much faith, as is evidenced in this article. He deserves the hearty support of every pastor and layman of the brotherhood.—Editor.

Some time ago, this became the Watchword of the Home Missionary Society. Last year we opened up the work in Fort Wayne, Indiana. The growth has justified the assertion, that in a few years it will be going under its own power, and without the help of the brotherhood at large. This year somewhat in faith—faith in the field, faith in the man who is to occupy it for us, faith in the brotherhood to support it—we opened the work at Harrah, Washington. Hereafter this work is to be genuinely Brethren. It may mean the erection of our own building, but we shall do even that if necessary. This work will be self-sustaining soon. We have found the northwest more ready to help themselves than in many other sections, hence our assertion that they will soon be self-supporting. No one knows just where we will place our confidence and money this next year, but some new work must be launched by our Board.

In order to keep this policy of "a new church each year" going, and the slogan itself before our people two things are necessary. First, the churches we are now supporting must bend every effort to support their own work as quickly as possible. This has not always been the case. It is so much easier to get support from the entire brotherhood, than to reach into our pockets and pay for our own maintenance. Gradually our Board is correcting this condition, and constantly our mission churches must arrive at the point where they can go alone, or must do with less support. Manifestly this is the only way a new mission point can be taken on each year, for even though our offerings would increase, there must certainly be a limit to that increase, and we would be hindered in spreading out. As President of the Home Mission Board it shall be my policy to have these churches now receiving support, going on their own strength as soon as possible, and where churches seem to be strong enough to do this, without our help, the Board will insist on them doing so.

The other way to continue our policy of "a new church a year" is by increasing our now woefully small contributions to Home Missions. "Not less for Foreign Missions,

The continued growth of all other church interests is contingent upon the strengthening of the HOME BASE.

but more for Home Missions," surely we are about to the end of our expansion in Foreign Missions, unless new churches are quickly brought into being, which can and will support Foreign work. To that end we are hoping, praying and asking, that you give our Home Board more consideration at this Thanksgiving time, that our policy of one new church a year may be a living reality to us. We can expand by building up new churches in hitherto unoccupied fields, if you of the brotherhood at large support us. We have promising fields beckoning to us constantly for our help, we want to help them, but you have tied our hands by limiting us to just so much assistance and refusing to go over the amount to any appreciably degree.

Certainly our Board has been guilty of mistakes, this we freely admit, and ask your forgiveness, but in the future we shall try to sense these mistakes sooner, and correct them to the best advantage of all concerned. Our work at home has so much competition, that now and then we do get into a field where we never should have gone, such mistakes can hardly be made by our Foreign Board, because the great fields in which they work are wholly left to them. Theirs is never a question of an adequate opening. With our Board it becomes our serious consideration, and the source of our greatest mistakes.

Do you want the Brethren church to be "bigger and better?" There is but one way, and that is by giving liberally of your means to make it bigger and better. We challenge you to give us a big offering, and we will find the new fields, and competent leadership.

Missionary Vision, Vim, Vitality

By Charles H. Ashman, Member of Foreign Mission Board
Voices his Vital Interest in Home Missions

The Brethren church needs an enlargement of her missionary vision. "Where there is no vision, the people perish" (Prov. 29:18). When vision ceases, decay begins. Whenever the artist's hand catches up with his brain, he has painted his best picture. There is no future for him. He lives in the past. Whenever a church loses her vision, dry rot begins. The curse of satisfaction settles about that church as a pall of death. Immediately that church is put on the defensive. As a denomination we need an enlargement of our missionary vision. We have had a vision in the past and it has led us on, but it needs to extend its borders.

In this missionary vision, there must be at least two things. First, there must be Christ's world program of evangelization. Our oft repeated smallness as a people does not excuse us from responsibility in this. Some folks seem to think that the boundary lines of Brethrenism are those that encompass just their own local congregation. Others apparently believe that they are those which bound the district in which their church is located. Others appear to believe that America is the promised land and the rest of the world does not count. We must think, pray, plan, and live in terms of world evangelization. Second, in this missionary vision, we must put Brethrenism. We believe that as a denomination we have as distinctive a mission to America as we have to the uttermost parts of the world. Especially in these days of the apostasy, God has a distinctive mission for us. This is the basis of our National Home Missions. Why establish Brethren churches in cities already evangelized? Because, we have a Whole Gospel Message to give. Our cities may be evangelized, but they are not Christianized with the Word of God. Without apology or hesitation, let us proceed to invade the cities and proclaim the message of the Gospel.

Next, given the vision, we must have missionary vim. Vision alone is powerless. It becomes an idle dream. There must be zeal to realize it. We must be "zealous of good works." "The people must have a mind to work." Paul is an excellent example of missionary zeal. He was a man of impassioned zeal. As a Pharisee, he was the strongest, strictest, and best. When he determined to secure an education, he took a post graduate course. As a persecutor, we admire his zeal. When he became a Christian, he became a whole-hearted, true-hearted, all-in-all-for-Christ Christian. As a preacher, he was on fire for God with a white heat. As a missionary, he tried to evangelize the whole world himself. The world branded Paul as crazy. They said of him, "much learning hath made thee mad." Israel presents an excellent example of missionary zeal also. In Exodus 36, we have the record of a free will offering the people made. The report of it was, "the people bring much more than enough." "let none make any more offerings." the people were restrained from giving, "for the material they had was enough and too much." That was missionary zeal. This is the type of zeal needed to realize our missionary vision.

But, pure human zeal, like human energy is fluctuating and often evaporates. We need vitality to sustain our vim to realize our vision. There must be a driving force within the church. There must be a dynamic, an overwhelming compulsion. There must be an expelling, propelling, compelling force. There must be a vitality without exciting, inciting, and impelling. There must be a vitalizing, motivating, incentive—a divine imperative. Duty is too sluggish. Interest is too changeable. Fear is too spasmodic. What shall be our vitality? "The love of Christ constraineth me." Love is constant, fiery, powerful. Let the love of Christ be the vitality that will inspire our vim to realize our vision. Get a vision! Be full of vim! Yield to the Holy Spirit for vitality!

Are Brethren Progressive?

By Freeman Ankrum, Vice-President Home Mission Board

The progress of the Brethren church depends upon two things, a Home Mission offering and a definite time for its reception. A goal with a set time makes the planning of the work possible. The day is past when we may expect to have churches built in cities and communities with the donated labor of some consecrated minister. Demands of modern times make such methods almost impossible. It is now necessary to send a man upon the field supported in a way that will not hinder the cause he seeks to aid.

Some of our strong churches today were only a few years ago under the whole or partial support of the Home Mission Board. The foreign work of the church depends upon the home work inasmuch as the home base must be stronger than the outposts. To build and enlarge the home, is to strengthen and expand the foreign. Churches are being helped today that in a few years will be self-supporting and then in turn they will be able to help others through the Thanksgiving Home Mission offering. Calls are being made yearly for help where there is already a nucleus which with the necessary funds available would eventually grow into a self supporting church.

There is a greater need for the Brethren church today than there has ever been since its founding. It has been guarded, protected and saved for this very age, what will our answer be? Will the Brethren church be a progressive or a decadent church? The answer depends upon you and the opportunity is approaching when your decision may be made.

The Laymen's Responsibility for Home Missions

By Prof. C. L. Anspach, Head of Education Department of Ashland College and Prominent Leader among the Laymen

The Brethren church has had a glorious past; many great ideals and attitudes have been transmitted to the social group because of the faith of the Dunkards. At present, however, we cannot look back to the past and live off the achievements of other generations. The Brethren church can no longer justify her existence on the basis of what has been done in the past, the same spirit of pioneering must be exerted in the future if she would live. Progress in the future for the Brethren church, as I see it, will be closely associated with the work of our Home Mission Board and its activities. Progress in our church, which is essential if we would justify our existence, lies in church extension.

Conditions have changed in the last half century. The Brethren church was established at a time when America's population was predominantly rural. Now America's population is only 40 per cent rural. As a result we must adjust our program to conditions, which means, that our churches in the future must be located in the main, in the in order to maintain our program of foreign missions. As I heard one prominent man in our church say some time ago, "If our work continues in Africa at the present rate it will not be long until the membership abroad will be larger than the membership at home." It will be a long while before many of these mission points will be self supporting; in the meantime we must have a home mem-

It is not a "Whole Gospel Church" whose Home Mission progress must be slowed up for lack of funds, in the face of the Gospel requirements of stewardship. Giving is as important a part of the Kingdom program as baptism.

GOD'S CHALLENGE

"Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in your house, and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it." Do we imagine that God's arm is shortened, that he is not able to do for us what he promised to do in the days of Malachi, or has faith weakened so that we are not able to claim his promise? Will the Thanksgiving offering drive us to such a dilemma?

cities. The maintenance of rural churches is justified in many localities, but new churches should certainly be erected in our industrial centers.

In this program for church extension the layman must play an important part. The Brethren church does not consist of buildings and of its ministry, but, to a larger degree than we are often willing to admit, of its laity. The layman must assume his share of the responsibility for the carrying out of this program. He can no longer entrust the complete management of church extension in the hands of the ministry and wave his responsibility.

The layman is responsible for home missions, for the following reasons. (1) Mission work is the responsibility of the entire church. Especially home missions are essential because it is necessary to have a large home base bership sufficiently large to support the foreign work. Now, when an individual places his membership with our denomination he assumes his share of the responsibilities of the denomination. Home Mission work is one of the church's responsibilities, therefore, he can not say, I do not believe in home missions and will have nothing to do with such a program. If he holds that attitude, he is not in sympathy with our ideals. If an individual forms a business partnership he immediately assumes his share of the firm's future responsibilities; he cannot accept some and reject others. The same principle applies in church membership. The layman must recognize this principle, and if he looks at the matter in a sensible fashion, he will support the church's program.

(2) When the layman pledges his support to the church he also assumes his share of the responsibility of paying. Many persons join church under the assumption that salvation is free and therefore they are relieved of any financial responsibility. The story is told of a Negro, who joined church under this assumption. One Sunday it was necessary for the minister to make a very earnest plea for money. This good brother immediately approached the minister in the following manner: "Brother, didn't you say in your sermon last Sunday that the water of salvation am free?" "Certainly," replied the minister, "The water of salvation am free, but it costs a powerful lot for the piping." The Negro minister had it exactly right, "it costs a powerful lot for the piping."

One might just as well ask another member of the church to pay his grocery bill, or his meat bill as to ask

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

A Tremendous Mission A Seven-pointed Acrostic Sermon

By G. C. Carpenter, D.D.

Making the world acquainted with Jesus! That is the mission of the church. That includes the home land and every land. A Christian heard the minister at the close of the communion ask, "Has anyone been missed?" and before his vision, he said, there passed the millions who have never heard the good news. The task of the church is to give the whole world an opportunity to know Jesus and to accept him as Lord and Master. To accomplish such a tremendous mission the church at home must be very strong, fitted for big business. The task of Home Missions is to help fit the home church for big Kingdom business.

I am responsible! I am called! All are included. "Go ye" is for me. Every Christian can go by going or by sending. Jesus speaks to each and tells what to do. In the Holy Book the Father has left his will and there is an inheritance for all men, but many do not know about it. Those who do know are commissioned to tell others until the whole world shall know about it. When Christians consider their great responsibility each ought to ask, "Am I faithful?" "Am I filling my God-assigned place?" The task of Home Missions is to enlist the home church until every member and every church is lined up for the big task of world evangelization.

Send me if it please thee! At home or abroad! That is the attitude of the true Christian. "Here am I, send me." No stopping to prove oxen or measure land or attend to family cares. Ready to go. That does not mean that all will go, but it does mean loyal service whether going or remaining at home. Thanksgiving time ought to be for every member of the church a call to a deeper consecration and a fresh taking up of the cross to follow Christ. Thanksgiving time ought to witness the surrender of a large number of young people for kingdom service.

Send others and I will help support them in every way possible. That also is the attitude of every true Christian. I'll go if you want me to go. Lord, but if not, I'll stay and help the church to hold the ropes. We are to teach and preach and evangelize at home and thus help to evangelize the whole world. What a tremendous mission! We are to strengthen the stakes at home by aiding weak churches, by helping to build and establish new churches in strategic places, and by doing all we can to help make America Christian. That is the aim of our Home Mission Board.

I will give as I have been prospered. True prosperity depends upon partnership with God. The Christian upon entering into partnership with God agrees to give according as God prospers. The old-fashioned way to tell whether or not anyone was dead was to hold a mirror to the mouth and see if there was any sign of moisture, but the best way to tell whether or not a church or a professing Christian is dead is to hold up before their face their mission record. The missionary church is always a live church. As Mr. Ridgway says, the "Go ye" church is always a "going" church. The best growth gauge for any church is not its membership roll, but its mission record. Let us as churches and as individuals count our blessings at Thanksgiving time and give as God hath prospered. Then Home Missions will enjoy a banner offering.

O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good, for his mercy endureth forever! Blessed be the Lord who daily loadeth us with benefits, even the God of our salvation! Many are the exclamations of thanksgiving by the psalmist. Let us ask with him, what shall we render unto the Lord in return? If our returns at Thanksgiving time are in proportion to our blessings there will be no lack of Home Mission funds for the coming year. The work already started in various places can be supported and new work already planned can be pushed with success and other promising fields can be entered.

Now is the time to show our gratitude and now is the time to do our best. Remember that proverb, "The good is the enemy of the best." God expects our best. Here is where Saint Paul's "most excellent way", the way of love, should be followed. As we love, so will we give. If our love is of the First Corinthian Thirteen kind, then our loyalty at Thanksgiving time and at all times will be unquestionable. Here is one thirteen that brings good luck. Try it. When the Macedonian call came, Luke says, "We straightway sought to go forth into Macedonia." May our gifts of life and substance be full proof of our love. Too often we have dollars for ourselves, for automobiles, for radios, for dress, for pleasures many, but only dimes for missions. Now is the time to reverse. Pay the tithe, then bring offerings. The first sinner on earth fell through covetousness and that sin is still at the forefront in modern life. God help us not to be overcome, but rather to be overcomers. May the whole Brethren church, pastors and laymembers, rally at Thanksgiving time and help as never before to perform this tremendous God-assigned mission.

The door of opportunity in the homeland was never swung wider than it is at present, and the urge on the part of our leadership was never more strongly felt. How undone will be our condition in that last great day if we dally until the door is closed in our face and the missionary spirit has left us! "My Spirit will not always strive with men." him to pay his portion of the home mission bill. I see no difference. A person is obligated to take care of the one as well as the other.

(3) In the next place, supporting of the home mission program with our finances is the least we can do. In many of our mission points we have men and women, consecrated and self-sacrificing, looking only toward the ultimate good that can be accomplished. Many of us can not go, but we can make it possible for some one else to carry on the work in our place. I was surprised to discover in several of our mission points young men who were giving their lives for the work. One young man had been offered a large church in our denomination at a salary of six hundred on the year more than the mission point was paying, but he decided to stay with the mission because he has a vision of greater things for the mission church. Another young man I know is preaching in such a place and trying to make his living by means of work outside the church. Certainly, laymen, if we have men of this type, willing to give their lives in hard work and service, in order that our church might grow, we should do our share and contribute to their support in order that they might have it a little more pleasant.

(4) In the fourth place, it is good business for the church in general to support our mission program. As business men we are always looking for a fair return on our investment. We like to see big returns. I know of no place which will return bigger profits than the establishment of well planned, properly constructed and efficiently manned churches. The time is past when we can go into cities and start mission points on unimportant streets in poorly constructed buildings. We would gain as a church if we picked out good locations, erected fine looking churches and manned them with our strongest men. Instead of asking men to go into such places and support themselves we should send them on a good salary for a period of several years or until they are able to build up a group of people who will be self-supporting. It can be done. I know of one point in the mid-west which will start one of these days with a group of fifty members and will not ask the church for one penny of support. It can be done if the proper methods are employed.

(5) In the last place, we must support this program because if we have a message and we think we do, then it is our duty "to go into all the world and make disciples of all men." If the Brethren church is the church we think it is, we should not hesitate to proclaim it unto all the world. Our trouble has been in our backwardness in expressing our beliefs to the world. We have felt that our position was sound and have leaned back perfectly content and waited for others to realize the importance of our position. This attitude is wrong; we should go out and tell others of the value of our faith. I am reminded of the incident of Philip's conversation with the Eunuch. In answer to the questions, "Understandest thou, what thou readest?" he replied, "How can I except some man should guide me?" If we would guide others we must establish mission points. The establishment of such points makes the support of laymen imperative. Ashland, Ohio.

MONDAY

MAKING THINGS NEW—Rev. 21:1-5. "The former things are passed away." What were some of the things that were missing? the writer says, "I saw no temple." We are prone to place too much emphasis on the church building in which we worship. The things that are visible, the things that please the eye, are not abiding, they pass away. And if we focus our attention upon the things that are material, even though they may serve a very noble purpose, our lives will be hollow and superficial. Symbolism is an important aid to spirituality and strength, if we look beyond the symbol to the truth symbolized, but we must be constantly on the alert lest we content ourselves with the shell instead of seeking the kernel.

TUESDAY

THE PLACE OF PLEASURE—Psalm 16:1-11. "At thy right hand there are pleasures forevermore." True Christianity never divorced its devotees from real pleasure. There have been times when some devoted but misguided worshippers have thought there was merit in self-inflicted suffering and sorrow, but not many have that notion today. There are many, however, who do not seem to know just where to find the real joy of life. All too many imagine that it is to be found in carnal things, in the passing show, not knowing that at God's right hand are to be found the pleasures that are eternal and that are rich and satisfying.

WEDNESDAY

TASTING GOD'S GOODNESS—Psalm 34:1-9. "O taste and see that the Lord is good." The bodily hunger is satisfied not by arguments and theories and statements about food and its preparation, but by actually eating of the food itself. And so it is not statements of faith and religious dogmas that satisfy the soul, of however much worthy these may be in their place. It is sitting at the tables of the Lord, feeding upon the richness of his love and being filled with all the fullness of God that brings satisfaction. And the fact that he satisfies, and meets our every need is the proof to us of his perfect goodness.

THURSDAY

GOD'S WAY WITH MEN—Isa. 55:6-13. "My thoughts are not your thoughts, neither are your ways my ways." In the midst of the confusion of men and their forebodings of evil, God pursues with calmness and certainty his course toward the final consummation. He sees the end from the beginning, and he overrules to cause even the wickedness of men to praise him and to serve his purpose. And in individual lives his ways are not our ways, for he has decreed that only as we die in Christ unto sin can we live in him unto righteousness. That is his way of getting the better of sin.

FRIDAY

THE WONDER OF CREATION—Job 26:1-12. "He hangeth the earth upon nothing." At least, nothing that man can see. But the foundations of God's world are sure, even though invisible. Because we cannot see the forces of God and often cannot understand their operation, we do not therefore deny them. Even so are the spiritual powers real, though they must be laid hold on by faith.

SATURDAY

THE WAY TO BEGIN AGAIN—1 John 2:1-6. "If any man sin we have an advocate with the Father." Sin is a terrible fact. Men may differ about its origin and in their definition of it, but no one can get away from the fact of sin. But thank God there is a way of getting out of its clutches, of being released from its bondage—through Jesus Christ our Lord.

SUNDAY

THE LORD'S SIDE—Exod. 32:7, 8, 26-29. "Who is on the Lord's side?" The question needs to be asked today in the home, in the church, on the street, and in business, social and public life. There is a line of demarcation between the Christian and the worldling. The curse of the church is that portion of its membership who want to walk the dividing line.—G. S. B.

Missionary Appeals to Endeavorers

By E. M. Riddle, President Brethren
National Christian Endeavor Union

(Note—We were unable to secure Brother Riddle's cut when we published his first message as president of Brethren Christian Endeavor Union, to which position he was elected at the late General Conference. We are glad for this privilege of presenting his likeness to the army of young people whom he is to lead, though to large numbers of them he is not a stranger, as he has served them in other capacities for a number of years.—Editor.)

Christian Endeavorers! One of the strongest departments of our work is the missionary department. Our organization has been missionary in spirit and character since its founding. Now, we soon face another excellent opportunity to reveal that missionary instruction is worth-while. We have helped in years gone by with our gifts for Kentucky, the far northwest, and in our large cities. Will we be as loyal to the cause of Christ in the homeland again this year?

Your gift at this Thanksgiving for Home Missions is first an expression of your gratefulness to God. Second, it is a point of contact between you and the missionary program of our church. Where you make investments, your interests become centered. The dividends from a gift this November to the Home Missionary program will be no less than ever before. Souls who may be led to our Lord for the gift of salvation and so many of them who may later be called to definite life service, will surely constitute a small fruitage to be realized from missionary endeavor.

Let us as Brethren Endeavorers pray earnestly and give accordingly, because of the mighty need for an adequate Thanksgiving offering.

for fourteen weeks. Twelve are enrolled.

The church here at Des Moines should be a great church some time. However, it must pass through the discouragements of the small city church first. There are many things which might be said about the work here, but we feel it much better to tell about matters as they are now and not be talking about the "great things we think are just ahead." It is not what we are talking about that counts but the things that are. Some things must be done here and that very soon. But we will leave these matters now.

We ask an interest in the prayers of all who are interested in continuing a Bible church here. Please remember us. The future is bright but we know that only God can build a church. So it will be our policy to teach the Word in its purity and truth and leave it to the Lord to prosper us.

Showing Our Thankfulness

John 13:34, 35

STORY—JESUS AND HIS LITTLE LAMB

Once upon a time there was a little girl named Frances. When Frances was just eight years old, one day her father brought her the nicest new pet. What do you think it was? I'll tell you before you guess. It was a dear, little, baby lamb. After that Frances and her lamb were together every day. While it was real tiny, she fed it and held it in her lap; then after it got bigger, she romped all around the big yard with Betty Bell. The minute that Frances came outside the door of her house, Betty Bell came running to her.

Sometimes Frances and Betty Bell went on long exploring trips together. They would run away down by the little stream and if they came to an especially nice grassy spot, Frances would sit down and wait while Betty Bell ate her fill.

One day when Betty Bell was just about two months old, Frances came to the door and Betty Bell failed to meet her. Frances called and whistled but Betty Bell still failed to appear. Then Frances got scared, she wondered what could be keeping her pet. First she hunted all around the yard but no Betty Bell could be seen. Frances noticed that the gate at the end of the big yard was open and then she thought, "Betty Bell must have gone off on a tramp all by herself. She ought to have come after me." Frances started off toward the little stream but she reached the end of the long, long field and still she could not find her lamb. Frances felt just like sitting down and crying but she knew that crying would not bring back her little lamb. Then, she went running home and hunted up her father.

She told him about her trouble and soon father was helping her to hunt.

At one place along the path to the stream there were a lot of sharp rocks all piled up and a sharp turn in the path. When they came to that father said, "Maybe Betty Bell missed the path here and fell on some of these rocks."

Immediately Frances began climbing over the rocks and soon she called out, "Oh, father, here is Betty Bell and I am so afraid that she is hurt. Help me to carry her so that we won't hurt her worse."

Father picked up the little lamb and soon they were home examining her to see what was the matter. They found that one of her legs was broken and she was, oh so scared. Frances and her father set the broken bone and bound up the little leg very tight and then Frances took her pet in her lap and talked and talked to her. She said, "Betty, I am so sorry that you feel bad. Lie real still and soon you will feel better. Why did you run off without me? You scared me so and I was so unhappy without you. But now I am happy again for you are home and will soon be well again."

Do you know, Junior boys and girls, or who might be reading this story, that we are going to be? We read in the Bible that Jesus said that his people were his sheep. The grown up people are Jesus' sheep but the little boys and girls are his lambs. Jesus loves his lambs, just like Frances loved her little lamb. Jesus wants his lambs to come to him often in church. And all of the little lambs must listen to the voice of Jesus for he loves each one.

And then, do you know, Juniors, that there are a lot of other little lambs that Jesus would like to have for his own? But the other lambs don't know about Jesus. That's why the lambs and the children who have not been brought to the church. We must bring them in for it will make Jesus happy to have more little lambs and all of the little lambs need Jesus Oh so badly.

Our Present Duty---HOME MISSIONS---Our Future Hope

Faculty at Riverside Institute

Beginning with the row standing, from left to right, they are:

Miss Goldie Richards, Garwin, Iowa, matron girls' dormitory and teacher domestic science in the high school; Omeda Hadden, Haddix, Ky., teacher first three grades; Mrs. Corsa Smith, Harvettown, Ky., cook; Miss Ruth Austin, Canton, Ohio, teacher, high school; Dove Barnett, Portsmouth, Ky., teacher grades four, five and six; Clara Hall, Garrettsville, Ohio, teacher grades seven and eight; Bessie Hooks, Kittanning, Pa., teacher high school; Mrs. Drushal, Bible teacher; G. E. Drushal, superintendent; M. D. Early, financial secretary and manager of farm; Mrs. M. D. Early, nurse and head of food department; Mrs. Grant McDonald, music teacher; Grant McDonald, Bible teacher and coach of athletics.

RIVERSIDE INSTITUTE AT LOST CREEK, KENTUCKY

Again we approach the Thanksgiving offering for the Home Mission work of our brotherhood. We have been asked to contribute an article for the Evangelist. In this issue of the Evangelist you see the picture of the corps of workers you now have at Riverside Institute, Lost Creek, Kentucky. Could you be here, and actually keep up with the work day by day you would soon see how busy each one is. One of our workers, Brother Early, is now holding a meeting in Tennessee. In his absence his two classes are taught by others. This extra work has made the work of the writer so much the heavier that this article could not be gotten to the Evangelist on time.

Each worker is busy, no one duplicates the work of another, and no teacher is teaching a small class of only a few. The two regular high school teachers are now teaching the limit allowed for an accredited school, five classes each per day. For many of us there is no holiday during the week. It is seven days per week work, some days of course heavier than others. The regular school teacher has Saturday off for rest. The usual pastor may take Monday off for rest. But in a busy mission place like Riverside Institute there are but few if any days off. We are glad to be busy.

Of course there are always some types of mind continually raising the question, "Does it pay?" The practical mind does this, in a desire to just simply know. Then there is the type of mind which is fearful that if one gives to one place that that will take so much away from some other place, thus impoverishing one of them, especially when they go to counting numbers instead of looking at the resources of our God. (Phil. 4:19). Questions are all right when the motive is all right. But did not Satan get in his first disastrous work by the means of questions in the Garden? It is one of Satan's favorite methods of attacking the work of our God.

In this article, we shall not attempt to work out an answer to the question, or questions clustering about the one given above. They have been raised, and they are raised yet today. Neither shall we attempt an emotional appeal. The appeal is just as urgent as it has ever been, and that is to give out the real Gospel, the Good News of salvation, and also to train the young that they may know and appreciate somewhat the will of our Lord in their daily lives, some of them giving their whole life to the service of the Lord.

But may we suggest this as a matter of deep concern in regard to the question raised, THAT IF THIS WORK HAD NOT BEEN OF THE LORD, AND IN THE MAIN, PLEASING TO HIM, WOULD IT NOT HAVE PASSED OUT OF EXISTENCE HERE THIS TIME? But that it still persists, and is stronger today than it has ever been before seems to us to be some evidence THAT OUR GOD IS BEHIND IT, and that it is in the main, well pleasing to him, and if so then it is FULLY WORTHY OF CHRISTIAN SUPPORT. "If this counsel or this work be of men it will come to nought; but if it be of God, ye cannot overthrow it: lest happily ye be found even to fight against God." "I have planted Apollos watered, BUT God gave the increase." For twenty-two years now the work has stood this test, and if it were not of God, then it would by this time, it seem to us, either be out of the way, or else tottering on the brink of oblivion. But THANKS BE TO OUR GOD, it is not tottering, but is stronger today than ever before, and now having the largest corps of workers ever before on the field at one time. This being true, then does not the work merit your continued support? And should not this Thanksgiving time be a time of real fellowship in the spirit, as we give thanks to the Lord for the work that must lie close to the will of our Lord?

But we are not unmindful of the fact that only too often prosperity is Satan's opportunity to get in his work. If there is one outstanding thing which Riverside Institute is trying to do, it is to hold up standard of life in harmony with the Bible, and to accept the Book as the final, complete, and

Progress and Outlook of Home Mission Stations

KRYPTON, KENTUCKY

Again, after the lapse of only a short time, we come with a message from the Appalachian Plateau of Eastern Kentucky. It is unusual to have to say, "after a short time," for usually an apology is seemingly needed for neglect. But we are called upon to write in behalf of this Thanksgiving season, in which we rally especially to the support of Home Missions.

And at this Thanksgiving time, what better can we say than "Thanks be to God, who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ." This is a victory which, to the world and oftentimes to ourselves—at least to the flesh—looks like utter defeat. But, again, "thanks be to God," for we know in whom we have believed," and amidst much which tends to disappoint and discourage, we desire to press on.

Of course, you who read this are desirous of further word of information regarding the field in which we work, and rightly you should know. There are so many peculiar features to the conditions here, but for you to fully comprehend them by written page is nearly out of the question. And we shall not attempt to do into a full diagnosis herein. We can only add another drop or so to the several smattering accounts already being presented. There may even be some repetition of thoughts tropped heretofore.

Literature is replete with the accounts of mine prospectors who braved untold terrors and hardships in search for wealth in the form of yellow nuggets. Some of these spent a lifetime in loneliness and wanderings, and sometimes extreme sufferings, despising the thought of turning back. Their determination was intensified either by their own finding occasionally a few telltale specks in the sands of a mountain stream or by the fortune of a friend or acquaintance. Sometimes this career of quest was spent in vain. How foolish! But are we foolish to make a similar effort as prospectors for the gems of life? The world thinks so, but gladly "we are fools for Christ's sake." One thing that helps us to go on, is the finding of a pearl, or diamond, or ruby occasionally—not many, to be sure, but now and then one—and we know that these are doubly precious in the sight of the Lord.

Woe is the school or college, and woe is the teacher or professor who is instrumental in the sidetracking of a life, away from the Lord! What an opportunity is thrust in our hands, when these mites of plastic clay are even into our care day after day, subject to be molded, largely, at our will. It is difficult for us to comprehend how vastly we are affecting the destinies of those who come within our influence. Boys and girls come to us who have known nothing but the vilest of sin and shame, morally and otherwise. One little boy tells of conditions which it is almost a sin to think. He (only 5 years old) came with another of the same age with records of terror in their own home and community—and outlaws, so far as parental control is concerned. Only the Lord is due any praise for our having been able, with his help and strength, to eliminate the "ore" and show two brilliant little scholars outshining some of those the Lord. In the place of the annoying scenes of tears, etc., of last year, a sweet little lady has developed. This girl is taking fourth grade work and running away with the class. She eavesdrops when the fifth and sixth grade spelling is given out, and, without previous study, many times gets better grades than the ones for whom it is intended, dividing the words in syllables as requested. Though so young, we heard indirectly, that she is contemplating baptism. Oh, what a gem! Would that we might pluck this intellect and sanctify it for the glory of her Maker!

Minnie and Christine are two waifs, brands plucked from the burning. The former's father is dead and mother worse than dead. No support from home, but we cannot let her sink in the mire. Johnstown Second church is now supporting her. Christine's father and mother are separated—neither fit morally to care for the child, and since they have fallen far in arrears financially, some aid has been proffered by Sunday school classes of First church, Johnstown. Another girl, an older one, who, to show her home environment, has been forced to drink liquor as a child, but who has been grasped from those things and now gives promise of real worth for the Lord, is being partly supported by an individual of the Oakville, Indiana, church. This pupil earns part of her expense here. The above cases of support have come voluntarily through the work of Sister Shack in simply telling the story of the things she has seen and heard and knows by personal touch. We know a real blessing will come to those who have such vital interests in these little ones.

So we might go on telling of individual cases of special interest, but space forbids. Now, all the road is not so glittering as might seem from the above, for naturally there are those cases which cause disappointment and heartache. Our purpose and plan is that when the pupils leave us they go on to Riverside. We are therefore much interested in that institution, that they teach the Word in its purity, and this we believe is being done. No greater calamity can come into a child's life than to find God's revealed truth as the only reliable Guide, taught in one school, and find it discredited and ridiculed (under cover) in another. Thus our great hope is to see these young people through the grades and high school under spiritual guidance of such nature that they shall be strongly established in the Christian life and the Brethren church. The last communion service at Riverside was a revelation along this line. What a beautiful sight it was to see that host of young people at the Lord's table!

Is all this worth the continued support of the church? Many have asked this question over and over. Many will ask it again as the Thanksgiving offering is lifted. Almost every one of our members who visits Krypton personally, even only for a short stay, goes away a greater booster and twice as old.

A girl of seven, whose parents had been educated in a Presbyterian school near here, deserves special mention. She was referred to in a former article last year, but this girl last year appeared to be beyond reach. She was and is one of the most adept pupils we have ever known, but without proper parental control. Last year was her first in school. She was here only a few weeks; then in the free school a short time, and out the rest of the winter. This year another trial was made—and successful, praise greater giver for the work. Lack of knowledge of the field and the need is the greatest barrier to adequate support. Now, the amount of one dollar and fifty cents per member of the Brethren church is asked for all the Home Mission enterprises. What a miserably paltry sum this is, when we consider for a fraction of a second the huge sums we spend for non-essentials! Pray the Lord of the harvest, that funds might be available for the continuation and furtherance of tasks to which we have set our hand, as well as to pray for our faithfulness in the task. Till he comes.

FRED V. KINZIE.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

As to the progress and outlook of this mission point, I will offer a few lines. This mission was started by the writer, under the direction of the district mission board, July 1st, 1908. The first received into the church by baptism was on August 16, 1908. From the beginning this mission, as all others more or less, has had its successes and its reverses. But its progress can not be measured by its present status, for several souls have been won to the Lord Jesus Christ, and have been called to be with him. This is something, upon which there can be no human estimation of value. The writer in his first pastorate here, by the loyal co-operation of the faithful members, succeeded in erecting a neat frame building, on West Sixth Street, in an unenured part of the city, and saw it paid for except about $200. This fact of a permanent church home, inspired the membership greatly.

This mission has had some mighty good leaders, who did excellent work, and it has had some poor leaders, who scattered the flock, sowed the seed of discord and made shipwreck of their leadership; but despite all this there are some mighty choice souls here yet and they, and the good Lord, are the hope of the future. Frankly, I express

Though not a new point, this Mission is becoming quite promising under the care of Rev. L. G. Wood my love for my people, and also my deep appreciation, of every loyal action and prayer, on their part, in behalf of the cause which is nearest our hearts in this field.

Yes, there is an "outlook" for this work and it is necessary that we take the "upward look" and the "inward look" in order to realize the "outlook."

1. Fort Scott is a strategic point, for our work and there is a prospect of a strong Brethren church here.

2. The present working membership is anxious to have it so.

3. The public is expecting it to be so, as never before since we have been here.

4. Our location is a good one and should be utilized.

5. Our "Whole Gospel Message" is badly needed in Fort Scott and this community.

6. Our work is gaining the confidence of the public and this will give us prestige and cooperation.

7. Our "Whole Gospel Message" has been proclaimed in several outlying points, in southeast Kansas for several years, and there is no reason why Fort Scott should not become a center, for its continuity.

We appreciate the prayers of the brotherhood; keep on praying. If there be any Brethren passing this way, be sure to make us a visit. That farm which is about 15 miles out of the city is still waiting for a Brethren family if any desire it. Let us all pray and then help to answer our prayer for the extension of the work of the Kingdom in the homeland and in the world.

L. G. WOOD.

PERU, INDIANA

The Brethren church of Peru, Indiana, was organized April 12, 1914 by Elder P. M. Fisher who since has been called home to Glory.

Elder Fisher together with a few Brethren who were living in the city, believed in the power and potency for the good of the organized church of Jesus Christ, to the individuals embracing it as well as the community at large, associated themselves together in a purely Christian relation, for the purpose of mutual encouragement and helpfulness, in developing the elements of Christian virtue taught by Jesus Christ and exemplified in the lives of his most faithful disciples in all ages, voted unanimously to form such an organization under the rules and regulations of the General Conference of the Brethren churches. It was for the purpose to form an organic part of the General Brethren Church of the United States of America, holding in common with all local churches of the Brethren Church, "The Bible, the Whole Bible, and Nothing but the Bible."

Elder Fisher was chosen as its first pastor, donating his services until some man could be secured who could give his full time to the work. At this time the help of both the National Home and District Mission Boards was secured and Elder G. C. Carpenter was selected as its full time pastor. Brother Carpenter gave seven years of his untiring service, and together with the few members began to lay plans to secure property on which to erect a church building for a place of worship. A corner lot just two blocks from the business district was purchased and a tabernacle was erected. These good Brethren laboring together with their pastor was given for their labor, and at the close of Brother Carpenter's work the membership had increased to almost 100 souls.

Elder J. W. Brower was chosen to succeed Brother Carpenter who served the church one year at which time the present pastor was chosen. The work from the very beginning has met with decided success until the present time a very commodious church building has been erected and the membership has increased. At our evangelistic meeting of two weeks, closing Easter Sunday of this year there were souls who had made the confession of Jesus Christ as their Lord and Savior.

The outlook of this field is encouraging to the members and pastor. It has its encouraging problems to meet but she is meeting them as only Christian people would.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

One of our newest and most promising mission points in charge Rev. E. J. Rohart meet them. This church is located in a city of 16,000 population, and is the center of Brethrenism in this part of the district. People are coming to the larger cities and towns for employment and some of them are Brethren people and should be taken care of when they come. Without a church of their choice in the city they are soon lost to the Brethren faith and make their homes elsewhere. There are those who know nothing of the Brethren doctrines and when once they get into its services and hear the Gospel proclaimed both from the Sunday school class rooms and the pulpit, become interested in the things for which the Brethren church stands.

As we are fast approaching the Thanksgiving season when all the churches are thinking of Home Missions it is hoped that the offering this year will be the largest in our history as a Brethren church. Yet the Home Mission Board is doing a great work and their call should be heeded and I am sure that the Lord will bless both church and individual who contributes to this noble cause.

G. L. MAUS.

FORT WAYNE, INDIANA

Do Home Missions Pay?

As a church we are young in years, and knowledge comes to churches and other stitutions largely through observation and experience. I am aware of the fact, that such a question sounds almost silly because the answer seems a foregone conclusion. "Why, certainly Mission work pays, and especially Home Mission work," I think I hear people say everywhere. But the fact remains that the Brethren church has not been Home Missionary in spirit or practice. If she had been, we would have a church, number a great many more people, and be a greater power for good in the world.

You have no doubt heard of the brother who when asked to give to Foreign Missions refused by saying he believed in Home Missions but not in Foreign Missions. Now the fact is that this brother did not believe in missions at all, and only said what he did, as an excuse for not giving anything. Mission work is mission work whether it is Home or Foreign, the location has nothing to do with it.

Here is another truth the Brethren church has to learn—not to let the money determine too largely the course of action. Because we have been preoccupied with money for Foreign Missions, that we have neglected Home Missions. But Jesus Christ taught us to love every man, and one man's life is worth more than the whole world. What is the use of Greenland's icy mountains, of the coral strand, or in one of the cities of the United States,—and all that regard to race or color.

And churches extend their borders only in proportion as they are willing to give for Home Mission work. The two largest churches in our denomination today were both mission points twenty-six years ago.

As to Fort Wayne when the Mission Boards met February 12th, 1926, we had no lot, no church, and no money, while today we have a plant here worth $10,000.00 and sixty members on the roll. We should have had a church here ten years ago, to care for our people who moved here from the various churches.

Yes, Home Mission work pays. Indeed, it is the only hope of the Brethren church. "If you cannot cross the ocean, and the heathen lands explore? You can find the heathen nearer; you can find them at your door."

J. L. KIMMEL.

THIRD CHURCH, PHILADELPHIA

We are asked to write concerning the work of the Third Brethren church of Philadelphia, but cannot, in a half-column article begin to tell the story of the struggle upwards against such great odds; of the discouragement and setbacks; of the triumphs, too, of the fourteen years of our pastoral labors here. The story has never been written, and perhaps never will be—for publication. Only one who can speak out of the heart of it; out of the spirit of it—whose life it was—can tell the story intimately.

So we will only speak of the immediate past, and of the outlook for the future.

About four years ago, primarily because our health at that time was feeling the strain of the growing work, we resigned, after preparing as far as we could for the building of our new church without actually undertaking the erection of it. Our successor built the church, but under his later ministry it did not prosper, and he resigned, leaving the church a very heavy financial burden.

The writer, with the aid of several other pastors, was successful in securing our late lamented Brother Marcus A. Weber, a new leader, who, after serving only a few ten or eleven weeks, was taken with pneumonia, and died. This was a great loss to the church, and another setback in its progress.

While again helping the church to find a new pastor a call was given the writer to again take up the work. We accepted the call, and began under very discouraging conditions; but the Lord has shown his favor, and the work is recuperating.

There has been about a forty per cent increase in Sunday school attendance since Italy Day. (The total last Sunday was 120). Both the Women's Missionary Society and the Christian Endeavor Society had been disbanded, but both have now been reorganized and are doing splendid work.

We have just organized a teacher-training class with about fifteen students enrolled.

Our prayer meeting has increased in attendance from an average of four to an average of eighteen, in four months.

Were it not for the heavy financial burden, there would be much to encourage us. But think, Brethren, of a little company of about fifty-three members, perhaps half of them children, of non-contributing members, carrying a monthly expense of about $200.00! And our people so nobly in giving out unless the Lord adds to our numbers soon, or raises up friends from somewhere to help us, we cannot tell what our future may be. But our trust is in God.

THE MUNCIE MISSION

Out of an experience covering more than two decades in the ministry, it is the honest opinion of the writer that we have no field offering better opportunities than this one.

First is the fact that in an area of about ten squares in all directions radiating from the church there are but three other mission churches and a large Catholic church (the only one in Muncie).

Second, the surrounding population is American stock of Kentucky and Tennessee ancestry mainly, very few of which have sought church affiliation. They offer a splendid opportunity.

Third, the nucleus upon which the future of our church depends, is a very fine, consecrated type of Dunkard birth and training. They are few in number, but are thoroughly consecrated.

Fourth, though they are straining to the utmost financially, just now, they are slowly adding through special rallies, labors and self-denials, a little each year to the building fund, which it is hoped will be large enough to begin building operations in another year.

The present building is entirely sufficient for the present needs of the worship services, but they are so crowded, often beyond capacity, for the Sunday school, that something will have to be done before long to meet the need. It has happened often that from 50 to 100 people have had to stand about the walls, every seat being occupied.

Other reasons could be mentioned, but these constitute the chief ones for a continued support and interest in our Muncie mission.

Fraternally,

GEORGE H. JONES, Pastor.

authoritative, revealed will of our God. Accordingly we know that Satan will attack, and thwart wherever and however he can. Only as we walk humbly before him, yielding ourselves unto him, can he continue to bless and prosper us. Will you pray for us that Satan shall not have any advantage now, but that the will of our Lord may be done?

THE BRETHREN CHURCH

At Des Moines, Iowa

The Brethren church at Des Moines is located on the corner of 11th and 12th streets. The lot covered by the church is large and affords plenty of room for expansion. The building is a fine structure, and for two hundred years it has been in good repair and will be "good as new" by the time the new outside woodwork is built. The attractiveness of the building will be greatly increased. More about the improvements can be said later.

The former pastor was Brother W. E. Kemp. He left some fine and able people here and we appreciate greatly his labors of sacrifice here with these people.

It takes more than a building to make a church. So we presume that the readers are anxious to know something about the people here. I will try to give some information about the numbers. The terms "fine", "good" and "commendable" tell very little when applied to numbers. So we say that the membership here has been about a hundred. Like all city churches, some of the people move quite frequently and others work on various shifts so that every Sunday our attendance is made smaller by those who are necessarily detained. Yet our Sunday school reached its high mark two weeks ago of seventy-six, while the lowest number was our first day here, sixty. A men's class was recently begun with a record attendance of five, I believe. We are expecting this to grow rapidly and we are also looking for one hundred in Sunday school before long. Our church services, both morning and evening have from forty-five to fifty in attendance. However, at the present the evening services seem to increase a little faster than the morning.

Our mid-week services for prayer and Bible study are well attended, thirty or more are often present. The people chose a book of the Bible to study when we came

Business Manager's Corner

"MAKING HAY WHILE THE SUN SHINES"

Our rural readers need not be reminded how essential it is that the above familiar saying shall be followed out if they desire to prove themselves efficient tillers of the soil, while our urban readers who are not more than one or two generations from the farm will quite readily catch the significance of the quotation. However, some may ask, What has making hay to do with the business manager's corner in a religious paper?

We only wish about nine thousand people who receive this number of the Brethren Evangelist would ask that question, and then that they would take the time to read the remaining few lines in this column. It might prove of great benefit both to them and to us.

"The meaning of the parable is this:" The sunshine is the fact that this week we are printing six thousand extra copies of the Evangelist to "boost" the Thanksgiving offering for home missions, and as it is a special number with special contributions and illustrations, and is printed with a special ink that cost us thirteen and one-third times as much as the ink we regularly use, we hope there will be at least twelve thousand extra people reached by this paper.

The "making hay" is using this opportunity to urge upon the thousands of Brethren people who are not regular readers of the Evangelist the importance, to themselves as well as to all the interests of the church, of having this paper come into their homes once a week, even though they may be too busy to read it entirely through every week. The business manager is paying $4.00 per year for a magazine to which he has been a subscriber for more than thirty years, and sometimes a number is scarcely looked at because of the high pressure life we seem to be compelled to live in these days, but it would seem like saying the final good-bye to one of the family to discontinue the magazine. Surely members of the Brethren church should be equally as devoted to the paper that represents all the interests of their own church.

Another reason for "making hay" NOW is the non subscribers of the papers are not reached by our appeals in this column in the regular numbers of the Evangelist for they do not see the paper and have no way of receiving the message the column might present. We might plead with tears running down our ink-begrimed, deeply furrowed cheeks making them resemble the delta of the Nile, but the pleadings would be in vain, unless some tender hearted pastor's sympathies might be stirred to action and he should make an announcement from the pulpit that "every family in the church should read the Brethren Evangelist, and that he would be glad to receive their subscriptions and send them in for them."

Remember, brethren, that it is easier to keep alive the interests of the church in those congregations where the Evangelist is most widely read. Some years ago when Dr. Beachler made his successful canvass for a college endowment fund he reported that his labors were greatly lightened in those congregations that were on the Honor Roll for Evangelist subscriptions, and now, while Dr. Bell is carrying on his equally successful campaign among the churches for the same purpose, he meets with the same conditions. Only the other day he said to the business manager, "Not half the people are taking the Evangelist that ought to be taking it."

The first of October we began mailing to about forty congregations bundles of the Evangelists in lots of ten, three months for $1.00, to be distributed among the families that are not receiving the paper, hoping in this way to secure enough new subscriptions to justify the extra expense. Would it be expecting too much to look for five hundred NEW subscriptions as the result of sending out those extra numbers and from the appeal we make in this issue?

"Eventually, why not now?" as it costs but two cents per week.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

WHAT HO HERE HY HEN ?

Should—
be done?

Witness for Christ and spread the good news of salvation that everyone may have the opportunity of accepting him (Matt. 28:19, 20).

WHO Should—
do it?

We, who are his children and are enjoying the blessings of salvation and the wonderful gift of eternal life. (John 17-2).

WHERE should it—
be done?

Jerusalem, Judea, Samaria and unto the uttermost parts of the earth, for Christ died for all. (Acts 1-8).

WHY should we—do it?

Because there is nothing so important as seeking first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness. (Mark 8:36).

WHEN should it—
be done?

Now; for souls are dying every minute without salvation and we could lead many of them to Christ, if we would. (Luke 10-2).

My Thanksgiving Offering

Will indicate how much I appreciate my Lord and the blessing of his salvation and how much I am interested in making it possible for others to accept him as Lord and Master of their lives, too.

We Need Thanksgiving Day

We need Thanksgiving Day. It ought not to be necessary to have a calendar appointment to remind us of our duty of thanksgiving, but our memories are short and the sense of obligation quickly passes. The spirit of thanksgiving ought to be our constant possession and its expression our daily practice. That was the ideal to which the Psalmist pledged himself: "I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth." But human nature is weak with us as it was with him and we find ourselves in need of being often reminded of our duty and prodded to our tasks. These annual Thanksgiving proclamations serve to accentuate the duty of praise and to call our forgetful souls back to a renewed sense of our obligation to Almighty God for his goodness—for his unceasing care and concern in every detail of life.

That is one of the most outstanding reasons for our need of Thanksgiving Day—it helps to keep us mindful of the goodness of God. That is a fundamental fact, and it makes a world of difference whether or not we are kept conscious of it. God is good, but sometimes we forget it. We seldom would dispute the fact, but sometimes we do not feel it. Dr. G. B. F. Hallock thinks, "Very few people are really skeptical as to the goodness, the loving-kindness, of the great God who is at the heart of things, who is at the heart of the whole universe as its author and upholder." Then he says, "We pity the man who has lost all faith in goodness and all faith in God. The Lord is good. The Lord is good," he repeats. "Let us fix the thought more firmly in our minds than ever before." For it will make a vast difference. It will make a difference in the warmth of our devotion to him. It will make a difference in the contentment of our minds. It will make a difference in the gratitude of our hearts. If we feel that God is good, that we are the recipients of his loving kindness, we will want to thank him. And that thanksgiving attitude will continue as long as we are conscious of divine goodness. And every event that will help to keep that conviction fresh in our minds is worth encouraging. If we can come to the place where the consciousness of God's goodness will stay with us through the year, the spirit of joy and gratitude will become permanent. Thanksgiving will then be not merely an annual event, but a perennial experience. And the more constant that appreciation becomes the richer will be the blessings that crown our lives. As another has illustrated it, "There are two ways to get rich. One is to increase the number of our dollars. The other is to increase the value of the few dollars we already have. Thankfulness raises the blessings we already have to higher degrees of worth, and thereby enriches us."

We need Thanksgiving Day also because of the self-benefits to be derived, because of the influence the gratitude thereby developed has in the formation of character. The absence of gratitude means a lack of contentment, which in turn leads to covetousness. One may either have his heart set with such appreciation on the things he possesses, though they be small, that he fails to notice the larger things of others, or he may be so envious of the things of others that he fails to appreciate his own. The attitude he takes will determine the direction of his character and the strength of his life. We are told that the late Dr. John Hall, of blessed memory, used to walk along the streets and look into the store windows at Christmas time to see how many things he could do without. A man who can do that has gone a long way toward real soul wealth, he has achieved much godliness with contentment which is great gain. He has built deeply and permanently. He has prepared himself for happiness and usefulness in life.

Not all men, even in the church, have thus equipped and enriched themselves. Far too many are lacking in gratitude, are filled with discontentment and are covetous of the things of others. He who is thus disposed towards life is in a pitiable condition. Dr. Frank W. Luce says, "He who holds it as a principle that God and man are under lasting obligation to him, and no matter what he receives he has never yet been the recipient of that which his worth demands, that man, no matter how rich in gold he may be, no matter how learned or naturally brilliant he may be, is superficial, vacillating, unreliable, disagreeable and unhappy. On the other hand, he who takes the attitude that he is like Paul, debtor to God and man, and holds a spirit of thankful appreciation for all that he receives that tends to his welfare, that may man be poor, he may be ignorant, he may be mediocre in talent of acquirement, yet he is stable, helpful, reliable, agreeable and happy. His gratitude will impart to his character an element that nothing else can supply."

Furthermore, we need occasions of thanksgiving because of what they do for us by way of encouraging the right attitude toward others, making us more charitable and tolerant. We often find it difficult to be agreeable with others and to attribute to them the highest and finest motives because of an undue self-appreciation, which means selfishness and egotism, and lack of a feeling of dependence on and obligation to both God and man. Intolerance and uncharitableness usually point to an exaggerated sense of one's own importance. An unworthy interpretation of another's acts often is the fruit of selfishness and is grown in the soil of narrowness and self-conceit. The spirit of gratitude makes men broader in sympathy and appreciation and more generous in interpretation. The experience of Jean Valjean in Victor Hugo's "Les Misérables" furnishes a striking illustration of this point. When he had entered into the new life of self-denial and service in the village of M——, and while he made large money from his newly discovered process of making beads and ornaments, there were many who said "he wants to be rich." But when it was called to their attention that he gave away more than he kept for himself, they could not understand it. When the king offered him an appointment as mayor of a town, the gossippers said it was political preferment that he was after. But when he turned down the offer they were greatly perplexed. Later when the king sought to honor him with the cross they said, "Now it is all clear; he has wanted religious preferment." But when he declined that offer they were buried in perplexity. They were unable to conceive of such unselfishness and purity of motive. It takes unselfishness to appreciate unselfishness, and kindness and generosity to understand conduct of that sort. It takes practice in genuine thanksgiving to develop such breadth of vision and understanding. Thanksgiving Day offers an opportunity to begin, to begin anew, as the case may be, and may it be but the beginning of an effort, to be continued throughout the year, for the promotion of the spirit and expression of thanksgiving.

Atheism Chartered

The State of New York has recently made history the type of which cannot be equalled anywhere else in the world. There was issued a charter to "The American Association for the Advancement of Atheism." Such an anomaly is hard to understand. Instead of "American" it should rightly be called "Unamerican," for this great American commonwealth was founded upon God and the Bible and if the spirit and the teachings of Jesus that are imbedded in the laws of our land were destroyed there would be nothing left but anarchy. This newly chartered institution purposes to spread abroad its venom by entering the schools and colleges by means of its lecturers and leaders and by publishing a large weekly paper containing its editorials and attacks on Christianity. It claims to be making converts by the thousand. Following is an outline of its objectives:

- "1. All churches shall be taxed.
- "2. Chaplains in congress, legislatures, and in the army and navy shall be done away with.
- "3. Appropriations of public money for sectarian use shall be stopped.
- "4. The bootlegging (their phrase) of the Bible and religion into the public schools of America shall cease.
- "5. No religious festival or fast shall be recognized by the state.
- "6. The Bible shall no longer be used to administer an oath.
- "7. Sunday as a religious Sabbath shall no longer be enforced by law.
- "8. 'Christian' morality shall be done away with. In its place shall be natural morality, equal rights, and impartial liberty.
- "9. 'In God we trust' shall be taken off coins."

It is a shame that America must be disgraced by the chartering of such an institution in its leading state and that it is to have the seeds of atheism sowed broadcast in our schools and colleges, and among the sneering and cynical of the populace. However, the greater challenge is to the professing Christians to live a life that is above reproach. That, in the final analysis, is the greatest antidote to the poison of unbelief. And on the contrary, the hypocritical church member is the greatest cause for the springing up and spread of such cults, and is the source of many other organized and unorganized evils. The atheism of practice is more to be feared than the atheism of creed.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Give a church vision and you give it the key to a future.

Church members must have convictions about something before they will be able to stand for anything.

It does a Christian good to face up occasionally to the question, why he is too indifferent with regard to the future of his unchristian neighbor.

Dr. J. L. Gillin gives us an interesting and informing description of his trip through the Panama Canal and the observations made in transit.

Brother Elmer M. Keck, pastor of the church at Jones Mills, Pennsylvania, writes us that his work is going nicely and that a good attendance and fine spirit was had at a recent communion service.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports his Endowment Campaign canvass at Oakville, Indiana, where Brother S. C. Henderson is the able pastor. The contribution of this church was $1,218.36, which, added to the last previous total makes $125,260.54.

Dr. J. C. Beal writes of his evangelistic campaign at Carleton, Nebraska, where he received the loyal cooperation of the pastor, Brother C. R. Koontz and his good people. He succeeded in winning a number of souls to Christ; in fact, all the unconverted who attended, but conditions worked against the attendance of this class of people.

Our correspondent from Gratis, Ohio, reports the work in good condition and the various departments doing excellent work. At the Fall Festival the mortgage on their church building was burned and the property freed from debt. Brother and Sister O. C. Starn have proven themselves workers that need not be ashamed and are highly esteemed by the church and community.

Brother S. P. Fogle writes us a letter from one point on a trip west where he stopped and conducted a meeting. Five confessions are reported. Brother Fogle is right; there are many very needy fields in the great west, fields practically untouched by the Gospel and many without a church or Sunday school. The publication of Brother Fogle's report has been unavoidably delayed.

Give to him that asketh of thee, but not necessarily what he asks. Your Christian duty may require your giving something more difficult and more worthy of you.

Brother C. C. Grisso writes of his close of the pastorate at Warsaw, Indiana, where he served so faithfully and successfully for three years and the beginning of his work at Sunnyside, Washington. Fifteen souls have been added to the church here since his arrival, a number as the result of a union meeting. November is "loyalty" month there.

Brother G. E. Drushal writes of a very successful evangelistic meeting at Lost Creek, Kentucky, conducted by Brother James S. Cook as evangelist. There were fifty-eight confessions, twenty-eight of whom came into the church by baptism. A communion service observed at the close was the banner for attendance of all since the work began. Also he reports an unusual healing during the meetings.

Brother G. W. Chambers reports seven received into his church at Mount Olive, Virginia, as a result of a revival conducted by Brother E. J. Rohart of Winchester, same state. This rural congregation is certainly showing its zeal, especially from the standpoint of improving its equipment. Brother Chambers also writes of the meeting he recently conducted for Brother Arthur Snider over the hills in West Virginia.

We are sorry to announce that Sister Grace Snick is ill and is confined to her room in the College Dormitory. She was ill when she reached Ashland nearly two weeks ago and has been unable to fill any engagements since the one in the Ashland church. Her schedule of travel among the churches is necessarily broken, but she hopes to be able to make new arrangements and to resume her work in a short time. She will appreciate your prayers.

While many of you will be reading this paper Brother James S. Cook and his good people of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, will be dedicating their remodeled and refurnished church, Sunday, November 20th. The notice did not reach us in time for the previous issue. Martinsburg now has a very comfortable and adequate church plant, in which are ten Sunday school rooms, an auditorium and basement. We congratulate both pastor and people and shall hope to have a report and a picture of their new church in the near future.

Brother S. C. Henderson tells of his leaving the Fremont, Ohio, pastorate and taking up the work at Oakville, Indiana, where he has been well received and where a revival meeting is now in progress. His four years' pastorate at Fremont was a successful one, the outstanding features being the erection of a greatly enlarged and improved church building, and the enlarging of the membership. Six additions are counted since last report and the church was left in an encouraged and harmonious condition. The pulpit is being supplied from Ashland until the arrival of the new pastor, W. S. Crick, on January 1.

Dr. Caleb R. Stetson, rector of Trinity Church, New York City, advises that "Church marriages be limited to those having been baptized and are known by the minister performing the ceremony." He urges that the Episcopal church draw a distinction between marriage as a civil contract and as a church contract. He says further:

"To decree divorce as a growing evil does not go very far toward remedying matters," Dr. Stetson says. "Out of every six couples married it would appear from reports that there is one divorce. There is a definite propaganda for free divorce which seems to be making considerable headway. We may even come to the point where trial marriages may be legalized; or to the condition in Soviet Russia, where divorce is granted without question on the application of both or even one of the parties to a marriage."

Before marriage, not after, says Dr. Stetson, is the best time to stop divorce, and he has been of the opinion for years that "the church should reserve the holy ceremony of marriage for only her children, who are known to her and who honestly purport to live together after God's ordinance."

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Spirit of the Pilgrims

By Edwin Boardman, Jr.

The Pilgrims present to the world, in living example, the spirit of protest that Luther presented in words. For one hundred years prior to the advent of the Pilgrims Europe had been the center of savage conflict over man's spiritual experience. Within those hundred years three great theologians—Luther, Zwingli and Calvin—had led their respective groups along the pathway of mental and spiritual protest against a corrupt and savagely despotic Papal power. With this vocal protest there followed social and political revolution of widespread proportions. An English King—Henry VIII—could use the idea of the Reformation to carry forward his much married experience and incidentally plant the seeds of rapid change in the spiritual experience of his realm. Ignatius Loyola presented the forces of Roman reaction the double edged weapon of Jesuitical purpose and program. The peasants of various lands reared their weary heads at the trumpet call of change and began to exert pressure on established powers which was abortive for the time being. Heretics of various shades of belief were introduced to inquisitorial fires in England and on the continent, and human hatred, intolerance, and misunderstanding were given full play. After a century of such experience it is not to be wondered at that a Thirty Years' War was the full flower produced in political experience, and that the austere, intolerant, but freedom loving Pilgrim was a partial product in personal experience.

The Pilgrim was a Separatist. He had completely broken with the established modes of thought, the established church and the established modes of social life in his generation. Persecution had been so often the corollary to difference in his experience that a rocklike severity and bleakness had come into his life causing him to manifest a separation from others in spiritual experience, politics and very manner of living. Other men could accept matters at their given evaluation and by united effort seek to improve general standards in various departments of life,—of such a group were the regular Puritans,—but the Pilgrim sought to climb to the top of some Carmel, put the false gods to a test, and then in austere and savage exultation do away entirely with the false system with its proven failure. The Pilgrim looked with abhorrence on every mode of life but his own and because he was in a hopeless minority in England he followed the steps of Elijah the Separatist and fled to a distant realm.

The Separatist became a Pilgrim because he was inflexible in his convictions and intolerant in his practice. In his day he was a ranter, a dissenter, a fanatic; and these factors made him a wanderer on the face of the earth. He was English to the core and when the congregation removed to Holland to find a more hospitable home—for persecution had finally driven the Separatist from England—he drew the mantle of his English heritage about him and lived a separate life among his Dutch neighbors. In England he had the forms of speech and training working in his favor, but persecution made life unbearable. So he moved. In Holland persecution was absent, but so were the English speech and training. Again he moved.

The Pilgrim sought a perfect realm—a realm where he could think, speak, and act like an English dissenter, and still enjoy personal liberty and freedom from persecution. In other words he wanted to be a Pilgrim in a Pilgrim world. It is significant that his heart longings were capable of realization for a new hemisphere had come to light within which the Pilgrim idea could be practiced. Report had made known the fact that the new land was virgin soil to the white man and though it would present hardship and ceaseless effort such a realm, thought the Pilgrim, was worthy of the price demanded. Thus the wanderer turned to the new world. Perhaps it was the irony of fate that he should land on a bleak, rock-bound coast, as comparable to the salubrious climate and rich soil further south as his own austere character was comparable to that of the merry hearted, wine bibbing cavalier.

It is to be said to the glory of the Pilgrim, however, that he never shrank from his battle with the wilderness. Famine and sickness might carry off half the little company the first few months, but the remainder sturdily faced their unfulfilled dream of a Pilgrim Commonwealth and sought to make that dream come true. Their persistence brought its reward and one hundred and fifty years after those first hard years at Plymouth had passed their great grandsons had opportunity to put the mental, spiritual and political separatism of their sires to the test of armed revolution at Lexington, Concord and Bunker Hill.

As we view the Pilgrim then we note the blending of those traits of character that have been the vital gem of all great movements.

First there was the concentration of their convictions on several fundamental issues such as personal belief, a correct and clean mode of life, and the protest against a state supported church. Their generation needed such a witness for the England of the early seventeenth century was unspeakably foul in its manifestation of life. The reign of Elizabeth had been magnificent externally—in discovery, conquest, wealth getting, and in intellectual attainments, but the faith and morals of the nation had suffered. It was in vigorous protest against corruption that the Pilgrim and Puritan found their great driving force and they did inject into the social organism of their day the vital germ which later produced the English Commonwealth under Cromwell and put into English character a moral power that has served to produce dominance. We may not like the intolerant spirit, especially when this intolerance is manifested in a reform movement, but we'll have to honestly confess that vigorous, convincing, idealistic intolerance plays a useful part in the building of nations and social organisms. America need not fear a vigorous imitation of this angle of the Pilgrim spirit in this day for the time is ripe for a lofty and unbending re-emphasis on the virtues of faith, separatism from shame and a freedom from demagogism. We're becoming so loose in our convictions that it is refreshing to find any one who will dare to stand fast and cleave to a clean cut line. The Pilgrim spirit was austere and cold. We would it might have been of a warmer, more sunny type, but notwithstanding its austerity it was effective in that it began the population of a wilderness and helped to make it blossom as a rose. After all the worth and rightness of any man's convictions are to be gauged by the big result they produce, not merely by the present bit of intolerance or fanaticism those convictions may exercise. Looked at in this light the cold intolerance of the Separatist Pilgrims has become an eminently fine and worthwhile contribution to national and international life. The Pilgrim forever stands in American life as an indignant protest against that liberalism which, while it produces external opulence and intellectual greatness, yet does despite to dynamic faith and the vigorous cleanliness of moral and mental life.

REV. EDWIN BOARDMAN, JR.
Pastor First Church, Waterloo, Iowa

In the second place the Pilgrim spirit dared to enter unexplored realms. He was conservative only in the outreach of the blessings he claimed for himself. Otherwise he was a pioneer. Socially, politically and spiritually he lived ahead of the crowd. Others were content to live in the hazy light of a semi-Romanism. The Pilgrim dared to live in the realm of stark realism in matters of faith. No gush, no gaudy show were his, but he did dare to live in the blaze of the pure white light which shined from the fountain head of all true light—the Word of the Living God. He stood a soul unmasked in the presence of Deity without the superficial aids of Papistical cant and mediation. He dared to stand alone and the demands to social and spiritual righteousness which came to him in that unutterable presence made him covet the name of Separatist. He re-adventured into the realm of faith and caught the implications of personal piety which made him the butt of cruel persecution and sneering cynicism on the part of an almost effete cavalierism.

The Pilgrim and his kind were the true progressives in the realm of practical government. The gay millions of Cavalier England were content to bow and grovel before a fickle queen, or a curly headed king, but the Pilgrim envisioned a state in which the Christian freeman was the king and the Christian freewoman was the queen. More than that he dared to put his vision into practical experimentation in a virgin continent, where besides his own group there was naught but a great, howling wilderness. Democracy came into being when this sour visaged, stern minded individual set up the government of Plymouth town and the free born citizen since that day has come into a constantly increasing heritage of privilege and blessing.

Then too, the Pilgrim reprobated intellectual ignorance and recognized that democratic institutions could not thrive without educated minds to uphold them so he reached into the realms of thought with a groping hand and an inquisitive mind. True, for years the superstitions of a Roman Catholic past clung to him and marred the recorded pages of his commonwealth with witch burnings and heresy trials, but increasing freedom of thought and speech were assured by the doors of education that were reopend to youth. The fruition of the educational system nurtured by the Pilgrim Father has found finest expression in the great minds of our land from New England who have ever stood in the forefront of educational research and constitutionally ordered liberty.

In conclusion then we may view the spirit of the Pilgrim in its two-fold expression—(1) Its confirmed and sturdy convictions which made the Pilgrim a marked man in his generation, and made him fight intolerance with intolerance. (2) Its progressiveness, which made him the pioneer in the realms of faith, democratic government, and education. With smug complacency we may point out the weaknesses and shortcomings of the Pilgrim and incidentally call ourselves "better men", but under God, Brethren, we have very little about which to boast when we put the Pilgrim's sturdy faith over against the malted milk variety of faith we exercise today. Certainly we abhor the "ducking stool", the stocks, the stake and the gallows—these much used modes of punishment in early Plymouth, but we could well dare to live among those things if the ancient virtues of the Pilgrims would come with them. God help us not to break with the past, but rather may he help us to make that past function so that we may be used to bring into being a far more glorious future in faith, morals and government.

What the Church Has to Be Thankful For

By Claud Studebaker

I am well aware that concerning this subject on which I offer a few suggestions, what you may read into it out of your own experience may mean as much to you as the thoughts which I may venture to express out of my heart. And the subject, the church will carry a different meaning for different readers.

But I ask you to think of the church first as the great body of true believers, members of the different local organized groups (truly called a church) of whom Christ is Lord as well as Savior. It is those who can suffer for his sake, who can feed on the Word of truth, who are active about their master's work in a material world, and yet live in the Kingdom of heaven and in loving fellowship with Jesus Christ. I am not speaking in technical terms, but of the great truth that for those of us who are members of the church, "our citizenship is in heaven" and "We look not on the things that are seen, but the things that are not seen", a truth which is plainly taught in the scripture.. We truly have a kingdom of righteousness in the world which is the true church of Jesus Christ, and is doing God's will, and over which Christ is captain and head. This group, indeed, has much to be thankful for, whether it be life or death.

Now, you may want to think of the church as the Brethren church in connection with this subject, or of your local church. I think it is well that we consider it from this point and get in mind what our local groups have to be thankful for. We have local churches whose concern is not much greater than their own local contacts. They seem to be satisfied and thankful if they can keep the house in repair and the Sunday school up to a certain number and meet the pastor's salary and keep up with the Methodists or Presbyterians or Baptists. But if they cannot they are ready to quit. God have mercy on the discouraged church and the discouraged soul. But, cheer up, Brethren, there is so much to be thankful for that you really have not time to make any dates for a sobbing party, or a grumble fest, or a critics' convention. I presume our Lord might have spent many hours bemoaning the conditions as he saw them about him, but we have no record that he spent valuable time and energy that way. We do have many instances of thanksgiving, even at the grave of Lazarus. "Father, I thank thee that thou hast heard me, and I know that thou hearest me always." "And when he had given thanks", with the cross in full view and knowing that the morrow would find him forsaken of God on that cross and bearing the sins of the world, he offered thanks for that very broken body and shed blood. O brother, you sinning, whining critic, spend more time in thanksgiving and you will have less time for bemoaning the conditions that are discouraging. Of course there is much evil in the world, of course the church is not doing what she could and should, but the church has much to be thankful for in the way of accomplished tasks.

If you want to prepare yourself for a praise service for the condition of the church and ministry, just read about 1200 years of her history and see the lust, deceit, murder, tyranny and excess of every kind, charged not against the true church, nor yet against the martyrs who sealed their faith with their blood, but against the rival functions in the presumed church of Jesus Christ, shedding the blood of strife and wrath, shedding blood for gold and power, torturing in the most ignominious manner those who dared to believe differently from her pronouncement. When I travel the road of the church over 1900 years of history and put my finger on her heart throb and look upon her countenance and see the fruit of the centuries of time in the work of the church, my heart overflows in thanksgiving that the church today is not piling the fagots for heretics, but is charitable to those who differ in belief from her, and is seeking to best serve the world as a minister of righteousness and peace, and to send the message of the gospel story of redeeming love to the ends of the world.

The great missionary activity of the church is certainly a cause for thanksgiving. She conquers not by sword and scimitar, but by love and sacrifice.

The church that sends, and the people who receive, are all stirred to praise unto God. We are moved to thank him that we have a message of love, hope, and joy, and that it meets the heart-need of every person in all the world. We thank him too that we have those who leave home and friends, and even children that are dearer than life, to tell the sweet story of love to those who have not heard it. The church has great cause for thanksgiving at this point. She should have a real praise service for those men and women who are sacrificing to serve her in various places. There are very few successful ministers today but who, if it were a matter of dollars they sought, would not be doing other things. It is particularly true of our own denomination. Many of our most worthy servants are laboring for much less than they might receive elsewhere. Do we brethren appreciate it? And do we thank God that we have some, and increasingly more, who recognize their stewardship and are making possible a real work in our church? Thank God for the strong, educated men of faith who are preaching and teaching the Word in a world of doubt.

Let the church praise God for harmony, that our ranks are not torn with strife, and this is especially true of our own denomination. Thank God Christians are disposed to talk union instead of division. Whatever this may mean it at least reflects a happy condition of the heart.

The church dares not neglect her service of praise.

Praise the Lord (1) That we have a message of truth and love to give. (2) That we have a message of truth and love to live. (3) That we are not living in the age of blood and tyranny of our past history. (4) That we have men and women who give their lives in service in foreign and home fields. (5) That we have many who are awakening to their opportunities in being faithful stewards of God's blessing. (6) That harmony prevails in our ranks. (7) That the church is serving the world in loving ministry and is giving every soul a living hope in Christ Jesus. How will you show your thanks? By a Thanksgiving offering. Actions speak louder than words.

The Value of the Bible School

By Rev. Charles H. Ashman

(Address delivered before a Teachers' Institute of Bible Schools in Johnstown, Pennsylvania)

The Sunday school ought to be called, "The Bible school of the church." It should never be called the Sabbath school. It is not held on the Sabbath. Neither does it teach the law of which the Sabbath was a part. It might appropriately be called, "The Lord's Day school" or as originally called, "The Sunday school." But, it is unwise and unscriptural to call it, "The Sabbath school."

We need to take a fresh valuation of the Bible school. A telescopic vision reveals its bigness. It is big in its universality. It is all inclusive. It enrolls the babe in the Cradle Roll Department. From then on there is never a time in life when that person is not included in the school. The Home Department will care for him if sick or aged. If he removes from the community, he becomes an Alumnus. The bigness of the Bible school is like a mighty army. There are 2,216,554 enlisted in Pennsylvania alone. The Allied army on France's battlefronts was as a pigmy in comparison to this Bible school army. If we could only put our ears to the earth on Sunday morning and listen to the tramp, tramp, tramping of this army as it marches to and from our churches, it would make our hearts swell with joy that we belong to so great an organization. The Bible school is like a mighty stream. It is the Mississippi of North America and the Amazon of South America combined. It is broad, deep, and strong. Millions of living souls are moving on its bosom, yielding to its currents. The Bible school is like a gigantic machine. It has wheels within wheels. It is like a transcontinental highway on which souls are moving Godward, churchward, and outward into life and service. A telescopic vision reveals the bigness of the Bible school.

A microscopic vision reveals its intricacy. Each soldier has his place. Each vessel has its course on the stream. Each cog fits into the others in the machine. The Bible school presents a picture like unto the modern typesetting machine or printing press. In its minuteness of detail the Bible school is a marvel of organization.

The Bible school is a power to be reckoned with today. It has passed through different stages unto permanency. First, it met with stern opposition. Then it was tolerated. Then it passed through a period of experimentation. Now, it has arrived at the state and stage of PERMANENCY. It is here to stay. Its continuity is assured. It has perpetuity powers. It is a power to be reckoned with at all times. It is neither a jest nor a joke. It is neither a toy nor a novelty. It is an institution, throbbing with life.

The Bible school has value because of its objectives. Its supreme objective is to study and teach the Bible. It is the organized effort of the church to obey the divine command, "Teach the Word." The Bible is the Touchstone of the school. It is the Jasper stone which determines the fineness of the gold of the school by the color the school makes on it. The Bible judges the school, not the school the Bible. The school ought to be engaged in teaching the Bible, not in teaching about the Bible. We ought to stop talking about the bread and proceed to cut the bread and pass it out. There is too much "skip-itis" in the Bible school lessons. The butterfly method of flitting here and there is employed too much. It is resulting in a "Shorter Bible." The Bible is no longer than we study and live. There is too much "taking texts out of their contexts and making of them pretexts." The objective of the school is to dispel the appalling ignorance of the Bible of today.

Moreover, the value of the Bible school consists in its program of evangelism. It aims to lead the unsaved to a normal and personal acceptance of Jesus Christ as Savior. It not only instructs the head, but reaches the heart for decision for Christ. It is a soul winning institution. If it fails in evangelism, it is a failure indeed! It is the great recruiting station for the church. The Church was established by Christ. The Church invented the Bible school as a method of teaching the Bible and winning souls. Is there danger today that the school will repudiate the church? Is there danger that the school will supplant the Church? If so, it is becoming a menace and a curse. At least, let us guard against such a possibility.

The value of the Bible school is discovered in its potentialities. We tremble when we think of what would be the result if this great institution would be captured by the adversary. If the army should be led by false leaders; if the stream should be diverted from its course; if the machine should be surrendered to wrong uses; we tremble for the results. But, we face the future with confidence when we realize the potentialities of the Bible school for good. The Standard Oil Company discovered oil in Egypt because they read in the Bible that pitch was used to build the frail boat in which the child Moses was set afloat on the Nile. They saw the possibilities of oil where there was pitch. We see the possibilities of the Bible school. It is the greatest thought-moulding, decision-securing, character-building agency of the church.

Now, we need grit, grace, and gumption to realize these possibilities. Mark Twain was on his way to deliver a speech. The engine of the train broke down and he knew he could not reach the place in time for the speech. He sent this telegram, "I have every motive for coming, except locomotive." We must have the locomotive power to realize these possibilities. We have it in the Person of the Holy Spirit. Human energy and talent, trained and consecrated, yielded to the wisdom and power of the Holy Spirit will make real all these possibilities.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Sin of Ingratitude

By A. R. Staley

TEXTS: "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."—Psalm 107:2. "Were there not ten cleansed? but where are the nine?"—Luke 17:17.

Happy is the man or woman who, on our National Thanksgiving Day, can sing from the depths of a sincere heart:

"Oh thou whose bounty fills my cup,
With every blessing meet,
I give thee thanks for every drop,
The bitter and the sweet."

Gratitude is a grace that struggles for expression. It does not shut itself up in the heart. It does not allow itself to be merely felt. The writer of our first text regards the expression of gratitude as a duty. He says, "Oh that men would praise the Lord for his goodness, and for his wonderful works to the children of men (Ps. 107:8)!" "Let the redeemed of the Lord"—those who have experienced God's mercies, those who have tasted of his goodness—"say so."

As Jesus and his disciples pursued their last journey together to Jerusalem, they passed through Samaria and Galilee. And as Jesus entered a certain city, there met him ten men who were lepers and stood at a distance. In loud voices they cried out, "Jesus, Rabbi, take pity on us." They no doubt had heard of his power to heal the sick and cleanse the leper, for his fame had gone far and wide. They may have heard of how he opened the eyes of Bartimeus, or how he had caused the man to walk who was let down through the house top, or how the woman had crept through the crowd and touched the hem of his garment and was healed. They must have heard that Jesus was passing that way. So they stationed themselves at the city gate and at the opportune time, "they lifted up their voices, and said, Jesus, Master have mercy on us."

This was an act of faith, and as such the Lord accepted it and tested it. The test was that they should make the journey to Jerusalem and show themselves to the priests. They proved their faith in Jesus by immediate obedience. While they were on their way they were made clean. "One of them, a Samaritan, seeing that he was cured, came back, adoring and praising God in a loud voice, and he threw himself at the feet of Jesus, thanking him." Then comes the pathetic words of our second text, "Were not all ten cleansed? but where are the nine?" Only one out of the ten was really thankful for the blessing received. Is this proportion right for this day?

Ingratitude is one of the worst sins for which we as American people will have to answer. As American citizens we do not seem to realize and appreciate the blessings which we have under the protection of our flag. We are blessed with more freedom, comfort, and happiness than any other nation of this day. Yet how few of us are really grateful. Far too many are ready to complain and find fault and are unwilling to spend and be spent to make this, our nation, a better place in which to live. Most of us were loyal during the world war, but we need patriotism now in time of peace. By true patriotism we mean more than displaying the stars and stripes on legal holidays. We mean more than taking off our hats when the flag passes by. We mean more than rising to our feet when our national hymn is being used. No man can be the kind of citizen that our nation needs most until he has crowned Jesus King of kings and Lord of lords, in his life. What we need in America is not more men but a better brand of men; men who will lift the blood stained banner of Jesus Christ above the stars and stripes.

As Christians we do not appreciate our church as we should. The church is the most important institution in any community. If we take it from our midst, by our failure to appreciate its value, then we will be in a most deplorable condition. What is the purpose of the church? Jesus Christ said that he came into the world, "that whosoever believeth in him might not perish but have everlasting life." The Apostle Paul said, "This is a faithful saying and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners." This is the chief purpose of the church, yet you will find churches where they hold prayer meetings for a whole year without one attempt to save a soul. They come together and make their prayers and their short talks, and prepare themselves for a work they never think of doing. We are ready to say, Please, in asking God for many good gifts, but when we get them we forget to say, Thank you. We have the most wonderful story ever told. We are unworthy of the great blessings that have come to us if we fail to tell it. You claim to be feasting on the Bread of Life! You claim to be drinking at the Fountain that never shall run dry! Are your high claims true? If so how can you sit still? How can you keep quiet? "Let the redeemed of the Lord say so."

Again, think of the ungratefulness that we find in our homes. How many parents have gone down to premature graves because of the disobedience and lack of appreciation on the part of boys and girls? Children, "Honor thy father and mother, that thy days may be long upon the land which the Lord, thy God giveth thee." Parents, if you are denying yourselves the help of the church, you are neglecting one of the greatest helps God has given you in bringing up your boys and girls to be men and women of whom you can justly be proud. Fathers and mothers, when the boy or girl does something that pleases you, don't fail to show your appreciation. Far too many of us forget our God-given place in the home. Husbands, you know you have the best wife in the world, at least, you ought to feel that way. How long has it been since you told her what a good wife she has been? How long since you gave her a lover's kiss? Wives, how did you meet your husband today when he returned from work? What have you been doing to make your home the most desirable place in all the community for him to spend his evenings? Don't forget that praise is sunshine to the human heart and it is sin to withhold it when it is due. A kiss and a word of praise go a long way in making a happy home.

Many hearts are breaking today because we are failing to show our appreciation. Then let those who are thankful say so.

A certain Red Cross nurse after years of service on the battle fields of France said that, "out of all the soldier boys she had nursed back to health, not one ever sent her a word of thanks. Certainly they appreciated what she had done for them. They were just thoughtless; they didn't think to thank. But her heart was breaking because of their failure to express their gratitude.

A great steamer was sinking just outside of Chicago. Men, women and children were struggling in the chilly water. With the exception of two young men the great crowd gathered on the shore seemed helpless. Nat was a strong swimmer. Again and again he carried a-rope out to the sinking vessel until 23 human lives were saved by his efforts. For weeks he was in a delirious condition. Three hundred lifeless bodies were washed upon the shore. Our nation has all but forgotten but surely those twenty-three have not. But the truth is that not one of them ever came or wrote a letter of thanks. Nat Spencer went out in life an invalid. He had given his strength for twenty-three people who would not even say "Thank you."

A mother was dying. Every thought had been for her children. Six stalwart sons stood around her bedside. They had received the blessings of a true mother with but very little thought of her needs. As they looked upon her pale face today, tears could not be held back. One of them said, "O, mother, how we all love you." Opening her heavy eyes she feebly replied, "O, boys, how I wish that you had told me before."

Oh, how many mothers, and wives, and teachers, and clerks and pastors and church workers, and people generally there are who are longing to hear some one express some word of satisfaction, appreciation and grateful praise!

On one occasion Jesus stood on the hill overlooking Jerusalem. He had tried to teach them, and lead them from their wickedness, but they had scorned him, accused him of being a devil, spit upon him and were soon to crucify him, yet he cried out with a broken heart, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, thou that killest the prophets, and stonest them which are sent unto thee, how often would I have gathered thy children together, even as a hen gathereth her chickens under her wings and ye would not" (Matt. 23:37)! The Jews, failure to appreciate and accept him was literally breaking his heart.

Jesus came and braved this old sin-tossed world. He gave his lifeblood on Calvary's cross, for you and for me. How many, oh, how many, really say, Thank You? They are as only one in comparison to the multitudes who forget.

Very few of us really mean to appear ungrateful. We are like those nine lepers who did not come back to thank Jesus. They knew that they had been wonderfully healed but that was nothing unusual in that day. Jesus was performing as wonderful things every day. They no doubt reasoned that he knew and appreciated their thanks even though they did not return to tell him so. We take our every day blessings in a "matter-of-fact, take-it-for-granted" form of gratitude. So far as we are concerned they just happen. We never stop to think of our indebtedness to God or our fellow beings. Did you ever stop to think of how many hands you are indebted to for the loaf of bread you had for dinner? Don't forget that, "No man liveth unto himself." Don't forget that the grateful man receives a greater blessing. Jesus said to the man who returned to say Thank you, "Go thy way, thy faith hath made thee whole."

At this Thanksgiving season, think and then thank. Thank God for your home, a Christian home. Thank him for your parents, your children. Thank him for the love that binds together brother and sister, lover and friend.

Thank him for the family, that blessed institution out of which grow all other good institutions. Thank him for this great nation. Thank him for our beloved church. Thank him for the great plan of salvation. "In everything give thanks; for this is the will of God in Christ Jesus concerning you" (1 Thess. 5:18). "O give thanks unto the Lord, for he is good: for his mercy endureth forever. Let the redeemed of the Lord say so" (Psalm 107:1, 2).

God Did It

A well known evangelist relates the following incident: I first came to America many years ago, with the captain of a steamer who was one of the most devoted men I ever knew.

When off the coast of Newfoundland he said to me, "Mr. Inglis, the last time I crossed here, five weeks ago, something happened which revolutionized the whole of my Christian life.

"We had George Muller of Bristol on board. I had been on the bridge 24 hours and never left it. George Muller came to me and said, 'Captain, I have come up to tell you I must be in Quebec Saturday afternoon.' 'It is impossible,' I said. 'Very well, if your ship cannot take me, God will find some other way—I have never broken an engagement for 57 years. Let us go down into the chart room and pray.'

"I looked at that man of God, and thought to myself, 'What lunatic asylum can that man have come from? I never heard of such a thing as this.'

"'Mr. Muller,' I said, 'do you know how dense this fog is?' 'No,' he replied, 'my eye is not on the density of the fog, but on the Living God, Who controls every circumstance of my life.'

"He knelt down and he prayed one of the most simple prayers. When he had finished I was going to pray, but he put his hand on my shoulder, and told me not to pray. 'First, you do not believe he will, and, second, I BELIEVE HE HAS, and there is no need whatever for you to pray about it.' I looked at him, and George Muller said, 'Captain, I have known my Lord for 57 years, and there has never been a single day that I have failed to set an audience with the King. Get up, Captain, and open the door, and you will find the fog is gone.'

"I got up, and the fog was indeed gone.

"On Saturday afternoon, George Muller was in Quebec for his engagement."—Selected.

THE CHRISTIAN VOCATION

Read Ephesians 4:1-16.

Religion has been lately described as "man's adventure toward God." The phrase commends itself. It gathers up the yearnings, the effort, and enterprise with which man seeks his spiritual home. Like many a happy phrase, however, it contains a half truth. It leaves out too much. Christianity, at least is not man's essay to God alone, or even primarily. Christianity is the religion of God's adventure manward. It thinks of God as taking the initiative, as moving out toward man, and constraining him to faith, love, and service. It is our modern habit to think of man's religious life as a phase of his higher activities. Frequently it comes to be no more than the way he acts morally or spiritually. It is even suggested that it is a matter of no real consequence whether or not there are objective spiritual facts corresponding to his beliefs and desires. The same results are obtained for him so long as he acts morally and spiritually. "Religion is man's behaving at his best." True as this may be, it is not all the truth. The New Testament looks upon religion as a movement in which God anticipates man. He calls man to faith, service, and companionship.—Living Church.

Our Worship Program

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

LOVE YOUR ENEMIES—Matt. 4:43-48. "I say unto you, love your enemies." No one needs to be told that this is a severe test of Christian character, but it is a true one. Nothing was more outstanding in the conduct of Christ than his love for those who treated him ill. Even on his murderers he prayed the forgiveness of his Father. But it is a grace that is bestowed and not a quality that is developed. It comes as a characteristic of the heart that has been thoroughly renewed. It needs but the yielded will and God will plant the light of divine love in your eyes.

TUESDAY

LIVING NEAR TO CHRIST—Phil. 3:8-11. "I suffer the loss of all things, that I may know him." Here is a striking case of self-denial and sacrifice inspired by a great and overmastering love for Christ. He was willing to throw away all that he had prized most highly in order that he might "possess and fully know the One he had loved." It was no ordinary personage who could have gripped Paul with such power; he must have been and is possessed of all virtues and glory. And the nearer we live to him the more we appreciate his moral grandeur and the more we delight in his presence.

WEDNESDAY

BEARING ONE ANOTHER'S BURDENS—Gal. 6:1-4. "Bear ye one another's burdens and so fulfil the law of Christ." This is the duty of the growing Christian, and it is expected of those who have passed the baby-stage of their Christian life. Saving faith that enables one to take the first step is a great experience, but it is not enough to make one a noble, burden-bearing Christian, and he has not yet realized God's purpose for his life until he does move on to higher things. We are to put on Christlikeness by growing in service.

THURSDAY

A VOTE FOR CHRISTIANITY—Matt. 12:25-30. "He that is not with me is against me." Neutrality towards Christ is impossible, but even if it were, this is no time for it. It is a time that calls for whole-hearted support, and failure to give that is a vote against Christ. A vote for Christ is a stand against the evils that imperil our age, and that weaken the church.

FRIDAY

A CHRISTIAN SECRET—Mark 2:1-5. "And it was noised that he was in the house." The soul-winner meets all sorts of excuses, but one of the most difficult is the statement on the part of the one whose confession is being sought that he is already a Christian in secret. But a secret Christian is impossible. Christ cannot be hid; the changed life cannot be concealed and the new joy cannot be contained in secret.

SATURDAY

THE SURE FOUNDATION—2 Tim. 2:15-19. "Nevertheless the foundation of God standeth sure." In the realm of nature, of philosophy and of investment there are some things that are generally considered certain; we may be sure of them. But even more certain than any of these are the things of the spiritual realm, especially the fact that we may be sure of God. One of the most wonderful things Jesus ever said was, "Ye believe in God, believe also in me." Christ is proof that God is and that he can be approached by us.

SUNDAY

HELPING WEAK SOULS—Rom. 1:9-12. "Making request . . . to come unto you." Prayer is one of the most effective means of helping weak souls, though many do not realize it because they have not employed it. It is the prayer of intercession that God delights to honor, and he who sincerely offers it is in that attitude of mind and heart that enables God to use him to minister to those who are the subjects of his prayers. It may not be in the way he expects, but it will be in the best way.—G. S. B.

Scripture Lesson—Israel 1:1-20.

Printed Text—Isaiah 1:10-20.

LESSON LIGHTS

Introductory

Time.—Isaiah prophesied from the year in which King Uziah died, B. C., 755, into the reign of King Manasseh, who executed the prophet about B. C. 679.

Place.—Isaiah prophesied in Jerusalem.

Isaiah 1:1. This is the title of the book of Isaiah.

1:2-9. After a solemn call for attention Isaiah discusses the state of affairs in his nation. First he compares Jehovah to a loving father whose children have rebelled against him. Then the nation is compared to a wounded body, bruised all over, a mass of gaping and bloody sores. "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint." The land is desolate.

The Prophet Isaiah

His name means "Jehovah is salvation," and is therefore synonymous with Joshua and Jesus.

His father was Amoz ("strong"), not to be confounded with Amos, the prophet.

His wife is termed "the prophetess." "From this we must infer that she also, like her husband, was endowed with the gift of prophecy."—Sayce.

His sons were named Maher-shalal-hash-baz, "Hasten booty, speed spoil," in allusion to the national ruin foretold by Isaiah, and Shear-jashub. "A remnant shall return," in allusion to the prophet's great teaching that the godly portion of his people should be preserved.

His social station was high, as is shown by his intimacy with the kings, Jotham and Hezekiah. He was a man of influence, the foremost citizen of Judah during the reigns of Uziah, Jotham, Ahaz, Hezekiah, and Manasseh.

His death, according to tradition, was brought about by Manasseh because the prophet, then about ninety years old, refused to obey the king's idolatrous ordinances. The aged hero is said to have been placed between two planks and sawn asunder—a martyrdom to which there is an allusion in Hebrews 11:37.

We have already studied (Lesson IV) the summons of Isaiah to be a prophet, a chapter which would stand chronologically at the beginning of his book; but chapter 1 "owes its position to its character. It is a clear, complete statement of the points which were at issue between the Lord and his own all the time Isaiah was the Lord's prophet. It is the most representative of Isaiah's prophecies. It summarizes, perhaps better than any other single chapter of the Old Testament, the substance of prophetic doctrine, and gives a very vivid illustration of the prophetic spirit and method."—George Adam Smith.

False Worship Today

The condemnation of Isaiah's prophecy falls upon us of today whenever we engage in any form of worship insincerely. It is possible for us to observe the Sabbath strictly, to attend all the services of our church, to bow the head in prayer reverently, to sing hymns heartily, to take part in the prayer meeting, to attend Sunday school and even teach a class, to give to missions and to the support of the church with liberality, and conduct family worship and engage in private prayer and Bible reading, and to do all of this while our lives are at variance with God's will and our hearts in rebellion against his commands. All these observances are helpful and necessary to the religious life, but they are not the religious life. The essence of the religious life is to love God with all our hearts, and our neighbors as ourselves. Without this love the most scrupulous forms of devotion are false worship, and are actually displeasing to the all-seeing Father.

Worship that Pleases God

True worship is prepared for. We must get our work out of the way, for the remembrance of neglected duties will take our minds from our prayers and praise. We must prepare our minds by the settlement of grudges and the confession of sins and faults. We must get into the spirit of worship by reading the Bible and devotional books by devout Christians.

True worship is regular. Nothing worth while comes to us unless we make a business of getting it.

True worship is unselfish. We must seek God not merely for comfort and joy for ourselves but for strength that we may do our part in helping others and in promoting the kingdom of God.

True worship is both private and social. Each helps the other.

And above all, true worship is humble. We go to God knowing that we are nothing in ourselves, that we are poor and weak and sinful, but rejoicing because we know that he is our loving Father, able and eager to do for us all things that we need. Such worship cannot fail to please him and to bless ourselves.

Forgiveness of Sins

"A poor woman, the wife of a humble fisherman, went crying along the beach and met her pastor, and she threw up her arms to heaven and cried, 'My sins, my sins!' and the pastor said, 'Pile the sands of the seashore up in a heap,' and she piled them up; and he said, 'Make it higher,' and she made it higher; and he said, 'Higher still,' and she made it higher still; and he said, 'Wait,' and by and by the great tides of God came up and the waves washed the heap of sand away. And he said, 'So God's power can take away your sins.'"—From the Illustrated Quarterly.

IS IT JUST A JOURNALISTIC COINCIDENCE?

With the beginning of the second week in July three daily newspapers that we see regularly started publication of three different series of special articles. These newspapers are the New York World, the Chicago Herald-Examiner, and the Chicago Tribune. They have little in common, except for the fact that they are all wet. The New York World is Smith-wet. The Chicago Herald-Examiner, a Hearst paper, is Coolidge-wet. The Chicago Tribune is just plain wet. And what were the three different series of special articles that these papers determined to publish beginning with the second week in July? The World began an exposure of the "inside" of prohibition enforcement in the state of New Jersey, furnished by a former head of the enforcement unit in that district. The Herald-Examiner began an exposure of the methods and activities of the anti-saloon league. The Tribune began an exposure of the methods of the anti-saloon league. Now there, is, to be sure, no absolute parallel between the articles in the World and in the Chicago papers. The articles in the World are obviously articles which had been offered that paper by a former government officer of refuge, and which contained in-

THANKSGIVING PROCLAMATION

Under the guidance and watchful care of a divine and beneficent Providence, this country has been carried safely through another year. Almighty God has continued to bestow upon us the light of his countenance and we have prospered. Not only have we enjoyed material success, but we have advanced in wisdom and in spiritual understanding. The products of our fields and our factories and of our manifold activities have been maintained on a high level. We have gained in knowledge of the higher values of life. There has been advancement in our physical well-being. We have increased our desire for the things that minister to the mind and to the soul. We have raised the mental and moral standards of life.

We have had the blessings of peace and of honorable and friendly relations with our sister nations throughout the world. Disasters visiting certain of our States have touched the heart of a sympathetic nation, which has responded generously out of its abundance. In continuing to remember those in affliction we should rejoice in our ability to give them relief.

Now that these twelve months are drawing to a close, it is fitting that, as a nation and as individuals, in accordance with time-honored sacred custom, we should consider the manifold blessings granted to us. While in gratitude we rejoice, we should humbly pray that we may be worthy of a continuation of Divine favor.

Therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do hereby set apart and designate Thursday, the 24th of November, next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and recommend and urge that on that day our people lay aside their usual tasks, and at the family fireside and in their accustomed places of public worship give thanks to him who holds all in the hollow of his hand.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the City of Washington this twenty-sixth day of October, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-seven and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fifty-second.

Albanian School Flourishes Under American Junior Red Cross Aid

American boys and girls, through participation in certain Junior Red Cross activities, can well claim a very real share in the reconstruction of nations, and therein are adding substantially to their own educational attainments.

An outstanding project under this head is the Albanian Vocational school, founded and largely supported by the American Junior Red Cross by means of its National Children's Fund, and now in its sixth year of successful operation. In the past year, 180 students attended, under 16 teachers two of whom, including the Director, are Americans, most of the others being Albanians. This school is becoming increasingly self-supporting, and the Albanian Government also is slowly but steadily increasing its financial support of the institution.

One of the first essentials of the school has been to teach the young Albanian boys the dignity of work. The motto of their monthly school paper, printed by themselves, is "Let us work." An editorial in this paper recently concluded with an admonition significant of the spirit which this school is rapidly inculcating in such of the Albanian youth who are fortunate enough to come under its influence: "Let us work" it said, "to have a country worth living for and, if need be, worth dying for."

That the school is one medium of accomplishing this goal, is attested by the expressions of genuine feeling toward the American Juniors who have made it possible. One Albanian student wrote: "The Juniors of America, the benefactors of our whole country, prepared me to earn a living, help my home, and be useful to my precious country, and taught me self-discipline."

Such a tribute would be lasting satisfaction if this were the only enterprise resulting from American Junior Red Cross effort. That more than a million of its membership is to be found in the Philippines, Hawaii, Guam, Porto Rico, the Virgin Islands, and Alaska including Eskimo children, is a revelation of its universal appeal. International school correspondence, is now included in the programs of 48 National Junior Red Cross societies, representing every continent, and many islands. Our own organization of course, participates in this. Lest overemphasis be placed on its foreign effort, there should be recalled here the fact that the American Juniors the past year rendered a very substantial assistance in the relief of flood sufferers of our own country, as well as other disaster operations of the Red Cross here, besides conducting their own beneficial activities in the United States.

Their membership now exceeds the parent organization, though the Eleventh Annual Roll Call of the American Red Cross this year from November 11 to 24, will seek a membership of five million adults, thus placing it near the enrollment of the Juniors.

A FOOTBALL GAME

For Prayer Meeting Committees

On the blackboard (or on a large sheet of paper hung on the wall) draw lines to mark a football field. One of the Juniors or Seniors will do this. A string is drawn through a double slit in a small cardboard football. The string is then drawn taut across the blackboard, so that the football may be moved along the line.

Four periods of five minutes each may constitute the game. Of course there are two sides. Each side alternates in starting the periods, or kicking off the ball. Make a list of points to be given: 5 points for talks; 3 for repeating a Bible reference; 3 for a sentence prayer; 1 for reading a clipping, and so on. The sides may be allowed to take part in any order, or each side may be allowed four participations before the other side begins, and so on. As each side takes part the ball is moved according to the score made by the side. Then the other side begins, and the ball moves back toward the other goal according to the number of points this side makes. This game is sure to be popular with the boys of the society.

FUTURE MEMBERS

For Lookout Committees

This plan may be tried in connection with your next social, and the social committee will be consulted and help to work out the plan. Divide the society into three or four groups. The larger the society, the more groups you may have, but not more than four. Appoint a captain over each group. Each group is to try to get as many prospective members, or boys and girls who may become members of the society, to come to the social. A prize should be given to the group that brings the largest number of possible new members. The danger of this is that groups may just bring anybody along. To prevent this the superintendent or a committee of two from the Young People's society will decide how many each group should be credited with. Children under a certain age should be excluded. Children who live too far away ever to attend the meetings should be excluded. Count only those who might possibly become members.

Sending a Torch to Africa.

Isaiah 61:1-4

The following story is taken from "An African Trail" by Jean Macenzie:

I will tell you of Ndongo's Mbe's father and his exile. Ndongo's father, says

Ndongo, was named Mabale. When Ndongo was little, no bigger than your wrist, Mabale was caught by a strange sickness, so that he was near death. In those days there was a wise man, a "witch doctor" in our neighborhood—himself, he is dead now, but in those days he still breathed,—and the brothers of Mabale sent for him to come and heal Mabale. This thing he certainly did, he healed him. And he healed him by a taboo, a very strong taboo.

Mabale recovered from his sickness, but he was "tied" by the medicine man to this thing: that he must never see a grandchild of his. That he must certainly never do. And so it was that, when Ndongo Mbe began to be a young man, the heart of Mabale was hung up; he feared very much lest he should see a grand child—who knew? And the thing would be death. So he took leave of the people of his own house, and of the village where he was head man,—yes, and even of his tribe,—and alone he went away by the paths that go toward the rising of the sun. Alone he went away to the unfriendly tribes that build their towns far back that way and in one of those strange towns he built a house for himself.

Sometimes the men of our neighborhood, going that way to hunt an ivory, they have seen Mabale. He has asked the news of his town and of his family; he has asked news of his grandchildren. All night he and his tribesmen have talked, and in the morning they have parted. But this thing always happened—that Mabale was quick after such a visit to go away from that town. He said in his heart, "Lest my townspeople, knowing this path, show the way to a grandchild of mine." Until at last he died in a town far away on the paths to the rising of the sun. And when a passer by from that strange country told Ndongo of that death in exile, there was a peculiar sorrow in the hearts of that family. The wife of Mabale turned to the wall and wept. The children and the grandchildren greatly desired to look upon the grave of their father, but they might not for the many days' journey.

So much for a life wrecked by fear.

Just think, Junior boys and girls; if Mabale had known about Jesus and had believed in God his life would have been a happy instead of an unhappy one. If he had known about Jesus he would have known that it was all right to stay with his own people. Then Ndongo and Mabale and all of Mabale's family would have been, Oh, so much happier.

There are many people like Mabale and Ndongo who need to know about Jesus so that they may live happily. I hope that all of us will try to do our share toward sending the Gospel to those in need.

Lost Creek, Kentucky

On October the third we began a revival meeting, which lasted two weeks. Rev. James Cook of Martinsburg, Pennsylvania, being the evangelist. We had fine weather, good crowds, with good order throughout. The chapel room was often crowded, and at times overflowed into the science room adjoining.

The visible results of the meetings were fifty-eight confessions, with twenty-eight baptisms, and thirty reconsecrations. The additions to the church represent good material which will make much for efficiency and stability of the church at Lost Creek. There were some heads of families, and but few small children. I believe that all the boarding pupils made the good confession, some for the first time, others reconsecrating their lives anew to the Lord.

Among those received into the fellowship of the church at this meeting, was one of our teachers, Miss Clara Hall, whose home is at Crocketsville, Ohio. This sister had long lived the consecrated Christian life, but because of the modernism in the church to which she formerly belonged, she chose to fellowship with us. We believe that this fellowship will mean much for the church at Lost Creek.

The last Sunday of the meetings, communion services were observed in the dining room of the girls' dormitory. Tables were prepared for about sixty-five. But there were over seventy out for the service. This is much the largest number ever to take communion service since the work was established here. And a most blessed service it was. Our Lord was there in the person of the Holy Spirit, and his presence was most blessed.

Our hearts were all made glad to have with us Brother Kinzie from Krypton, who spent the day with us. His presence and fellowship meant much, and was also a splendid object lesson for the workers in these two points for more intimate fellowship.

Mrs. Eversole and daughter, Lucy Mae, also from Krypton, spent the day with us, and also communed with us. Also Miss Edna Bell of Vicco, Kentucky, was with us, for the services of the day. These latter two were graduates of our school last year, and are now teaching. All were glad to see them again on the campus.

One of the chief contributing factors for this most successful revival meeting, was the efficient, consecrated work of Brother Cook. This I believe was the third meeting in which he and the writer worked together. And this one seemed the most blessed of all. The fellowship was indeed most helpful and beautiful. Brother Cook preaches a pure whole Gospel, and even in this present time, when there is so much else to attract, God honors his word. It shall not return unto him void, and it did not here. It was a real joy and a happy fellowship to have Brother Cook with us for the two weeks.

We believe that this article would not be what our Lord would have it be, without mentioning another circumstance of the meeting, and this was a work of healing by our Lord. One of our boarding pupils, a young woman, had been having trouble to the extent that she could use one of her limbs scarcely at all. She had to be helped out to the services. But the first Sunday night of the meeting she was observed walking out as usual, and as well as usual. That night she reconsecrated her life publicly. She sought and was given an opportunity to say something. She told us how she had prayed and how the Lord had answered her prayers, enabling her to walk normally. Since then she has not shown any trouble with the foot and limb at all. We know of the work of mental suggestions, etc., but we have very carefully considered this healing, and we cannot see any other hand in it but the Hand of our God, and fully believe that it was his supernatural power which enabled that young woman to walk. We praise him for it, and give him all the credit. James, 5th chapter.

Altogether it was a most successful revival effort. Pray for us that we may not get our eyes off him who made it possible.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

A Word for the Parson

Picking on the Parson is one of the favorite indoor sports in many American homes, and not infrequently the preacher is a convenient object of criticism for a Monday morning editorial. He is condemned if he does, and condemned if he doesn't.

Says the Baltimore Evening Sun:

"In this day of spiritual searching, the parson has come in for no little criticism. Perhaps he deserves it; but, on the other hand, it is about time for him to receive a word of sympathy. His task is difficult, for no matter which way he turns, he meets with objections from some parts of his flock.

"If the parson takes a narrow view of religion, he is accused of bigotry; if he takes a broad view, he is suspected of heresy. If he asks for money, he is charged with worldliness; if he doesn't ask for it, his church falls to pieces. If he pays calls on his congregation, he risks the reputation of being a bore; if he doesn't pay calls, he is charged with indifference. If he indorses movies, oyster suppers and bowling alleys in the basement, the conservatives protest; if he sticks to services only, the boosters howl. If he introduces innovations in his sermons, he is called sensational; if he confines himself to the beatitudes, he is condemned for his platitudes. If he specializes on the choir, the Sunday school blows up. The ideal parson of today must combine the qualities of a financier, an administrator, an orator, a scholar, a salesman, a musician, a teacher, a diplomat. If his church be small, he will find it useful also to know the rudimentary principles employed by painters, plumbers, electricians,

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Oakville, Indiana

This church is located about ten miles from Muncie and is located in town.

They have a very fine and well equipped church building and a good parsonage. Brother Henderson and his family had just moved there from Fremont a week before I came. He has been called to the pastorate of the church and our past associations made it very agreeable to have him with me in the campaign.

Every courtesy and kindness was given by the membership in my canvas. The church expressed an interest in the College and realize the importance of the school in its relationship to the future work of the church.

Brother Henderson made the entire visitation with me and made my stay very pleasant and believe they have made no mistake in calling him to the pastorate.

I consider the church made a very creditable showing in giving to the Endowment $1,218.36.

W. S. BELL.

FROM WARSAW, INDIANA TO SUNNYSIDE, WASHINGTON

We closed our work with the Warsaw Brethren church with the first of September, after having spent three happy profitable years with them.

Warsaw has ever been considered a very difficult field for the Brethren, and too truly a "graveyard" for Brethren preachers. Our testimony is different, for we are glad to say that we have never worked with a more loyal crowd of Brethren anywhere than here. They responded to our leadership, and we found them for the most part loyal to the things for which we stand as a church. They have some very able leaders who are functioning in the various auxiliaries of the church, and withal the work went forward in a very satisfactory way. I think I should say for them that it was not their wishes that we should close our work with them, for they were unanimous for our continuing in it, and we are grateful for the splendid unity that continued throughout our pastorate. The last few weeks were continuous rounds of farewells for the members of the family and each was remembered with valuable presents. We are thankful for all these things, and shall ever cherish the memory of our many friends there. Those whom we led to Christ and those who stood by us so nobly in the work. We bespeak for Brother Riddle a very profitable pastorate. May the same harmony and good-will continue is our prayer for them. After a few days at our General Conference we bid our friends farewell, leaving behind our son and daughter, who are in college, and our many friends in the east, we turned our faces toward the far west, and after twelve days of travel arrived safely among the Brethren at

Sunnyside, Washington

We had a very delightful trip indeed. We traveled for the most part over the Lincoln Highway via Salt Lake City. The roads were good and the weather ideal. We spent one Lord's Day with the Brethren and friends at Dallas Center, preaching twice for them. We enjoyed the day immensely and strange to say they said they enjoyed it too. It was a day of real fellowship. Turning westward again we arrived in Sunnyside safely after having traveled 2800 miles, with but one lone tire puncture to report as the sum total of our troubles. We were made to feel at home at once in the splendid home of our good brother and sister C. Rowland. The parsonage has been re-decorated and furnished ready for us.

Our first experience was to launch into a union effort of four weeks of evangelism, under the direction of the Yakima Valley Laymen's Evangelistic Association, with the Art Pope and Long evangelistic party as evangelists. I consider Pope one of the greatest evangelists of our day. He preached the Gospel with great power. But Sunnyside is a difficult place for evangelism, and with all the effort, but few more than a score of souls made a public confession of Christ. While there are thirteen churches here the Brethren and the Baptists will receive all the converts. There were possibly forty re-consecrations.

Our own plans have been interfered with somewhat and we are planning now to launch an effort of our own in January with the pastor as the evangelist. We are gaining some ground already and fifteen have been added to the membership thus far. We hope to report continuous progress.

The month of November has been designated as "Loyalty Month" during which time we shall attempt to rally all our forces in every department of the church. A pastoral letter going into every home calls for a renewal of loyalty to Christ and the church, by being present at all the services of God's house. That every one will forget and lay aside everything that may have hindered in the past, and pledge themselves before God that they will attend every service, Bible school, prayer meeting, and in every way during this month give the church the first place in their life. We hope to report some results from this effort.

I might say in conclusion that we have been received very cordially by the Brethren and by the community generally, and we have reasons to believe our lot has been cast among a goodly people. They know how to care for their pastor. I will be available for a meeting or two after the new year. Any church desiring my service can write me.

Faithfully, Until he comes.

C. C. GRISSO.

WEST ALEXANDRIA, OHIO

It has been some time since a report of the Gratis Brethren church has been given to the readers of the Evangelist. This does not mean that we have been idle. But we feel that we have been very busy and can begin to see the fruits of our work. The attendance of our Sunday school has been good all summer. October 2 was Rally Day and promotions were made in different departments of the Sunday school. October 9 we observed our fall communion. At this service our attendance was larger than it has been for several years. October 16 was our Fall Festival. This was a day which will long be remembered by the members of the church. We held our regular morning services after which we enjoyed a basket dinner, served in the basement of the church. In the afternoon we had the pleasure of seeing our pastor, Rev. Starn, burn the last notes of our indebtedness on our church.

The church was very nicely decorated with flowers, autumn leaves, fruits and vegetables. We feel that we are now ready to do more work for our Master. Rev. and Mrs. Starn have both proved themselves real leaders in the church and the members are looking forward to the best year in our church.

MRS. A. B. FLORY,
Corresponding Secretary.

FREMONT, OHIO—OAKVILLE, INDIANA

On the last Sunday in September, we brought our four years' pastorate to a close in the beautiful and historic city of Fremont, Ohio. These were four busy and pleasant years. During our stay we formed many associations and close friendships both within and without the church. These we shall cherish as one of the bright spots in our memories. We are happy to say that the best of goodwill and Christian fellowship existed throughout our entire sojourn among them. On the evening before we left, the members and friends gave the pastor and family a farewell reception. We were remembered with several gifts. A fine set of table silverware, a purse with money and several individual gifts to members of the family.

As we review the past four years at Fremont, we feel that we can say that some noteworthy progress has been made in the church. Perhaps the most outstanding achievement was the rebuilding of the church. It was an absolute necessity, and it was not accomplished without a real sacrifice on the part of the congregation. The membership of the Brethren church at Fremont is neither large nor wealthy. Their ranks are almost wholly made up from wage earners, yet I never met with a body of folks that were more willing and anxious to put over an improvement. Like Nehemiah's workmen, "They had a mind to work." Night after night we strung up extension cords with lights and labored long into the evening hours after the men had labored in the factories during the day. They have been rewarded with a neat little church home with conveniences and equipments that will serve their needs in the city for some time to come. During the stress of the building the Home and Ohio State Mission boards came to the aid and have nobly stood by the work, without which the improvements would have been impossible. I feel that as soon as the burden is reduced, that Fremont will be self-supporting again. One of the very fine commendable things about the little group at Fremont is the way in which they meet their financial obligations. Not once during the four years did the preacher have to wait for his weekly salary. A good sister whose heart is in the work said that many times it took faith and prayer to meet the bills, but God always opened the way.

Since our last report in the Brethren Evangelist, six were added to the membership roll of the church. Two by letter and four by baptism. We feel that there is a growing prospect for a good ingathering in the near future. For the past two years, the church has slowly been gaining in personnel and leadership. Some very fine people are getting interested in the work. There is a field for work. We shall hear some good reports from Fremont later.

We are glad that the Fremont Brethren have secured our successor. They are indeed fortunate in securing so able a man as Brother W. S. Crick of New Enterprise, Pennsylvania. I am sure with his consecrated leadership and the fine cooperating spirit of the church that Fremont will often be heard from. Brother Crick will take charge about the first of the year. During the intervening time the church will be supplied by some of our able men from Ashland.

The second of October, we preached our first sermon as pastor at Oakville, Indiana. Oakville is a fine little community town in east central Indiana, situated in a rich farming district. Our church is the only church in the town. It is "a Brethren Community" church. They have a beautiful church and a fine attendance. The church is well organized, that bespeaks well for the former pastors who have been on the job.

Our second week at Oakville we were permitted to attend the Indiana conference held at Loree. We found a large attendance and a well arranged program. We were glad to renew old acquaintances again after four years' absence from the Hoosier State. Coming home from conference, Dr. Bell began his campaign for Ashland College. Oakville, like many farm communities, has been feeling the depression, and although they measured up to the former campaign, many would like to have risen beyond if circumstances had been otherwise.

On last Friday evening the congregation walked in on the preacher without any previous notification and gave them a complete surprise. They left his pantry and cellar greatly replenished with good things. Thanks, Brethren. After the preacher had recovered they invited us over to the church parlors where a get-acquainted social evening was enjoyed.

The church is planning to enter the county evangelistic campaign that is to begin October 30th. There will be services in every cooperating church in Delaware County during the first weeks in November. We invite the readers of the Evangelist to remember us in their prayers.

S. C. HENDERSON.

CARLETON, NEBRASKA

The special meeting at Carleton closed on Monday evening, October 31, with a most helpful Love Feast and Communion. This service was largely attended and a spirit of real devotion prevailed. Those who were present received a real blessing. Some were at the tables for the first time. These were the ones who made a decision for the Lord during the meeting.

It was a real pleasure to work with Rev. Koontz and his people. Brother Koontz is doing good work in this field. He is held in the highest esteem by not only the membership of his church but by the people of the community, as well. I was not a total stranger to the Carleton church. I had learned to know the pastor during the days at Ashland College. I found here, too, Rev. and Mrs. J. D. Kemper whom I had met in former days. Brother Kemper is the superintendent of the Sunday school and is doing a fine piece of work in this capacity.

Local conditions made it almost impossible to get the unsaved to the services. All those who attended regularly were won. One of the number is planning to do mission work. Just before leaving I had the pleasure of taking the confession of the butcher in his place of business. While the number of accessions was not large, I feel the meeting was worth while. At this place I reached the high mark in attendance at the afternoon Bible study. The number averaged above the twenty mark, while one day there were thirty-one present. The deep interest in this part of the work can not fail of its results. Here again I found a real hunger for the Word and I am more and more convinced that the real need of our people is to know the Bible. The offering here was among the largest received thus far.

While at Carleton I had my home with the H. T. Bates family. Everything possible was done for my comfort. The many homes I was privileged to enter did their utmost to entertain me in the finest way. To all these, I give my most, sincere thanks. I shall remember, with pleasure, my trip to Carleton and shall feel blessed because of our fellowship, and also, because of the new friends made.

After the Monday evening service I was taken to Chester, a place about thirty miles distant, to take a train at 2:38 Tuesday morning that I might reach Fort Scott in time for the afternoon Bible study at 2:30. I found the Fort Scott people ready for the study and a very deep interest in the Word is manifest. The work here is starting off well and all have hopes that the Lord may bless by giving a definite victory. Pray for the work here.

MATHIAS, WEST VIRGINIA

On September the fourth, we began a meeting at Kimsey's Run, about 10 miles from Mathias. At this place we found a very loyal group of brethren and sisters. It was a real pleasure to work with a people who were true and loyal to their church. Circumstances were not ideal. There were some typhoid and several cases of severe colds. There were other meetings being conducted in the neighborhood; this divided the crowd. The brethren had no knowledge of these other evangelistic efforts before we began, in fact, they were not announced until all arrangements for our meetings were made. However, in the name of the Captain of our salvation, and with the Sword of the Spirit, we opened fire on sin. For two weeks the battle was on and sin was forced to release its slimy grip on twelve precious souls. Confessing their sins and accepting Christ, they were received into the church. Others promised to come in the near future. The church seemed to be much edified and is already planning greater things for the coming years. Our meeting closed with holy communion, a goodly number being at the tables. Brother Arthur Snider is the faithful pastor at this place. The people of this neighborhood seem to have unbounded confidence in their pastor.

With such a fine spirit of cooperation between pastor and people we can only look for great things being done. We were royally entertained in the home of Brother Snider. I must not fail to mention here the splendid music furnished by Brother Snider and his family.

May God bless these dear people abundantly. Many thanks to Brother Snider and his fine family for their kindness and loving spirit of cooperation.

MT. OLIVE, VIRGINIA

On Monday night, September 19, with Brother Rohart of Winchester, Virginia as evangelist, we began our meeting at Mt. Olive and continued until October 5th. These meetings were well attended from the very start. Brother Rohart gave no uncertain sound. With his fine solos and splendid messages he arrested the interest and attention of the neighborhood. As an immediate result seven came forward and accepted Christ as their Savior.

Our Sunday school, under the leadership of Brother L. I. Good, is progressing nicely. Because our membership is somewhat scattered we have two Aid societies, each society is doing a fine piece of work. The Western Aid furnished our church with a new piano, also had electric lights installed in the parsonage which lights were much appreciated. The Ladies' Aid furnished the church with a new set of pews at a cost of about $1200.00. Other work such as painting and papering the parsonage and a new heating system for the church building is being done by the church. We have been called by the Mount Olive church to serve them as half-time pastor for 1928. We have served them for seven years.

Our next evangelistic effort will be at Copps' Chapel near Springville, Virginia, to begin October 30th.

We earnestly crave the prayers of God's people.
G. W. CHAMBERS,
Penn Laird, Virginia.

ON THE WING NORTHWEST

Tomahawk, Wisconsin

Dear Readers of our Beloved Church Paper:

I thought a few lines from this extreme northern part of Wisconsin might be of interest to some of you. This is only about 200 miles off Canadian line and near Lake Superior. We are being entertained in the home of a dear sister and her husband, the sister being formerly Maggie Harold whom we had the privilege of baptizing at Markling, West Virginia with twenty-five others during our pastorate of the Hammer church. This young sister is now Mrs. William Knigel, who with her splendid husband lives in a suburban village near Tomahawk, a town of about 5,000. There is no church here, but there is a nicely equipped school building that can be used for Sunday school and other meetings. I am glad to say that Sister Knigel, who came here with her husband some five years ago, is now superintendent of a union Sunday school. For more than a year she had longed and prayed for a meeting, and we are now conducting a meeting. The first week we had good weather. The second week began with rain and has turned into snow. One father and four young men have made the good confession to date.

This seems to be a cosmopolitan community. There are Norwegians, Swedes, Scotch, English, Irish and Germans, and as near as I can tell about one-fourth are Catholics, one-fourth Protestants and the other half are not religiously inclined. Dear church people, one does not need to go to foreign countries to do mission work. I see the need of it on every hand. I was in a home where there were a father, mother and ten children, and the father and mother had never been to a Sunday school. Some of the children came to our meeting the night of the Dempsey-Tunney fight, but the meeting house was almost empty. Most of our crowd had gone to radio parties of the $2,800,000 fight. It seems we are almost equal to the days of Noah.

Sister Knigel's husband is treasurer of the school board, and if he had not been, the door might have been locked on us, as some of the board are opposed to religious revivals, trying to confine the services to Sunday school and preaching on Sundays. But thank God we still find faith.

I visited a family a few days ago in a lovely home, situated on a fine lake, where they have a bathing beach and boats to rent. The lady said we have been to hear you and you are preaching Martin Luther's sermons. We are German Lutherans and you can come and abide with us and rest and be at home. She says I preached the first Gospel sermon they have heard in this village. They are fine people and she speaks both German and English. We close our meetings at the end of this the second week and then I go to Chicago to visit some friends and then on to California. If any one wants to do a little something to help along the Gospel message in this place, write a word of encouragement to Sister William Knigel, at Tomahawk, Wisconsin.

formation regarded by the paper as having news value. The main point in the articles is the point frequently made by The Christian Century, namely, that prohibition enforcement has been hamstrung from Washington. But the Chicago articles are so exactly parallel that they put a terrific strain on our powers of belief in coincidence. Such articles have to be arranged for considerably in advance of publication. Why do they happen to appear simultaneously? Is it possible that the wets, too, have a general high command, which is beginning now to wheel its journalistic battalions into the firing line at calculated periods?—The Christian Century.

A SOCIOLOGIST AT SEA

The Canal

Many a time I have read of the Panama Canal. The story of the digging of that mighty ditch, the struggles of the French to cut it through, their failure, the taking of the strip from Columbia,—all is familiar history. But now my eyes have seen the result.

Early in the morning our ship approached its eastern entrance. When I awoke I hastily looked out to see if we were near land. I saw none and went back to bed. Then suddenly the steady beat of the engines stopped. I looked again, and there was land. We had been closer than I had dreamed. Hastening through my toilet I went out on deck. There ahead lay the roofs of Colon and Cristobal. There were the great breakwaters which made a harbor for ships that must wait their turns to start through. Yonder are the great docks and machine sheds which can repair any breakdown and supply any ship's stores. There are the coal bunkers and the oil tanks. Out beyond all these is the green of the tropical lands and mountains.

We waited until the quarantine launch brought out the doctor to see that we had a clean bill of health, and until another brought out the pilot and the gang of negroes who must see the ship through the great locks, for the crew of no ship which passes through the Canal is allowed to take her through. Another launch takes off the few passengers who land here and bring on the few who go with us from here. There is Dr. Shapiro, the head of the health service for Panama and Costa Rica, loaned by the Rockefeller Foundation to these two tiny states, who has come out to welcome home his wife and son. She was not expecting him. What a joyous greeting!

Now we begin to move towards the entrance. The captain has allowed us to go up on the bridge during the ten hour trip through the Canal, so that we can better see the Canal. We delay our breakfast, and when we go down to get it, eat but little in order not to miss a thing. There we stand or sit for ten long hours with but a little time for lunch.

Now we are entering the great locks at Gatun. Here are great concrete retaining walls which form the locks. As we come up to them, negroes throw ropes aboard to which strong steel cables are fastened. These cables run out from a spool on four electric locomotives which run on tracks upon the concrete locks, four of them on each side of the ship. So, the ship is held firmly by four cables on each side. Then the electric locomotives begin to move slowly towards the open gate. Once inside the gates, which are closed by electricity, the ship is lifted by water let into the lock through gigantic flumes from the upper lock until the water in the upper lock is level with that in the lower. Then the gate ahead is opened and we are pulled into the next lock and the operation is repeated. Thus we are raised through a series of three locks up to the level of the famous Gatun Lake. This is a body of water covering 164 square miles, formed by the damming up of the Chagres River. Up from the surface of this lake stick the dead trunks of trees which once grew on the slopes of the river. Little islands dot the surface, which once were hills in the valley. One of these islands is called Borro Island and is a wild life preserve and research laboratory which was described a year or so ago in the NATIONAL GEOGRAPHIC MAGAZINE. We see off to the right the buildings of the Laboratory. No one is allowed on this island without a permit.

We sail slowly along this lake in carefully marked channels for several hours up to the next series of locks by which we are let down to sea level. Here there are two sets of locks, the first called the San Miguel locks and the next, about a mile away, called the Miraflores locks. Here again the electric locomotives take us in charge and the reverse operation is performed which lets us down to the level of the Pacific. Then on for an hour or more to Balboa, the western terminus of the Canal.

The scenery along the canal is very interesting. Everywhere along the banks we see banana trees growing, some of them with bunches of green bananas hanging from them. Among them grow cocoanut palms, and occasionally we see a little farm with date palms. The growth is very luxuriant, owing to the great amount of rainfall and the great heat, which winter and summer does not fall below seventy and does not rise above ninety in the shade. I am told that in summer in the sun the thermometer rises to as high as 120. I can well believe it, for in spite of the fact that the sky was clouded my poorly thatched head as well as my face got an awful dose of sunburn. All kinds of strange plants run riot over the sides of the canal, and a fine growth of trees covers the mountains to their summits. Also strange birds flit past our vision. Here we see birds which look like crows, but have white on their wings. Here are pelicans flying or perched on the poles of the power lines along the Canal, or swimming on the waters of Lake Gatun.

Scattered along on the islands and banks are thatched huts in which dwell negroes who make their living by working on the Canal, or by cultivating small patches of banana trees, and by fishing. We see them roving about in their boats. They are a thriftless lot, I am told.

At a number of places along the Canal dredging is being done. At the famous Culebra Cut, from which millions of cubic yards of rock and dirt were taken, work continually goes on to keep the channel clear, as there are frequent slides. This particular cut is through a large hill of solid rock. There are groups of buildings also along the canal for the employees, all of them one story, built with broad eaves.

The real marvel of the Canal Zone is not in the mighty engineering feat which removed so much dirt to make a ditch through which the largest ships can go—a minimum of 45 feet of water—but in the sanitary engineering which drained swamps, the breeding places of the mosquitoes which carried the germs of yellow fever and malaria. It was really the deadliness of these scourges which defeated the French in their efforts to build this canal. The Americans under General Gorgas cleaned it up, not only draining the swamps, but also spraying the undrainable spots with oil so that the larva of the mosquito could not live. Today, I am told, the Canal Zone is one of the healthiest places on the Continent. And yet some people believe that there is no such thing as germ diseases!

The marvel wrought by the Canal Zone Administration is best appreciated when one sees Balboa and Panama City. A street only divides them. On the side of the Zone there are well kept houses, fine lawns, cleanliness everywhere. In Panama great streets full of ramshackle wooden tenements house the people. The streets are very narrow like those of all old Spanish cities. They are not clean. Yet, it must be said that the example of the Canal Zone has not been entirely lost on the City of Panama. Here and there new streets are being laid out broad and clean, new buildings are rising, and I am told that some progress has been made in draining the low places and in controlling mosquitoes. Out in a plaza near the new part of the city stands the monument to Balboa who discovered the Pacific Ocean. There he stands in his bronze looking out over the Pacific near where tradition says that in the flesh three and more centuries ago he looked for the first time on this great ocean.

We drove also out to the ruins of Old Panama, that ancient city built by the Spaniards. Today it is in ruins over which the jungle has grown. There are the ruins of a once great cathedral, and which even in its decay makes an impressive sight. All around, poking their gaunt forms up above the tangle of rapidly growing trees and vines are the ruins of other great buildings.

The first destruction of the city was wrought by the buccaneer, Morgan. It never recovered. Across the bay arose in later time the new Panama City.

There is no doubt that the United States' control of the Canal has meant prosperity to these cities. I cannot defend the ethics of Theodore Roosevelt in the acquisition of this control, but there is no question that the building of the Canal and its present efficient control, and the control of the United States over the sanitation of the State of Panama has been a good thing for the world.

The United States has eight forts in the Canal Zone. It has about 8,000 soldiers there, much too small a force, I am told, for its proper defence. Towering above both Balboa and Panama is Quarry Heights, the great hill on the sides of which are built the administrative offices of the Canal Zone government. There the Governor of the Canal lives, also the commander of the army of the Zone. Out on two islands towards the sea are the main fortifications. It is certainly important that in case of war—which let us hope may never come—the Canal should be kept open for it is vastly important for the transfer of our ships from the one ocean to the other, and is the most important sea trade route under our control.

One fails to appreciate how far south is the Canal until he goes there, and how far east it is. The Canal is straight south of Buffalo, and east as well as south of Havana, Cuba. It is farther south than the capital of Venezuela in South America. When there we are within about 300 miles of the Equator.

Orders come from San Francisco that the boat must leave Balboa at 6 P. M., instead of the 12, thus robbing us of 6 hours on shore. We got in about 2:45. On the dock are Colonel and Mrs. McManus and their daughter Mary Alice, who welcome us and take us to their home and then for a fine drive about the region, some of which I have referred to above. Colonel McManus is an old Hudson, Iowa boy, and a cousin of Mrs. Gillin. He has given all his life since finishing at West Point to the Army. It certainly was good to see friends at this to us strange place.

On October 7th we sailed for Los Angeles, our next port.

For ten days we sail day and night up along the coast to reach the City of the Angels. Mountains were to be seen for the first few days, but we soon got out beyond sight of land in order to avoid an adverse current which flows along that coast. Great turtles are to be seen from the deck frequently. Last night on the back of one a bird was perched riding along. The dolphins every day sport for us off the side of the boat, gracefully jumping out and falling back into the water. They are similar in shape, but smaller in size and lighter in color, to the porpoises we saw coming down the Atlantic side of the Continent. We have not yet seen a shark or a whale. On Sunday we saw thousands of small flying fish, which would dart out of the water as the ship passed near them, and would skitter away for forty, a hundred feet, and sometimes farther, and land with a flop into the sea.

The captain a few days ago was telling me a story which interested me. He said that a few years ago when he was sailing a ship from San Francisco to Alaska—it was a wooden ship—he discovered that the boat was leaking quite badly. On landing at San Francisco, they discovered that a sword fish had evidently mistaken the ship for a whale, and had charged it full tilt. His sword had pierced the four-inch plank of the side of the ship, had cracked the plank so that it leaked badly. They had to put the ship in dry dock and saw out that plank. He said that the sword still sticking through it hung for many years in the Chamber of Commerce in San Francisco. Well, it was a good tale. He says that the sword fish develops a speed of 60 miles an hour when charging a whale. I give it for what it may be worth. I cannot vouch for the captain. He may have been conscious that he was talking to a landlubber.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE—INDIANA PASTORS

At the Ohio Conference I received a number of calls for Bible lectures, which of course has taken some time.

I was not well for 10 days before coming to Ashland, and when I arrived here was compelled to go to bed. The physician says that I must rest a bit, and cannot make any plans or set any dates for a few days yet.

Thank you for your prompt replies, and as soon as possible I will write to you for definite dates, but it will probably not be until the New Year.

If you are scheduled for evangelistic meetings please let me know.

Address, until further notice, c/o College, Ashland, Ohio. Yours in his Service, MRS GRACE P. SRACK.

IMPORTANT NOTES

On the way home from National Conference, I somewhere lost my memorandum book, in which was record of some money that was given me at Conference for Foreign Missions. Up to date, the book has not been returned to me, and I fail to remember all the parties who gave me money. I have a record of those who gave me checks, but if any one who reads this gave me cash, will you please write me, naming the amount and the purpose for which it was given?

Apostolic Church Evangelism

This is a broad subject, but our purpose is not as presumptuous as the subject would indicate. It would require a book to fully characterize the evangelism of the apostolic church. We intend only to say two or three things about the popular evangelistic emphasis of today—the effort to enlist the laymen in the task of winning men to the Lord Jesus. We have termed it "apostolic evangelism", because the outstanding characteristic of the evangelism of the apostolic church was that it seemed to be the task of every member, ministers and laymen alike. We refrained from labelling it "Lay Evangelism", a term that is in common use, for the reason that the emphasis should be broader; it should include every member of the church—ministers as well as laymen. We might have used the designation, "Every Member Evangelism", and we would have said the same thing, so far as responsibility is concerned, but that term sounds too modern, and gives the impression that we have hit upon something new, whereas the method is as old as the Gospel dispensation.

The first point we wish to emphasize has already been suggested,—evangelism is the task of every member of the church. Jesus never confined the responsibility of soul winning to any particular class or group of office holders. He never restricted the urge and obligation of evangelism to a few ordained men. No ordination was necessary to tell the "good news" except the laying on of the mighty, empowering hand of the Lord of hosts. Those who have been set apart by the church to give their entire time to this particular task, bear a unique responsibility, and on them the burden might well be laid still heavier. But their responsibility for leadership does not excuse others from the obligation of engaging earnestly and actively in it on every opportunity. Evangelism is the duty of every member of the body of Christ. Every soul who has experienced the saving grace of God is bound by the very fact of his release from sin to bear witness to the power of the blood of Christ. Every one who has taken upon himself the name of Christ and is numbered among his disciples, must have heard the enjoining words of his Lord, "Ye shall be witnesses unto me." No exceptions are provided for. No exemptions are issued. The obligation is upon every one—layman or minister, whether new in the faith or years in the service,—and if the willingness is not there, the Spirit of God has been hindered in the completion of his work of grace in the heart. The desire to tell the "good news" should be as natural and irrepressible as our salvation is thorough and sincere. Evangelism is essential to the very character of Christianity, and when one has religion of the genuine sort, it cannot be confined or restrained. Others are going to know about it; the Story is going to be told; laymen are going to be evangelists, and souls are going to be won to the Lord Jesus Christ.

Another characteristic of the evangelism of the apostolic church was that it was done by volunteers. While the obligation was upon all, there were no draftees. Nations engaging in war must resort to the draft, but he who is leading the spiritual hosts against the forces of darkness does not. His soldiers are in the great conflict because they love their Leader and because they love the cause. No man is forced to witness for the Lord Jesus, but if he has experienced the love of God in his heart he will not turn down any opportunity to do so. And that characteristic—that willingness and readiness on the part of those early disciples of Christ to tell the Gospel story—was the outstanding secret to the rapid spread of Christianity in the first century. Those who were scattered abroad from the first church in Jerusalem because of persecution went everywhere preaching the Word. They went forth by compulsion, but they preached voluntarily, in fact, in spite of the persecution. It is a significant fact that every congregation established up to and including the founding of the church at Antioch in Syria was the result of volunteer preaching. That wonderful church at Antioch was the work of volunteer evangelists, "preachers without portfolio from apostles, elders or congregation", to use a phrase of the Christian Standard. For we are told that those who were scattered abroad from Jerusalem preached the Gospel "to none save Jews only", though they traveled as far as Phoenicia and Cyprus and Antioch. "But there were some of them, men of Cyprus and Cyrene, who, when they were come to Antioch, spake unto the Greeks also, preaching the Lord Jesus. And the hand of the Lord was with them; and a great number that believed turned unto the Lord." These unnamed; volunteer Gospel preachers were authorized and uncommissioned by any church, saved by him who is the great Head of the church, but they knew the Word and knew how to preach it. They were on fire with evangelism, and behold, how great a work they wrought!

In method they doubtless combined both personal and group evangelism, and it is likely that personal evangelism predominated at the outset. It did in Jesus' work. During the first year and more of our Lord's ministry, he used the individual approach almost entirely, though later he preached to great crowds. Peter had a wonderfully successful mass meeting at Pentecost and it appears that during the stir and opposition that, followed the apostles were seldom lacking for crowds, but we know they were often engaged in personal evangelism. And the more extensively the Gospel spread, the more the individual approach was employed, and the more necessary it seems to have been. But the two methods go along together in the apostolic church, which is both natural and wise. And it should not be otherwise today, notwithstanding the effort of some to do away entirely with mass meetings for preaching. We are rightly emphasizing the importance of individual approach and appeal in home, business places and elsewhere that private and confidential discussions of spiritual problems can be had. And we are also rightly urging upon the vast number of hitherto inactive laymen their duty of evangelism. We need to stress still more the importance of every member taking seriously the Christian's duty of soul winning. And we need to learn far more extensively the noble art of talking to men and women individually about the soul and the things that pertain to its eternal welfare. But we need also to hold on to the special preaching services in the interest of soul winning. We are not likely to outgrow it, nor to find anything else that will fully take its place. It has its weaknesses, as also has personal evangelism, but we cannot get along successfully without either. The combination is in accordance with apostolic practice, right theory and the most extensive present day success. Let us hold fast to that which is good.

Rome's Political Ambitions Unchanged

Many people have been wondering of late, because of propaganda issued in behalf of a certain Catholic aspirant to the presidency of the United States, whether the political ambitions of the Vatican might not have undergone some change. It is no secret that the pope has long asserted a claim to independence of any earthly government and to a right himself to head up a political government, if so be that he might find a kingdom over which to rule. But the impression has gained considerable circulation recently that possibly those political claims had been relinquished or modified. The political purpose of such propaganda is quite evident. But when an issue arises, or an opportunity for advantage appears, the pope is not timid about reasserting his claim.

He is exceedingly anxious for some sort of a political domain, however small, and has recently made such a demand of Italy, asking that the country over which Mussolini rules shall restore a portion of the papal domain so as to afford full independence of the pope. It was in 1879, or thereabout, that the Italian people under the leadership of Garibaldi gained political freedom from the Vatican, and, as the pope insists, "violently deprived the pontiff of his legitimate possessions." In a public statement issued by the Vatican we read the following: "I affirm that the Latin imperial tradition of Rome is today represented by Catholicism. I believe that the only universal idea today existing in Rome is that shining from the Vatican." And the "Christian Advocate" (Nashville) comments: "Thus the ancient position of Roman Catholicism is re-asserted, and the pope makes known his feeling of independence of any political government. He thinks that he himself should be a temporal ruler as well as the head of the church. No doubt he would like to be the king of the nations. This theory of the papacy makes such an idea necessary." In view of such evidence the question raised by the Marshall-Smith correspondence, whether a man could be a good and obedient Catholic and at the same time a good and loyal American in such a position as the presidency of the United States seems to require a negative answer. It is Rome's political claim, which every influential and obedient Catholic is duty-bound to promote, that is the hindering factor, and not Rome's religion.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

"Look out for the cars", but look in for the tempter, and the danger of the latter is as real and disastrous as the former.

Dream; every one should, but do not stop there. The world is set forward by those who determine to make their dreams come true.

We behold the passing show and close our eyes to the inner reality, and our lives take on character from what the eyes feast upon.

Brother W. A. Gearhart reports the Home Mission receipts for the period of July 1st to October 31st. It will soon be time for the new offering reports to be coming in. Will yours be among the first? Be prompt.

Mrs. Orville D. Jobson writes an interesting letter to our young readers, telling of the black children in school in Africa, learning to read and learning about Jesus; many of whom have already accepted Jesus as their Savior.

Limestone, Tennessee, reports the good work of Brother M. D. Early in an evangelistic campaign there. His services were valued not only because of his preaching but also because of his tactful assistance in ironing out some difficulties within the church.

Brother James S. Cook tells of his evangelistic labors with our missions in Kentucky—Krypton and Lost Creek, fields with which he was quite familiar. He was greatly used of the Lord in both places, and he finds reason for encouragement and for continued loyal support on the part of the brotherhood.

When parents believe that their church represents the truth of God as revealed in his Word nearer than any other church, how can they be indifferent about the choice their children make, and deliberately refrain from instructing them in the truths that grip their minds and hearts?

Brother W. H. Miller was a welcome caller at the Evangelist office this week, and over the Sunday of November 13th went to Fremont, Ohio, which church is at present without a pastor, and preached and conducted communion service. Other brethren who have supplied this pulpit recently are Prof. M. A. Stuckey, Don Bame and Prof. C. L. Anspach.

Dr. G. C. Carpenter gives us some interesting news concerning the thriving mission church at Winchester, Virginia. Such promising fields ought to receive the brotherhood's most hearty support. Dr. Bame is now assisting the pastor, Brother Rohart, in an evangelistic campaign there.

Our correspondent from Conemaugh, Pennsylvania, lets us know of the interest that splendid group has in Ashland College. Such interest should greatly encourage the college authorities with regard to the future of that institution. The various auxiliaries of the church, of which Brother A. R. Staley is the efficient pastor, are well organized and pressing forward.

In this issue we publish a memorial of the lamented Elder E. B. Shaver, the venerable patriarch of the Virginia valley and who for more than half a century has preached the Gospel with vigor and power and has led hundreds of souls to the Lord Jesus and has founded numerous churches. His life was one of service and the church has greatly profited by his ministry. The inspiration of his memory will linger long with us.

Dr. W. S. Bell continues hard at work on the Endowment campaign and this week gives us a report of the canvass of the Muncie mission church of Indiana, of which Brother G. H. Jones is the pastor. There are some very loyal friends of Ashland College in this church, but they are heavily burdened with the support of their local work. Their gift was $620.00, which added to that previously reported makes a total of $125,880.54.

Brother W. A. Gearhart, Home Mission Secretary, asks again for the cooperation of some pastors who doubtless unintentionally failed to send in their requests for coin envelopes to be used in lifting the Home Mission offering. Whatever may be your plan for lifting the offering, there ought not to be any failure on the part of pastors to take an offering. The future of the church depends on the support given to Home Missions.

Our correspondent from the Second Church or Los Angeles tells of the auspicious beginning of Brother A. V. Kimmell's new pastorate. The field is not new to him, as he assisted in the establishment of the church. On this special day—special from various standpoints—there was a Sunday school attendance of 569 and a large offering taken. One of the young men of this congregation was recently ordained to the ministry. We welcome Brother Leo Polman into the Evangelist family as one of our ministers.

We are privileged to present the likeness of the new church building at Elkhart, Indiana, both in its present state of construction and its ideal, together with a description of the building and dedicatory services. Brother W. I. Duker and his courageous group of workers are to be congratulated upon this venture and the success thus far attained. It is worthy of note that the cost of the first unit was more than covered with cash and pledges on dedication. Dr. G. W. Rench was the special speaker and money-raiser of the day. The dedication was followed by a week of special services in which neighboring pastors gave assistance.

Brother E. L. Miller gives us an interesting letter from his pastorate at Maurertown, Virginia, where his loyal parishioners are showing their regard for his leadership in many ways. The work is going forward in a splendid manner. Of special interest are the evangelistic meetings conducted by Brother Miller and members of his family at nearby points, resulting in fifty-eight baptisms. His meeting at Linwood, Maryland, resulted in eight accessions, notwithstanding the obstacles. After you have read Brother Miller's splendid report, you will not wonder that the editor goes after such letters so vigorously. They are worth it.

Dr. A. D. Gnagey, pastor of the Altoona, Pennsylvania, congregation, writes a most interesting letter, giving some helpful general observations and some evidences of progress in his field. Thus far in this year seventeen souls have been received into the church by baptism as a result of his pre-communion instruction classes, and last year nineteen were baptized. Brother Gnagey's plan of conducting instruction classes among the young people, preparing them for church membership is commendable. It would mean much toward stabilizing our membership, as well as conserving the youth, if the plan were more generally adopted. Other members were received by letter and renewal of covenant. Brother Gnagey is now in the fifth year of his pastorate among the Altoona people who esteem him very highly. A year ago they surprised him with a pleasant birthday anniversary event.

Convictions Concerning the Lord Jesus Christ

By Harold D. Fry

(Presented at the Chapel Hour at the Young People's Camp, Shipshewana, Indiana, July 19, 1927)

When we begin to discuss certain convictions we should hold concerning the Lord Jesus Christ, we have as our subject the object of heaven's praise. In that final revelation of the written Word given through the apostle John, we have a picture of our Savior that is ever before us, and that picture tells us what heaven thinks of Christ. As we tell in very brief and simple form what we think of Christ, let us remember the precious promise of our Lord, "Where two or three are met together in my name, there am I in the midst." Blessed fact! May he direct our hearts to greater devotion, as we state four facts: first, "He is the Son of God"; second, "He is the Son of Man"; third, "He is the Only Savior", and fourth, "He is the Only Pilot."

I. He is the Son of God.

We read on opening our Bible, "In the beginning God created the heavens and the earth." Christ was in the creation, preeminent, for in Colossians we read, "For by him were all things created that are in heaven, and that are in earth, visible and invisible, whether thrones, dominions, principalities, or powers; all things were created by him, and for him." He created all things.

He sustains all things,—this Christ of ours. True scientists and reasonable astronomers will never find more planets, and sun systems than I can carry in my faith, because the more we realize the mysterious and tremendousness of creation, the bigger my trust in Christ. For he created it all; and we now read, that he is "upholding all things by the word of his power." By his power and authority all things consist and are sustained. Ah, what time I am afraid, I will trust in him!"

He knows all things. Searching the hearts and trying the reins, our Christ knows our secrets, and sins, the things our consciences would hide. He had no need of others counsel, for it is written, "He knew what was in man", and his disciples testified "Thou, Lord knowest all things." He knows our needs before we ask; He is the omniscient Son of God.

He was before all things. Telling the Jews of life before and intimacy with, Abraham. He drew their wrath. But in prayer in Gethsemane to the Father, he spoke of love among the Godhead before time or earth began, and the Father answered in love. He is before all things, that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow and every tongue confess Jesus Christ Lord to the glory of God the Father.

Christ seeing his disciples came toiling in rowing and despairing in danger came walking on the water. Peter believing, asked authority to do likewise and did, until the alert and tender hand of his Lord brought him up and into the ship. Then is written, "They came and worshipped him, saying, 'Of a truth, thou art the Son of God.'"

II. He is the Son of Man.

The Christ of Glory became a man despised of the people. The Creator comes in human flesh that he might bear in his own body the sins of the world. The Son of God is also Son of Man, the sufferer, the servant, the one obedient even unto the death of the Cross. There is so much emphasis, and wrongly placed upon the humanity of our Savior, that his deity is denied. But the fact that the Word became Flesh, and dwelt among us, that we beheld his glory, and grace, and truth, is very precious to us. As a teacher, he taught as one having authority and not as the scribes. It is written, that he went about doing good, that he was a toiler, that he wept, that he was tempted by the arch enemy of our souls, that he came to be the Lamb of God that taketh away the sins of the world.

Thus we behold the Lamb of God led to the slaughter; the Son of Man, loving and helping men, yet spit upon and buffeted. Agonizing for mankind in the garden—such intense prayer was never known in behalf of others. Upon the cross, as sin, his life was made an offering for our sins, and he bore them in his own body on the tree. But though he died as a worm, he arose a Victor, giving life to us whom he calls younger brothers, and sisters. He is a coming Son of man, coming to receive us, for where he is there shall his servants be. I never shall forget the Spirit's gripping work in my heart, as Rev. F. A. Steven, veteran and aged missionary of the C. I. M. laid his hand on my shoulder, saying, "We have not a High Priest which cannot be touched with the feelings of our infirmities, but he was in all points tempted like as we, yet without sin." Oh, Wonderful, Mighty Counselor, Eternal Father, the Son of Man!

III. He is the Only Savior.

It is popular in our educational system today to cast the dust of earth upon the name of our Lord Jesus. University chair and pulpit are comparing him with Buddha, Confucius, Zoroaster, Mohammed, and others, including the Greek philosophers. But these religions of the world are miserable and tragic counterfeits for the Gospel of Jesus Christ. These do not save from sin, these other leaders of thought. These are guilty of sin, of shame, of carnal hope. But the matchless Son of God is without reproach. He today, can look all hell and earth and heaven in the face, and challenge, "Which of you convicteth me of sin?" Christ only died for his faith, the just for the unjust that he might bring us to God.

It is written concerning this only Savior that heaven sanctions no other, and gives only his name whereby men must be saved. He is an eternal Savior for you and me.

Just to see Jesus once scarred as Redeemer

Jesus, my Lord, from all suffering free

Just to see Jesus transfigured forever,

That will be glory, be glory for me.

In the fourth place

IV. He is the Only Pilot.

Who else can guide my life here and my soul through death to that glorious presence of God? Because he is the Son of God he is able to appear in the presence of God for us, saying, "I prayed for you, that your faith fail not." Because he is the Son of Man, he understands our weaknesses, temptations, sufferings, and faults. Because he knows all our faults and yet loves us, he is our best Friend. Of course he is the only Pilot of our ship. Young people, he must be your Pilot. He only knows the hidden rocks and contrary winds; he understands the set of our sail, and the strength of our bark. Well has he seen the unmarked paths of the sea of human life.

Down in the great vessel, encased in iron walls, far below the surface of the sea, is the engineer's room. He can not see out on the sweep of the sea to guide that ship. Mechanical contrivances and dials, and electrical connections are all he has. Icebergs, other vessels, rocks or reefs, might be any moment the destroyer of that great charge of human life. If you have been in that compartment and have learned that in such a helpless, visionless case, the engineer may spend two-thirds of his life, when you come up on deck and to the bridge, your soul will thrill with this truth. That there on the bridge, with the map of the seas before him, the compass and direction of the ship, where he may view the sweep of the ocean, and know all things, is the Pilot. By an electrical instrument he may talk to the engine room, and if in doubt, the engineer may signal, the answer comes from the pilot, "This is the way, drive in it." Oh, precious truth! We are so unseeing and blind to the enemies of our souls; we can not view the path of our life; we are encased in the walls of carnal mortality, and we need One above. There on the bridge to heaven, where he may see the sweep of our soul, and hold it in his hand, where there is no danger but what comes under his all-seeing eye, is our Captain, the Pilot of our Soul. Young people, let Jesus Christ be your Pilot.

Occupying Until He Come

By Herman Koontz

(Moderator's address for Pennsylvania Conference at Philadelphia, October 3-6, 1927, and voted published in The Evangelist.)

Under the providential guidance of the Holy Spirit this the thirty-ninth annual Pennsylvania District Conference of the Brethren church is assembled in this beautiful church and in the city that two hundred and eight years ago this autumn sheltered a little band of men and women who, seeking religious freedom, became pioneers in this new country, and who were destined to plant the seeds of Brethrenism in America. Today we bear witness to their noble fight to conquer adverse circumstances and conditions, and they are among that great cloud of witnesses who encourage us as a church to stand true to "the Faith once for all delivered unto the Saints", "to cast out the leaven of unbelief", "to look for the glorious appearing of our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ", and to faithfully "occupy until he come."

It is only fitting and proper that we should spend some time in reviewing the many things that God has done for us during the last conference year. He has given to many churches many victories in their revivals, and many precious undying souls have been ushered into the presence of the Giver of Life. The pulpits of our churches have been filled with men who cannot be swayed by the onrushing tide of Liberalism, and the pew with folk who manifest an increasing thirst for the simple, plain, unadulterated Gospel of Jesus Christ.

But our review of the past year also brings to us a deep and gripping sorrow when we recall the departing of the man that you elected to lead your conference during this year, Brother Marcus A. Witter. Last year his sermon at the opening of the Berlin Conference did much to prepare the way for a meeting that was a thorough success in inspiring all present to a more fervent loyalty to our only Master.

The conference this year experiences an irreparable loss in not having this same man of God to bring one of his winsome and heart searching messages and to preside over this body as its Moderator. But now he has taken up a greater piece of work with the One whom he loved, and though we can no more enjoy his presence, yet we are comforted when we realize that under the influence of his consecrated and sacrificed life this conference will be inspired.

Since the past is history and can never be changed nor altered, it is well that we turn our attention to the work of our church for the future, realizing that the Lord Jesus may appear in great glory at any time, and that when he does appear we will want him to find us faithfully occupying, busily engaged in making up his Bride.

Realizing my own inexperience and lack of a thorough understanding of the needs of this conference, I have endeavored to collect in this address the sentiments of a number of men in this district who because of mature experience and long residence in this state are better able than I to foresee our needs.

Now in what ways can we faithfully occupy until he comes? One problem that confronts us is how to shield our people from false doctrine. No doubt you have noticed that the books, magazines, and newspapers are giving much place to religion today. Men skilled in the Literary Art and lacking in acquaintanceship with Christ are turning their attention to religious subjects. Some articles no doubt are wholesome and worthy to be read, but the great body of such works is fallacious and places before a gullible public an untruthful picture of Christ and a one-sided view of his blessed Book. He is labeled as a good man, a great teacher, a humble Galilean, but his Deity and his sacrificial work of redemption are discredited if they are mentioned at all.

Satan is also sending his servants into the homes of unsuspecting people to sell or give away books or tracts which are written under the guise of helps to study the Bible but are in reality for the purpose of turning them from the faith to a belief in cults and isms that are now rampant in the world. We have ourselves seen books by Russel displayed on library tables in homes where we have visited.

Clubs for the promotion of Atheism are being boldly and openly organized in schools and colleges among young people in the most dangerous period of their lives. In almost every case of student suicide lack of positive belief in God was found to be the underlying cause. These are only a few means that the forces of Satan are using to deter men from finding in Christ crucified and glorified the only way of escape from sin and death. True to the words of Paul, Satan and his false prophets are fashioning themselves into angels of light and ministers of righteousness and are deceiving the very elect.

The greatest and most effective means of combating this alarming situation is to teach men and women the Bible, and when Christians know their Bible they can easily discern between truth and error. During this coming year we should resolve as ministers, Sunday school superintendents, teachers, and parents that we are going to grasp every opportunity to teach the Bible from Genesis to Revelation. The pulpit must be utilized weekly in careful, systematic teaching of the Bible with special emphasis on Christ. The Sunday school superintendent must plan ways and means whereby he can introduce more comprehensive Bible teaching. The class teacher should use his opportunity of presenting to his class from the Book a clear picture of Christ. The Christian Endeavor officers should get together and plan how they might open some form of Bible study in their society. The Teacher Training class should spend more time becoming filled with the message of the Book than learning principles of teaching. Parents should realize the need of proper religious instruction for their children, and should themselves spend time in finding the Truth that they themselves may be able to teach it to the child in the Nation's best school—the home. In short, every means is being used to turn men from the truth and if we are to faithfully occupy we can do no less than use every honorable means at our command to teach men the truth. If every delegate to this conference would determine that throughout this coming year he was going to make a greater study of the Bible and influence his friends to do the same, and use every opening to see that it is taught in the church, Sunday school, Christian Endeavor, and the home, there would be fewer people who would readily accept and believe every kind of thing that is stamped with the mark of religion.

The discussion of how we should set ourselves for the defense of the Gospel leads us naturally to a second problem, the problem of a decreasing ministry that must somehow be solved. It is by no means a new problem. The retiring Moderator of National Conference made it a part of his message and it has constantly come before the attention of our District Conferences. But it seems that we are failing to note the seriousness of the problem, for very little is being done to our knowledge to remedy the difficulty.

We raise the question, "Where does the fault lie?" We unquestionably believe that men for the office of the ministry must be called by God. Can we place the fault with God then, and blame him for not calling more of our people for his work? Certainly no one would blame God for the increasing dearth in our ministry resulting in many vital and much needed fields being today pastorless. God is constantly calling men but there is no response because we fail to do our part. Possibly we as ministers fail in that we do not truly portray the ministry to our young people. Perhaps all they hear from us are the hardships and discouragements rather than the fact that to be a minister of the Gospel is the greatest privilege in the world, that it brings more joy and real happiness than any other calling, and gives us an opportunity to more fully repay our obligations to God. Then there is the possibility that we do not sufficiently encourage those people in our churches who seem to lean slightly toward the ministry. One of the pastors of this district certainly is instituting a good plan by deciding to group together a number of his young people who might possibly become ministers or definite Christian workers, and giving them a course in Bible instruction preparatory to further training.

We cannot deny the fact that the solution of the problem lies in the sphere of the church and the home, or with the pastors and parents, but in order that something definite might be done this year to solve the problem we would recommend that this conference name a committee of three ministers who have been extremely successful in influencing men to enter the ministry to carefully collect and inculcate in a booklet or tract their methods of preparing their young people for the call of God, the expense of the book either to be paid by the conference and distributed to every minister, or sold at a sufficient sum to pay for the publication. Also, that the committee act in the advisory capacity during the year for all ministers seeking better methods of encouraging young men to accept the call of the ministry.

The Bible---Book of Books

By Edward A. Hughes

The Bible is the lighthouse of heaven. Open its windows and there pours through a flood of light that bathes, and warms, and rejuvenates until the whole being thrills. It is truth waiting for the seeker to come and enjoy. It is the glow of truth and is eternal; it never grows dim.

And this lighthouse, this Book which directs the way to the most cherished of heavens, is so plain that all can reach the goal who look and long for its shelter.

It is the Book of the way. God gave it that the knowledge of all past should be revealed in so far as is necessary that man should know; but especially did he give the Book that the way should be plain for the end for which man was created. For man was created to be with God, but sin drew him aside. And sin, who is Satan, with his army of adherents, seeks to keep man from God; to destroy the great plan which the Creator had in mind when he formed the world as a place preparatory from which the homes of heaven should be filled.

Science is an attempt to find out God. It is a most worthy study, and next to the Book it should be the great aim of learning to comprehend its laws through which the universe moves. But when man places his own transitory and ever-changing views above the truth of God's law which changes never, he becomes the least reliable of Bible students and one to be shunned by the believer in an eternal life as God has revealed. For there is no learning that surpasses faith in God, and there is no faith that does not believe; and no belief that discards God's revelations can turn a foot upward in the way of life.

The most pitiful sight in the world is a man teaching God and disbelieving his Word; teaching Christ and doubtedly his divinity; discarding the miracles because they cannot be performed today. All through the ages we have had scientists. They were the most learned men of their day, and their discoveries have helped to give us all that we have. But their discoveries were in so many ways a long series of errors. New theories were constantly being advanced to replace the old ones, so that much that was given as truth in the ages past is an old story now and worthless.

And so, in looking back over the learning of the past, it might be aptly said, that if all the errors of science were published, the world itself would not contain the books which should be written. Even at the present moment gravitation is tottering and may fall. Nothing stands through the ages like the Bible and it stands because it is the Word of God. It cannot be destroyed or forgotten, for God gave it, and it is the truth.—The Presbyterian.

The heart is not a treasury which is impoverished by giving, but a power which is strengthened and enriched by loving.—Elizabeth Charles.

Views on the Progress of Prohibition

By J. H. Larimore

B. C. Forbes, financial writer of the Philadelphia Inquirer, and recognized throughout the country as an economist, says: "My own amateurish opinion is that prohibition has contributed incalculably to enabling a vast number of families to improve their living conditions and to make at least some progress towards financial independence. The testimony of employers is along the same lines."

Declaring that prohibition is not as unpopular with the majority of Americans as some persons would make the world believe and that the attitude of future generations toward it will change as the years of progress become more apparent, Maurice Campbell, prohibition administrator, addressing a meeting of the Prohibition Education League in New York City, appealed to its members to furnish him all the information they could on the larger operations involving violations.

The administrator said the problem was to prevent the diversion of industrial alcohol into bootleg channels and while it is often made to appear that the Government is inactive against the small operators, this is because efforts are being concentrated on the larger sources of supply.

It is not the "brawn and sinew of the Nation," he said, that is making bootlegging profitable.

"No one can justly say," he added, "that the majority of the American people are violators of the Prohibition law. The class of people who keep the bootlegger busy are in most instances those individuals whose welfare is not vital to the republic. They are generally what I would call wasters of the human race."

The greatest value that has accrued to the people from prohibition, Mr. Campbell said, could be credited to the improvement in labor and labor conditions.

"Prohibition has taken away the temptation to labor to squander the money it earns in drink," he said. "In the old days there was the saloon where the laborer could spend his earnings. Now there is no such possibility and labor has not turned to the speakeasy and the cabaret.

The laboring people are not frequenters of unlawful drinking places. This is proved by the fact that our savings bank accounts have increased over $3,000,000,000 in the last few years.

"Among certain persons, some young persons, it is thought smart to carry a flask. By some it is considered a necessary form of amusement. I believe that in years to come this will change. The children of today will grow up in this atmosphere of prohibition and with a consequent increasing respect for this much criticized Eighteenth Amendment."

Prohibition has not hurt the passenger business of the United States Lines. This is the statement made by A. C. Dalton, president of the Merchant Fleet Corporation, upon his return to Washington after spending more than a month in Europe.

This, from an official who has the best possible opportunity to know what is the result of prohibition upon shipping, is an effective answer to opponents of prohibition who have asserted that travelers would not take passage on vessels which did not serve liquor.

Dalton said that vessels now carry more passengers than in years past despite the absence of bars and that he personally would disapprove the restoration of bars even if they were permitted by law. Young persons, he declared, now patronize the dance floors provided on all passenger vessels of the Government Merchant Marine, in lieu of spending their time in the bars.

Discussing his inspection of American shipping facilities abroad he said that the American Merchant Marine has a "definite place" in Europe. Soliciting agencies of the Merchant Fleet Corporation, he said, are generally very good and very active.

The United States Lines, according to Dalton, are popular with American travelers and the bookings were "far in excess" of those of last year and of previous years. He added that persons other than Americans have been patronizing these vessels this year "to an extent that is rather surprising", attributing this to the excellent food and accommodations.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Spiritual Fountains in Spiritual Deserts

By R. F. Porte

(Opening Sermon of the Ohio Conference held at Canton, October 4-7, 1927)

TEXT: From within him shall flow rivers of living water.—John 7:38, R. V.

The curse of barrenness is deadness. Acres of land upon which no rain falls and through which no rivers pass lie as barren wastes. There are no rich harvests where no showers fall and where no rivers flow. Great tracts of waste land in our western states are being reclaimed by taking the water from rivers and turning it upon this dry land. Where there was waste there now blossoms great harvests of fruit and grain. It is said that enough water can be stored in the great Roosevelt dam to irrigate its territory for three years without any rain falling. The water which would run into the great ocean is stored for a material blessing.

Spiritual barrenness results in spiritual deadness. When God's blessing is no longer bestowed the soul becomes a wilderness. It is important that Christian people take advantage of the special showers of God's Spirit. A church service, a mid-week prayer meeting, a conference—these are opportunities for filling the spiritual reservoir of the soul. It is wonderful if the Christian can daily receive showers of blessing, but more often is it true that our spiritual resources need a special gift of God's blessing through agencies mentioned above. To live unto God means that our soul must receive God's spiritual blessing. The abundant life which Jesus offers must be fed by the fountains of God.

Our text tells us of the possibility of a life of perennial richness. A life of constant blessing. Such a life is free from spiritual deadness. It is the abundant life. It is a life filled with rich harvests. It is the desire of most people to escape the stigma of uselessness. We desire the blessings of continual supply for the recurring needs of life. We would know the source of unlimited supply. We would touch the great fountain which flows from God's throne. We look with joy upon the places being blessed by God's grace. The lives of men and women, churches and communities. We would have that blessing that fruitfulness which comes by abiding in the True Vine. We cannot find this blessing within ourselves for we are never satisfied. We cannot find it in any of man's works. The source is in God "Who giveth us all things richly to enjoy." God's unlimited riches may be ours if we will avail ourselves of the blessing. All we need to do is to make room for the power and the blessing and the joy is ours. Like the flowing river which waits to be harnessed that it might turn the wheels of industry and light the dark places of our cities so God's spiritual riches will make our lives channels of blessing and lighthouses for storm-tossed souls.

This conference is an opportunity, what will you do with it? The volume of a river depends upon its source and its tributaries, so our life will be enriched by numerous infillings we receive from these means of grace. This conference will mean inspiration received and inspiration given. Do not let it be said by any one that he attended this conference with no personal benefit. It is your privilege, dear people, to receive the riches of grace through this conference if you will make possible such reception. It is also your privilege to be an inspiration to somebody. The friendly smile and hand-clasp, the sympathetic and friendly word will cheer somebody's heart and gladden somebody's life. As Brethren, we share a common task and have one great motive. This conference is a moment when we charge our lives with power and unite our efforts for a united forward step.

A cistern contains water but the only way you get the water out is to pump it out. A sponge soaks up liquid and must be squeezed before it releases it. A true Christian is none of these. He is a living fountain that cannot be stopped. In the desert of Gobi huts are built over the wells to keep the sand storms from filling them up.

"We share our mutual woes,
Our mutual burdens bear;
And often for each other flows
The sympathizing tear."

This blessing is mine and it is not mine. It is mine to share. Mine to minister to some one else. There is some one to whom you can minister. Do not expect to succeed in some other person's ministry. Minister in your own vineyard to those whom you know and God will send you forth to others.

Life is a Fountain of Righteousness or of Evil

The fountain of life influences is either poisoned or purified. It goes forth because life is positive. It is said that a living spring cannot be choked. The water of a living spring will break through walls of cement. It works to reveal itself and to give its crystal, life-giving water to man and nature. It is with a feeling of encouragement that Christians may take knowledge of the fact that the work of Christ has persisted in spite of every effort of those who oppose him. The living fountain opening and issuing from the throne of God in heaven breaks through the obstacles of sin to refresh those who will drink. Individuals and the community have been refreshed by the presence of the water of life.

It is within the power of individuals to control their actions but they cannot stop the effect of their influence.

Jesus told the woman at the well in Samaria that, "Whoso drinketh of the water that I shall give him shall never thirst but that it shall be in him a well of water springing up unto everlasting life"—Jesus offered to make good the issues of life by a divine work of grace. The processes of life which were corrupted by sin he restores so that spiritual health and prosperity is the issue of life. Wherever there is water the signs of life are evident, it must be so with those who have connected themselves with the river of the water of life. Along the banks of a fine river of water I expect to see trees, flowers, and fields of grain and fruit. I expect to see life manifest. Where the water of life flows through lives prepared to convey the river of life I expect to see the signs of spiritual life. I expect to see the works of Christ being accomplished, and the lives of men and women filled with Christian fruit. The soul cannot be fed on worldly things, the prodigal son tried that and failed. Every living thing must be fed on that type of food suitable to its nature. The soul of man cannot subsist on material things nor on temporal things. The soul needs spiritual and eternal food which comes from God through the agencies ordained and ordered by God. "Feed my sheep", said Jesus to Peter. Feed them, give them drink. That's your ministry, Peter, and that is the ministry of every follower of Christ.

We May Choose the Type of Our Influence

It is a matter of choice on the part of each person whether his life shall be connected with the river of the water of life which flows from the throne of God or whether his life shall be fed by the corrupted and polluted currents of the world. What a discovery we have made when we find the river of life. What a choice it is for a person to connect the life on to that life giving stream and become a channel of blessing and fruitfulness. The abundant life in Christ is the life that has a product with which to bless the world. It is not your credal standard that we care to know about unless your standard of faith leads us to the water of life. It is not the talent you possess, or the reputation you have, but the fruit you bear unto eternal life. The world is dying for the ministry of the children of God. The church must be a ministering church to be the church of Christ.

We like to think about or visit the great river valleys of the world. The rich fields and orchards, the prosperous homes and happy people are a veritable foretaste of that heavenly country. "The Nile is Egypt and Egypt is the Nile." The bread of Egypt almost literally comes from the waters. In fact all the rich lands of the world are blessed by their great rivers. We think of those people whose hearts were filled with the Spirit of God. We think of Livingstone, Moffat, Stanley, Morrison, Carey, Judson, Higginbottom and others who by their Christian ministry turned arid and barren souls into saints. The work of our own church in Africa and South America is furnishing us the incentive to a loyal surrender of our lives for the bearing of the water of life. The gathering together of God's people is a time for greater spiritual power and the giving of help to our Brethren. It is ours to enrich and enliven our churches by the fullness of the Spirit we receive from the hand of God. God has his representatives who are to distribute to the need of the world.

The Channel of Life May be Widened and Deepened

When Jesus discoursed to his disciples on the vine and the branches he told them, "Every branch in me that beareth fruit he pruneth it that it may bring forth more fruit." The wish of the Master is for increasing capacity. The need is so great and the workers are too few. The man or woman who neglects to fit himself or herself to be of the most use toward the spiritual betterment of the world, to say the least, disappoints the Master. If we recall the man who failed to make use of his one talent it is a sin to fail to do our most for Christ and his Kingdom on earth.

Ezekiel's vision of the river from the throne would cause us to believe that the supply is ample. The individual lack of capacity is the only barrier to the greatest blessing to the world. The proper vision of the world's need ought to send men and women in increasing numbers to church services, Bible school, prayer meetings, and to conferences and institutes of all kinds. Like Paul of old we might well ask, "What wilt thou have me do, Lord?" The answer we would get might be quite like that Paul received when he was told to rise and go into the city and it would be shown him what he must do. It takes some ambition and will to get to church and Sunday school and to conferences but I have noticed that the people who make the effort return to render invaluable service to their local church and community. Not everything you eat is digested and assimilated, so not all you hear at conferences will suit your personal need. There is a blessing here if you are watching for it. We need not be so much concerned about the doctrinal standard of the church as we ought to be concerned about our individual capacity to relay the truth and spiritual blessing to others. God will take care of the purity of the truth. What his servants need to do is to let God make them fit to bear it. The truth is corrupted after it strikes man. Man's will and heart is not always surrendered and the truth is not delivered according to God's will. Our two hundred and more varieties of religion represent just that many varieties of religious thought. Religion according to God does not contradict or divide; religion according to man is a heterogeneous mass of incongruities. Our religious blunders ought to send us to our knees and to God to be taught of him who said, "I am the Truth." I want to know God. I want to know his will for those redeemed. It is not for me to preach Christ the way I think he ought to be preached. It is my business and your business to deliver his message; so seek his leading and teaching.

The river of life proceeded from the throne. There will be no more tributaries to that great river if Christ sat upon the throne of more hearts. There cannot, with good reason, be life where he who is the source of life is rejected. It must be a wonderful sight to watch the change taking place upon a piece of ground almost barren of life when the lifegiving water is turned on. Out of deadness life begins to immediately arise. The waste expanses become blessed with fields of grain and orchards of fruit. There must come changes in the lives of men and women when the influences of Christ come in. The channel of life must be deepened so that the blessing may come in great abundance. Abundant reception of Christ's blessing means capacity to give out to others.

The assemblies of God's people are for the purpose of receiving spiritual help and giving help. The currents of life must be influenced by contact with the throne of God to give forth that which will bless mankind. Our wills must be surrendered to the purposes of God. The capacities of life must increase. The needy world looks for the refreshment of the river of the water of life coming through the channel of Christian lives.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE SUPREME TEST—Matt. 7:15-20. "By their fruits ye shall know them." Most people may have very little actual knowledge of the contents of the Bible, but they have a pretty fair idea of what a Christian should be, or possibly, more often, what he should not be. And the genuineness of a Christian profession is judged by what men see in the life more than by what they hear from the lips. And that was the test which the Lord Jesus himself proposed—keeping his commandments.

TUESDAY

WORDS OF POWER—John 6:61-63. "The words that I speak unto you, they are spirit, and they are life." How great is the power of words! Kipling said, "The magic of words ... words ... that become alive and walk up and down in the hearts of the hearers." But the words of Jesus were more alive and powerful than those of any other speaker who ever lived. He came with words of life, fresh from the throne of God, words that transform and thrill, words of eternal significance.

WEDNESDAY

CHRISTIAN FELLOWSHIP—1 John 1:5-9. "If we walk in the light, as he is in the light, we have fellowship one with another." Light is a symbol of God, because it is bright and purifying. To walk in the light is to walk with God, to have fellowship with him. But it means also having fellowship with other Christian disciples. That is the secret of "the communion of saints" in which we profess faith. Dr. C. C. Albertson says, "In a deep sense all Christians are bound together by the possession of the mysteries of grace."

THURSDAY

MUTUAL UNDERSTANDING—Job 16:1-8. "If your soul were in my soul's stead." That is what we seldom do because it goes against the grain. We are selfish, and being selfish, we like to confine our thoughts to our own affairs. It may be only our worries and troubles and problems, but we are selfish even in them. We bury ourselves in them and imagine that we alone have such trials. We do not realize how much human beings are alike. If we knew each other better, we would love each other more.

FRIDAY

THINKING SOBERLY—Rom. 12:1-5. "But to think soberly." Rev. A. E. Gregory has said that "America by the grace of God is on the way to become a sober nation, and is physically cleaner and stronger than at any time in her history." But this text means vastly more than that. It means to think humbly, dispassionately, impartially, without bias and over-wrought emotions that hinder clearness of grasp and poise of mind. The man who indulges his mind in race or class prejudice is not thinking soberly. He who is filled with conceit or self-pity is not thinking soberly. Let us think soberly.

SATURDAY

PERSONAL SOUL WINNING—John 1:40-42. "He findeth his own brother Simon." That was the greatest thing that Andrew ever did. He did not figure large among the apostles, but he proved himself worthy of the place he held by the winning of his brother Simon, and in that he displayed the highest characteristic of a genuine disciple of our Lord—the desire to bring others to that saving knowledge.

SUNDAY

EYES THAT SEE—Psalm 119:17-24. "Open thine eyes, that I may behold wondrous things out of thy law." What wonders we walk amidst every day but fail to see! Nature to one is dull and meaningless while to another it gives inspiration that breaks forth in singing. But the saddest blindness is that which prevents one from seeing the beauty and truth in the Word of God. How much of its grandeur and worth we all fail to see. "Open thou mine eyes."—G. S. B.

Isaiah Teaches Right Living

Scripture Lesson—Isaiah 3:1 to 5:30.

Printed Text—Isaiah 5:1-12.

Devotional Reading—Isaiah 55:6-13.

Golden Text—Pure religion and undefiled before our God and Father is this, to visit the fatherless and widows in their affliction and to keep oneself unspotted from the world.—James 1:27.

LESSON LIGHTS Introductory Note

Isaiah prophesied between B. C. 755 and about B. C. 679. Our lesson is from his earlier prophecies, and was spoken in Jerusalem. It was a time of great prosperity, about the time of the founding of Rome, and the kingdoms of Judah and Israel were about as large as in the days of Solomon. Intemperance and luxury and idolatry and all the sins that usually go with them, were abounding, and dangers were threatening from the nation of Assyria. In such a time came Isaiah to stem the tide of wickedness and ruin.

Comments on the Text

"This parable is the finest of Isaiah's prophecies, and one of the most admirable literary productions in the Old Testament."

1. Sing for my well-beloved a song. "One can imagine the interest that such a proposition would excite, and the eagerness with which people would gather about him as he ran his fingers over the instrument on which he was going to accompany himself." Isaiah puts personal interest into his song by saying that it was made by a friend of his, and is about that friend. He pictures the making of an Eastern vineyard in a very fruitful hill. First a suitable site was selected, the usual hilltop location, that the vines might get the full force of the sun.

2. Next he digged it. He dug up the ground thoroughly with the mattock and gathered out the stones, great numbers of which had been unearthed—a laborious task, as it is on a New England farm. With these he made the wall mentioned in v. 5. Then he planted the ground with the choicest vine—a technical term for "the finest kind of Eastern vine with bright-red grapes." Tower. His next step was to build a stone tower, with a room on the ground to shelter the watchman of the vineyard from the cold and storms, and a winding stair leading to the flat top from which a watch against thieves might be kept up. Hewed out of the soft limestone, easily worked but hardening when exposed to the air. Wild grapes, small, sour and hard.

4. What could have been done more. Everything known had been done, without any real result. This was most true also in relation to God's dealings with his people.

5, 6. Take away the hedge ... Break down the wall, and let in the cattle to graze there; and let men trample over it. He would not prune it, or weed it with the hoe, but let the thorns and briars take possession of it. And to complete the desolation, no rain should be allowed to fall on it. All this took place when God removed the hedge and wall of his protection from his people, and let in the Assyrians to lay waste the country.

7. Israel ... Judah. He had given them great deliverances and great leaders; he had given them the law, the temple, the only pure religion; he had given them a noble country, small but marvelously safe against attack. He had not so dealt with any other nation. Justice ... oppression. He expected as fruit obedience to his commands, and love and gratitude and worship. Instead he got only such results as a nation might show that had received no special benefits from Jehovah. The Hebrew words for "justice" and "oppression" are closely similar (mishpat and mispah) Wade translates it, "He looked for rule and behold misrule." For righteousness, but, behold, a cry. Again, to fix the thought in the minds of his hearers, the prophet uses two Hebrew words of like sound, cedaqah and ce'aqah, redress and distress (Wade). The cry is a wail from the throats of the poor people whom the rich are oppressing.

8. Join, house to house. Houses and fields of the dispossessed peasantry are bought up or seized by the rich and powerful. How this arose is probably to be explained in part by the harsh customs of usury which prevailed during the regal period, and which it was the purpose of legislation to restrain (Ex. 22:25ff.; Dent. 23:19 ff.; 24: 10 ff; as well as the laws respecting seventh year and jubilee. Every civilization develops sooner or later the love of wealth and the love of pleasure—in the form of appropriation of the soil and indulgence in strong drink—and has its land question and its liquor question to solve.

10. One bath of wine, 21.26 quarts. "A homer of seed (about 11 bushels.) Ephah a bath, dry measure, about one bushel. Of course such harvests would mean starvation.

12. Tabret, tambourine or drum. Neither have they considered. The result of these sensual pleasures was the same as today: the drunkards took no thought for Jehovah, and were altogether blind to the operation of his hands, the doom which Isaiah saw coming swiftly upon the ungodly nation.

Official Call for the Tenth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association

TO THE SUNDAY SCHOOL WORKERS IN EVERY LAND, GREETING!

In the name of the Sunday School Workers of North America we, the officers of the World's Sunday School Association, invite Sunday School Workers from all nations to attend the World's Tenth Sunday School Convention to be held in Los Angeles, July 11th-18th, 1928.

The Sunday School Workers of Los Angeles, Southern California, will be the host of this Convention, and they extend a hearty invitation to all who are interested in making more effective the teaching ministry of the church.

We have been reminded that civilization cannot endure materially unless it is redeemed spiritually. It can only be redeemed spiritually as the Spirit of Christ creates Christ-like personalities. This can best be done through Christian education.

In a day when distance has been annihilated and the whole world has become a whispering gallery, it is well to meditate upon and consider afresh the Great Commission given to the little company of disciples in the first century who with their own ears heard the Master say: "GO YE THEREFORE AND TEACH ALL NATIONS."

The great missionary enterprise of the Christian church is today passing through a testing period. It is unquestionably a purifying period. The missionary zeal and fervor that burned in the breasts of the first century missionaries must be kindled in the hearts of twentieth century young men and women if we are to meet properly the rapidly changing world conditions. The programme of this Tenth Convention is being built for that purpose. The guiding thought in the programme will be THY KINGDOM COME, a theme challenging, compelling, and all-conquering.

CHRISTIAN WORLD FELLOWSHIP will be the international and inter-racial thought highway upon which those who attend the Convention will be invited to travel. God has unquestionably ordained that such a highway, in reality, shall be built upon which all races of men may travel away from age-old hatreds and prejudices into an era of Christian goodwill.

Los Angeles, the City of the Angels, is a city flourishing and beautiful. Once a desert, it is now a garden spot. The climate is delightful at all seasons of the year. The invitation to partake of Southern California hospitality is generous and hearty. The opportunity offered by the Convention to catch a world vision and to be challenged by a world task is one to be embraced.

The officers of the several committees, upon whom rests the responsibility of the Convention plans, earnestly request the teachers of Christian truth in every land to pray that this Convention may be one that will glorify God and exalt the name of Jesus whose great redemptive work must be made known to every creature.

Follow Me

By Orville Don Ullom, Stewardship Superintendent

These are the oft-quoted and familiar words of Jesus Christ to Matthew, the tax collector. There are many more such phrases as these in the Gospels. For example, in John 21:22 we find Christ saying unto Peter, "What is that to thee? Follow thou me." It seems proper that we should say here that our first concern is to set our own house in order. We will then be able to present a living example to the world. We will have proven to our neighbor, that we are faithful stewards. Marcus Dods remarks concerning Peter's statement here, "Peter was prone to intermeddle with matters beyond his sphere, and to manage other people's affairs for them. Such a disposition always betrays a lack of devotion to our own calling. To brood over the easier lot of our friend, to envy him his capacity and success, to grudge him his advantages and happiness, is to betray an injurious weakness in ourselves.

But rather shall we be gift bearers for Christ, bearing gifts of faith, hope, and the love of Christ to the world. This demands that we proportion our time, talents, and money for the spread of Christ's gospel among our fellows if it is to be done effectively. And the size of our gifts shall be measured by what we have to give. But even then many of us have no driving sense of obligation to take these responsibilities seriously, and yet every person is a steward of something. There is no living person who is not visited with responsibilities of one sort or another. It is true that many responsibilities are subject to our voluntary acceptance. The fundamental responsibilities of life are of no man's choosing. He is born with them—e. g., voting, paying taxes, obedience to law, and so forth. Furthermore, fundamentally, we belong to God, thus it is our obligation as well as to our advantage to obey the summons of his Son, "Follow me."

At times the markings, or the sign posts of the way, are not so evident, but those of you who have read "The Story of the Other Wise Man" by Henry Van Dyke will remember how faithfully Artaban followed the sign of the sky in order that we might find the Christ. At times the markings were dim and they were scarcely readable, but in the end he saw that it is best to follow even the shadow of the best than to remain content with the worst. And it is even so today. "Those who would see wonderful things must be ready to travel alone." It is not that we need more Johns and Peters who imitate their fellows, but those who have the love to sacrifice of their desires and inclinations for the meeting of the dire needs of their fellows. "Verily I say unto thee, inasmuch as thou hast done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, thou hast done it unto me."

Our task today as stewards of the Kingdom of God is summed up in the words of Jowett when he said, "Our task is the converting of life into truth", e. g., this life and that life giving itself, its time, money, and energy—for the establishing of truth in the individual and society. You may be willing to give yourself to educate the world for peace. There are movements on foot in Germany and France, yes the world over, for the purpose of converting life into peace. Within our recent recollections a French-German assembly convened for discussion. The surging emotion of good will here became so intense that the French citizens present removed their jewelry—precious ornaments—and presented them en masse to the German patriots present. Some time later the Germans contemplated a beautifully symbolic act, and it was accordingly carried out. Ornamental trees were purchased with the dividends secured from the sale of this jewelry, and these trees were planted around the base of a French cathedral. On the day of the transplanting there was a French representative and a German representative with each tree engaged in the task of transplanting. Oh what a wonderful example of good will! The converting of life into truth! Come thou and follow me.

Sharing With Others I Kings 17:12-16

The Story of Billy and His Friends
(In Four Parts. Part I)

When Billy Brown was ten years old he and his parents moved from the big city of Chicago to a very little town called Woodville. Now Billy was one of those fortunate or shall we say unfortunate little boys who had gotten in the habit of having everything that he asked for. If he said, "Dad, I wish I had a bicycle" or "Mother, I think that roller skates are the nicest things that a boy could have", why then, just as though he had been sitting on the magic wishing carpet, the bicycle or the roller skates appeared.

Billy loved his bicycle, his skates, his scooter, his pony, and all his other playthings and toys. He liked to keep them nice and clean and in order. When he lived in Chicago he had several little boy chums with whom he skated or rode or played at some other game. Each of them had his own machinery and toys, so each brought his own bicycle or skates when they played.

The very first evening after everything was unpacked and in order in the new Woodville home, Billy got out his scooter and went down the street on a merry ride. He was missing his old friends but he thought, "I'll soon find someone else to skate and play with." He rode all the way through the town and he saw several boys that he thought he would like but none of them were doing things that he was used to doing. Some were playing baseball but he had never done much of that in Chicago, it was mostly the bigger boys that did that, there. Some were playing marbles but Billy did not know much about that either, so he just rode on by all of them. He scooted all over the town and home again without seeing another boy on a scooter car.

The next afternoon Billy got out his bicycle and the same thing happened that had happened the day before. He did not see another small boy in town with a bicycle. One or two of the big grown-up boys had bicycles but he couldn't offer to run a race with them.

On the next day it was the pony that Billy rode, and then roller skates and so on day after day. And each time he came home looking a little more unhappy. He did not know how to play with the other boys of Woodville for he did not know their games and none of them seemed to do any of the things that he had learned to enjoy with his city chums.

The thing that Billy did not realize was that the other little boys of Woodville were watching him and wishing that they could do the things that he was doing. When they saw him they wished that they had toys like his.

Things got worse and worse. Billy was so lonesome yet he rode right by the rest of the boys and the rest of the boys wished that they could take a ride on some of his vehicles or his pony. But they couldn't, so they began to say nasty things like, "He thinks he's it, showing off all his new expensive toys," or "Billy Brown is a sissy, he rides around while other boys play baseball and fight and everything."

It is hard to tell how long this unhappy situation might have kept up if Billy's mother hadn't taken things into her own hands. She called up some of the mothers who had called on her in her new home and said to them, "Would you help me invite all of the little boys of this town up to my house this afternoon? I want to surprise Billy."

And Billy was surely surprised that afternoon for when he started to go out the front door, there were all of the boys that he had longed to know coming into his house. He smiled at them and invited them in. Then he ran to his mother and said, "What can I do with all of these boys, I don't know how to play their games?"

Mother smiled and said, "Why not let them use all of your toys and everything and maybe they'll teach you their games?"

So Billy shared his toys and the Woodville boys shared their games and that afternoon was but a sample of many happy days that followed.

Then one day a little colored boy appeared in Woodville. What do you think that Billy and his friends will do about him?

An African Letter for Our Children

Bozoum par Bangui,
 Afrique Eq., Francaise,
 August 9th, 1927.

Dear Boys and Girls:

Two months of school have passed in Kare Land and very happy and exciting ones they proved to be to your little black brothers and sisters who for the first time were permitted to have a pencil and slate or copy book all for their very own. Of course there were some very curious designs made the first few days, with letters and figures upside down and crossways, nevertheless to them they appeared very wonderful.

I wish you boys and girls could visit their school some morning and hear them recite their lesson. You must not forget that they are being taught in the French language and not in their own mother tongue, a language altogether foreign to them. They must read and write in it as well as add and subtract, but we find these children to be good linguists and this is a great aid to them.

Most all of these children have accepted Christ and stated their desire to preach the gospel when their three years of schooling is completed. Along with their secular work they are being taught two hours of Bible every day. They love these Bible hours and look forward to them with much joy.

Too, one long week they were without food. Can you imagine 35 hungry children and us without one basket of flour to give them? Well, this happened to be the case at Bassai. Not only the school children were suffering from hunger but many from the villages were without food, as the government is demanding so much manioc to be brought to the Government Posts. Now these little tots' black faces shone when they saw 13 baskets of flour waiting for them on Friday evening! One little fellow was so overjoyed that the tears ran down his cheeks. I don't believe any of you boys and girls in America know what it is to suffer from hunger, but we know you will remember these children in your prayers that our Father may supply their every need. Perhaps this may never happen again as these children are working in the garden every day after school hours and I am sure we shall have plenty of food for them.

I know you will pray earnestly for these boys and girls that they may ever be bright shining jewels for our Lord.

O Kare Land, dear Kare Land,
 As in the hottest clime I stand;
 We work and pray without delay,
 And hear our lessons every day;
 And then go on his love to sing,
 So teach these tribes of Christ our King.

Yours for Africa,
MRS. ORVILLE D. JOBSON.

Krypton and Lost Creek, Kentucky

It was the privilege of the writer to labor with the Brethren both at Krypton and Lost Creek, Kentucky in a short meeting.

We went first to Krypton where Brother Fred Kinzie is pastor. It was a real pleasure to return to the field after an absence of eight years and to meet the people, with many of whom we had labored for six years from the beginning of the mission. But it was a greater joy to see how the people loved and stood by Brother and Sister Kinzie just as they had done by us when we were there. The people look upon them as true prophets of God, and after spending a week with them in the field, I am convinced that the people have it right.

Yes, we did enjoy meeting with old friends it is true, and the liberal way in which they dedicated so many of their chickens to the ministry, and especially the last day when they came together with the tables groaning with so many good things to eat. But above all this, we rejoiced most because of the ready response for the Word. How our hearts rejoiced to see so many come out, many of them reconsecrating their lives while all pledged to stand by the old Book, and the work. Certainly Brother Kinzie had it right when he stated he had been working under a handicap by not having a list of the members. We believe this new list of membership will prove a blessing.

Those who are acquainted with the work in the mountains of Kentucky know, (and those who are not are unable to judge) that the hope of the work there is largely with the young people, and that the mission school along with the work is the secret of success. In the same way that modernism, skepticism, and infidelity are being spread wholesale through schools over the land to day, the Gospel can be spread there. And may God help us to spread it where we can. The work in the mountains will never be fully self-supporting while you and I live; we had just as well forget that part of it. But there is no good reason to go off and let a man drown simply because he is unable to help himself. May God help us all to rally more to their support.

As we observed the work here at Krypton, there is some real foundation work being done. Miss Haddix is helping in the school work there.

From here we went to Riverside Institute for a two weeks' meeting where Brother Drushal is pastor, and superintendent of the work. Here as with Krypton, decorations were still in evidence of the Decoration Day flood. The marvel is that out of such a chaotic condition, they have accomplished so much.

Here we found a fine corps of workers and teachers, about 12 or 14 in all, gathered together from the Pacific to the Atlantic. Busy? Yes, but not too busy for the use of that all important key that unlocks the portals of heaven and lets God's blessings down—PRAYER. It would do your soul good to hear many of those boys and girls that are there in school pray. This undoubtedly is one reason why so many came out during the meeting separating themselves from the world. Brethren, of this one thing I am certain, that Romans 12:1-2 and 2 Corinthians 6:14-18 are still in the Book, waiting for emphasis in these lax days. God here is not asking the world to separate, but he is pleading for the worldly church to come out and lay aside their tawdry garments for a robe of righteousness.

However, on the last Sunday afternoon the Lord's tables revealed one fact, that there had been some separation and personal examination, and that the Word had not returned void. It was a beautiful sight to see such a large host of that student body surrounding the tables of the Lord.

If the Lord tarries, our prayer is that the Lord will continue to use Brother and Sister Drushal, together with the workers that may come and go, for the teaching and the preaching of the gospel to a people who are still open to receive the truth. Let us help to continue the good work.

J. S. COOK.

Winchester, Virginia

The writer is long-distance correspondent for this church this one time by request. It is a pleasure to share good news concerning one of our churches that is being assisted by the Home Mission Board and also the Maryland-Virginia District Board. Many are anxious to hear of worthwhile returns from investments made.

The recent Rally Day was a big success, 152 being present. It was on the last Sunday in October. My informant says: "Brother Rohart surely had a good program fixed up, everyone said it was the best they ever saw on Rally Day. There were 81 under 14 years of age, 9 babies, and 17 young people from 15 to 21 years." That is a fine record when we remember that this church is not yet two years old. May the Sunday school continue to enjoy such splendid growth, for that will insure the success of the work.

The church has secured Dr. Charles A. Bame to lead them in an evangelistic campaign beginning Sunday, November 20, and the word that comes to us follows: "Everything seems fine for our meeting. Everyone is looking forward to it. We think we are going to have the best meeting Winchester has ever had. Brother Rohart has been working and has everyone talking about it. The evangelist's picture is all over town and has been in the papers. Pray for our meeting."

Surely every reader will respond to that appeal to pray for the success of that campaign. Brethren Bame and Rohart will make a fine team and with loyal members of the church working and praying surely great success will crown the efforts. Prayer coupled with earnest work wins real victories. Let our whole brotherhood pray for the salvation of many souls.

G. C. CARPENTER.

Christ had his songs, though it was night with him; though his face was marred, and his countenance had lost the luster of earthly happiness, yet sometimes it was lit up with a matchless splendor of unparalleled satisfaction, as he thought upon the recompense of the reward; and in the midst of the congregation sang his praise unto God. In this the Lord Jesus is a blessed picture of his church on earth.—Charles Hadden Spurgeon.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Muncie, Indiana

This is one of the new fields opened in the last few years and is making commendable progress. They have purchased their own property and made over a large house into a neat looking chapel. This is serving them temporarily, until they are in position to erect a new building. They have already accumulated a good sized building fund and are expecting to build in the near future.

Brother George Jones is the pastor and is doing good work and well liked. Muncie is a good industrial city and we should have a church there to take care of our people who move in from other places. I enjoyed my stay and the people responded well to the college, considering their numbers and being a mission church.

The total gift was $620.00.

LIMESTONE, TENNESSEE

Since our last report from this place we have had two very welcome visitors at our church. The first one was Sister Grace Srack who was here in the summer. She was here from Thursday to Monday and gave us some very inspiring talks at the church both along Bible lines and also on the Kentucky mission work. Her visit was cut short because of the flood.

October 22 Brother M. D. Early, also of the Kentucky mission was loaned us by the Board and the Mission for a two weeks' evangelistic meeting closing November 6th. On the evening of the 5th Holy Communion was observed. The quietness and sacredness of the hour was much enjoyed by God's dear children.

There being some trouble in the church at the close of the first week of the meeting the last step of Matthew 18 was taken to settle the matter by calling the whole church together with Brother Early present. We believe God placed his approval on the meeting and it went off in a fine spirit we believe. We pray God for his grace that every one may forget every harassing thing and that we may reckon ourselves dead to it and alive in Christ Jesus, all working together in our appointed ways.

We do thank Brother Early for his work among us. His sermons were each most excellent and timely. We could but feel that one who can preach such truth with such power and zeal should be at it all the time. That more did not yield to these great messages is their own fault. But we do feel to praise God for the excellent weather and good regular crowds, for getting our troubles settled, and for the three very precious young people that were added to the church by baptism. Some are under conviction, some are considering coming into the church. May God bring these also. Many Christian lives were uplifted by these services.

Brother Early made a warm place for himself in the hearts of the people here as the free will offering showed.

We thank any of you who have prayed for us here and for this meeting. And we do covet an interest in your prayers as we labor together in the church here, having no other desire than to please Christ in word, thought, and work. We are somewhat removed from the center of the brotherhood but the Brethren church as a whole is our church, all it owns we possess, all it does is our own work. We are wholly in it and of it and hope to be until the Lord comes. And no doubt his coming draweth nigh.

MARY PENCE.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The first unit of the First Brethren church was formally dedicated Sunday, November 6, following the afternoon service. The services of the day were largely attended and the interest was intensified with each service. It is estimated that more than 500 were served at the noon and evening dinners.

The services throughout were simple, yet impressive because of their simplicity.

The church had the work well in hand; there were no embarrassing pauses—every detail of the work was planned—each man knew the part he was to play and was on the job. Everything worked like newly oiled machinery—smoothly.

The pastor, Brother W. I. Duker, and Brother G. R. Rench were in charge. Brother Rench's address and his work were enjoyed by all. He conducted the money raising campaigns and presented the keys of the church to the trustees—Clarence Cripe, Rollo Love and J. F. Fields.

Special music was furnished during the afternoon by the Bass Clef club, under the direction of Mrs. Franc Silkwood Grover. The special morning and evening musical offerings were by the choir of 30 voices directed by L. S. Pippenger, and the pianist, Mrs. Fern Gilbert, and the male quartette of the church—Mr. Pippenger, Hal LeFevre, William Hall and Robert Listenberger.

The ground for the first unit of the new church was broken June 1 by Brother Peter Pontius, who for twenty-seven years has been a worker in the church. This was followed July 24 by the laying of the cornerstone. Thus we have anxiously watched the laying of almost every brick and stone, now complete in itself—yet not finished.

This unit will seat 565 in the main room. Off the audience room are six large class rooms, three of which are arranged to open in the main room. To this unit is included a large kitchen, (36x36 feet) with modern equipment, a large spacious dining room, a baptistry and dressing rooms. On each side of main entrance there is a large class room and a rest room and other conveniences.

Perhaps some may have their misgivings when they learn the first unit is what is commonly called a basement. Kindly reserve your comment until you have seen how neatly everything is planned, and how comfortable we are in our worship. We heard one remark, "This is the most wonderful basement I have seen." Another, "It is the wisest and safest way to build." And still another, "It proves what a wonderful place a basement can be made."

REV. W. I. DUKER, Pastor

The estimated cost of the first unit is $28,000—the goal for the day was set for $15,000, which would clear the building of all indebtedness. We went over the top big. Pledges and cash subscriptions amounting to $17,562.83 will more than take care of all obligations.

While many individual pledges were given, the greater part of the pledges were made by organized units and classes.

We thank the adjoining churches for both their presence and their many substantial gifts—notwithstanding the fact that most of them have great burdens of their own. It seemed they have long since learned, "It is more blessed to give than receive."

It is always a comfort to know a feeling of helpfulness prevails among our seven churches.

The business men of our city responded liberally, as did many a private citizen to press his good will by his gifts.

Every gift whether great or small is appreciated, for though a "widow's mite" expresses a kindly feeling and a willingness to help in a great work.

So a great day is passed and already we are making history in our new church.

The First Brethren church was organized in Elkhart in 1899 by the Rev. J. H. Swihart with a membership of 33. The present membership is 360.

The building committee consisted of J. Sigerfoos, chairman; Clarence Cripe, Rollo S. Love, Jacob Fields, Hattie Kegerreis, Naomi Wilson, Nicholas Mast.

After the first obligation is lifted, the members hope to start working toward the second unit and completion of the church proper. The finished building, it is estimated, will cost about $50,000.

Dedication Day is being followed by a week's service, conducted by adjoining pastors. The following being the schedule:

Monday evening, Rev. H. F. Stuckman of the Goshen church; Tuesday evening, Rev. N. V. Leatherman, South Bend; Wednesday evening, Rev. E. M. Riddle, Warsaw; Thursday evening, Rev. E. A. Duker, pastor of the Ardmore church, South Bend; Friday evening, Rev. S. M. Whetstone, Nappan.

At this writing four have made the great confession.

ALTOONA, PENNSYLVANIA

It has been a long time since Evangelical readers have had a message from the First Brethren church of this city. This long silence on our part is not to be interpreted to mean inactivity, for we have been busy—very busy enlarging the borders of our church and through it trying to do our part in the building of the Kingdom of God, the biggest enterprise in the world. It is not a small thing to keep church life a church activity from growing monotonous.

The Completed First Unit of the New Elkhart Church

a weariness to the flesh for some; to others the sermons and the prayers and even the hymns become nothing but a dreary drivel of words. In this day people are accustomed to the spectacular in life. A prize fight will draw together one hundred and fifty thousand people who are willing to dispose of three million dollars, hard earned money for the privilege of seeing two "bullies" plug each other for a period of twenty to thirty minutes. And what of the "Movie", automobile races, flying through space at the rate of two hundred and fifty miles an hour, football, etc. These things have accustomed people to the exciting and the spectacular in life, hence the average church service is a bore to some people, tame, dull, dry,—and they stay at home listening to the radio. But the Kingdom of God does not come that way, and so, with it all, we keep alive, busy with the Lord's work.

Long since I have learned that the church exists for one thing only,—preaching Jesus Christ and making him dominant in every department of life, that the "most certain and glorious fact about Christianity is that it centers in a PERSON", it is the religion of a great personality, and therefore a living religion, adapted alike to men and women of every age. And it is the glory of our religion that it is a life rather than a dogma, a life that can be lived here and now in the flesh. It is this that keeps church life from becoming monotonous, a weariness to the flesh. Life is interesting; its chief characteristic is growth, and growth is always interesting,—really the most interesting thing in the world is growth. What is more interesting than watching a baby grow?

Pardon me, gentle reader, this is not church news, and it is church news I meant to write, but my mind drifted. Prior to our Communion service last May it was my privilege to baptize thirteen, all young people except three who were heads of families. The year before (1926) nineteen young people were received into full membership by baptism and confirmation. Saturday before our last Communion service (November 6) four earnest young people were baptized. At this Communion the attendance was about eighty-five per cent of the membership, which, considering that our people are so widely separated and not always of easy access to the church, we think was very good. Others also have been added to our number, some by letter, some by renewing their covenant relations with the church. The church maintains all of the organizations usually found in a Brethren church. Woman's Missionary Society which is quite active, Sisterhood Girls so splendidly "mothered" and cared for by Sister Dora Gearhart, very efficient in her line of service. We also maintain a Girls' Friendly Society, a sort of stepping stone to Sisterhood Girls, though many of the latter are members of the Girls' Friendly. The pastor regularly conducts a training class, young girls in training for leadership. In the near future a similar class of boys will be conducted. It is for this reason that at present we do not have a Christian Endeavor society. It is hoped however that early in the year we shall be able to report such an organization.

This church is on the budget system and makes yearly contributions to Foreign, Home, and State Missions; also to other outside activities and benevolences, Superannuated Ministers' Fund, Old Folks' Home, etc. We now have in preparation a "Play" entitled, "A Little Maid of Israel", based on the story of the healing of Naaman, the Syrian leper, as given in the fifth chapter of Second Kings, the chief character of which is the little captive girl.

Wednesday evening preceding our last Communion service the pastor gave an exposition of this service as it is believed and practiced in the Brethren church. It was a blessed and profitable hour we spent together. On this Wednesday evening (November 16) the pastor will give, instead of the regular prayer and Bible reading service, a blackboard exercise and Bible reading on Christian baptism as it is understood by the Brethren church.

I have now passed the fourth year of my pastorate in this place, and for some of the time it has been a very delightful period of my spiritual pilgrimage. In this church are to be found a goodly number of faithful and loyal people, "sound in the faith," loyal to their own church, yet in loving fellowship with those not of our own communion. Presumably, I have had the usual number of weddings and funerals. Within the last decade this church has suffered serious loss by death, among them, Elder W. A. Harmon, L. Z. Replogle, wife and daughter, Deacon David Smouse, Elder Wilt, Sherman Myers, and now Sister Smouse at the ripe old age of 85; also Sister Smaltz, than whom the church has had no more faithful member.

One year ago the pastor was given a very agreeable surprise when, on his birthday anniversary, without any knowledge whatever of what was "doing" he was greeted with an unusual number of people at the Wednesday evening prayer service hour. Brother J. L. Cashman was in charge and a bit of biographical sketch of the pastor was given, which, to this very day, remains a mystery as to how the information was secured. It was a delightful evening and its memories still live with us.

"Beloved, ye see how long a letter I have written with mine own hand." So said Paul; so say I. A little more frequently hereafter,—and more briefly. A. D. GNAGEY.

What a change takes place in the common street when the hero passes by. A new light shines everywhere, and for many days, of the streets of the city, the people will say, "A hero passed this way." When the Lord of Glory came down to earth he left behind him such memories that even yet the path of his feet is revered by countless millions. The whole world looks different since Jesus passed this way.

feated by the hot assaults of the devil, but by the slow, crushing, glacier-like mass of thousands and thousands of indifferent nobodies. God's causes are never destroyed by being blown up, but by being sat upon. It is not the violent and anarchical whom we have to fear in the war for human progress, but the slow, the staid, the respectable; and the danger of these lies in their real skepticism. Though it would abhor articulately confessing that God does nothing, it virtually means so by refusing to share manifest opportunities for serving him." The "other man" had found the King along these paths. In serving them—my fellows—thou hast served me. Wilfred T. Grenfell says of his own decision, "If there is one thing about which I never have any question, it is the decision and endeavor to follow the Christ does for men what nothing else on earth can do. Without stultifying our reason, it develops all that makes men God-like." And Grenfell's way was the Christ-way—in loving service, giving his time and energies for his fellows. In giving his life for others he had really found it. He had converted life into truth.

Jesus taught us to make every human interest we touch as precious as our own.

"I worked for men," my Lord will say
When we meet at the end of the King's highway.

"I walked with the beggar along the road,
I kissed the bondsman stung by the goad,
I bore my half of the partners load.
And what did you?" my Lord will say,
As you traveled along the King's highway?"

"I made life sweet," my Lord will say
When we met at the end of the King's highway.

"I smoothed the path where the thorns annoy,

I gave the mother back her boy,
I mended the children's broken toy,
And what did you?" my Lord will say,
"As you traveled along the King's highway?"

A Prayer

Lord Jesus, help us to love men even as thou didst love them. Give us this day the spirit of thy compassion. Keep us from wounding any heart or adding to the burden of any life; and if, when this day is done, we be privileged to feel the joy of having cheered some toiler at his task, thine be the praise and glory forever. Amen.

CONEMAUGH, PENNSYLVANIA

On the "Air"—Please "stand by" for report. Vacation time is over, and we have taken a fresh start. Our W. M. S. held a musical September 29, for the purpose of raising their pledge for the College Endowment. The Missionary ladies each gave a dollar, and the audience a silver offering. The Sisterhood girls surprised their mothers by coming in on the collection. The W. M. S. met on Tuesday evening, November 1st, and voted to pay off their pledge. As they belong to the Sunday school they are helping in three different ways in the Endowment. But this church loves the college and always has students there. This year we had three, but one of them had to come home because of illness, Ralph Staley (our pastor's son) and Rose Snyder are still there.

Just a minute—You have not "tuned in" on "College News", but in a report from Conemaugh, Pennsylvania. We held our quarterly communion service on October 23, with a large attendance, every seat being filled. Half of the attendance was young people.

On that evening we dropped into the Christian Endeavor meeting of our church and was pleasantly surprised. There were nineteen present, eight of whom can lead in prayer. In this fast age we do not find many young folks taking an interest in serious things. We held Rally Day in the Sunday school and though we did not reach our goal, we were encouraged by the attendance.

We have a newly organized Junior Sisterhood. Our Midweek Bible study and prayer meeting has a good average attendance. With deep regret we learned of the death of Orion Bowman and extend to his family and to the Dayton church our heartfelt sympathy in their great loss. Some of our people were at Winona the year that he served as moderator and have vivid memories of his value to the church, and share the feeling of loss. MRS. GEORGE C. WYKE, Corresponding Secretary.

MAURERTOWN, VIRGINIA

For some time we have been missing from the pages of the Evangelist. The usual excuse of being busy might be truthfully made, but maybe other things have also entered in. It is not a case of nothing to say, but perhaps not wanting to rush into print, that has kept us quiet. The editor goes after us hard about this matter and so we do loosen up a little to advise the brotherhood how we are going here in the beautiful Shenandoah valley. I hardly know where to begin or what to say, we have been going so fast and it has been such a long time since last we wrote for the paper. Suffice it to say that progress has been noted all along our way. The folks here have a mind to work and attend services and that makes it nice for the one who is called to lead. Of course our pathway has not been one of roses all the way, but the flowers have been far more in evidence than the thorns. Perhaps I should not tell too much about the kindly way in which the folks here care for their pastor or I might be looking for a job soon. Yet I must say that ever since we have been on this field, and we are now in our fourth year of service here, we have been treated with the finest kind of respect and consideration that could be shown a pastor anywhere. That has made us put forth more and greater effort to show appreciation of all this fine spirit. Many the sack, package, basket or can of good things for the physical man that has been left by our kind parishioners and friends of the community. For all this we feel very grateful and hope that our efforts might in some way show this gratitude.

Our services continue to hold up in attendance. The Sunday school is a live one and a gratification to the genial superintendent, our good brother T. Glenn Locke. The W. M. S. and S. M. M. societies keep on the move as do the C. E. societies, of which we have three. The ladies placed a new carpet in the church a few months ago and the men of the Alexander Mack Bible class, taught by the pastor, met the sisters by installing a new lighting outfit. These improvements along with some others, such like a new stairway to the basement, filling in the roadway to the church, etc., cost several hundreds of dollars, but all have been paid and we move along on easy financial standing.

We hold our communion services semi-annually and at the last service, the third Sunday of October, we had about two hundred twenty-five at the tables. This was by far the largest number that ever communed here at one time. We look for a larger number next time. That is as it should be. And what a fine spirit was evidenced at that communion service. We were more than overcrowded, but the ushers did one of the finest pieces of work in their line I have yet seen and the commotion was almost nil.

Perhaps we should hark back to a work we were privileged to assist in putting across last spring. At the close of the school term we commenced a meeting in the Narrow Passage church, a community church house, seven miles south of Maurertown. Here we preached the Word for two weeks and two nights and had forty make the good confession. Of these we baptized thirty-four, twenty-six of whom united with the Maurertown church, the others all uniting either with some other Brethren church or others of the churches represented in this community work. Here our eldest daughter assisted by presiding at the piano and the next in age by playing the cornet at each service. Even the two youngest daughters got into the work by singing several duets that helped carry the Gospel message to the hearers. Then at the close of this meeting we journeyed over into the Fort Valley where the elder daughters and I assisted Brother Dodson, a lay preacher who is caring for the Trinity church at present. Here there was success also, and as a result of the work done during the two weeks' meeting we baptized twenty-one more. Since that two others have been baptized by the writer, making a total of fifty-eight since June first.

Our latest effort along evangelistic lines was just last month, when we journeyed over to Linwood, Maryland, where we held forth for two weeks. Rather we tried to hold forth for two weeks. The first three nights we were totally rained out, the heaviest and longest rain storm in the history of the Baltimore weather bureau taking up four nights and nearly four days' time in continual down-pour. Then the funeral services for Brother Shaver called us home one day of the first week. So we did get started and with one week of uninterrupted service we had eight to come out on the Lord's side. Others will undoubtedly come as a result of the effort put forth by the folks there. Their good pastor, Elder L. H. Brumbaugh of the Church of the Brethren, was a capital yoke-fellow. He divides his time between preaching for our folks at Linwood and teaching in the Western Maryland College at Westminster, twelve miles distant. This does not give him the best opportunity, but he is alive and puts in all the time he can in looking after the interests of the Brethren. The folks at Linwood are of the finest to be found. They treated us royally, and the good pastor and wife gave us a fine place to make our headquarters in the parsonage. Perhaps we might get another chance to serve these folks when so many deterring things might not enter in. Thanks to you dear folks. You surely did not send us away empty handed.

We are now on the eve of our fall meetings, in fact will be in the midst of them when this appears in print. Pray for us that we might have freedom in the Word and that folks might be built up in Christ Jesus. Then will come Christmas and its special effort after which we will be in preparation for our trip to the National Capital where Brother Kent and his good folks have called us to assist them in special revival effort. Indeed, folks, we do solicit an interest in your prayers that we might be used of the Lord to the salvation of many souls and strengthening others in the way that is right and true. We reciprocate by praying for all God's works and workers everywhere.

E. L. MILLER.

SECOND BRETHREN CHURCH, LOS ANGELES, CALIFORNIA

Our long-looked-forward-to day has come and gone. We made a drive for numbers that we might bring many to hear the Word for God said, "My word shall not return unto me void, but shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it" (Isa. 55:11). This day was our regular Homecoming Day, Dollar Day and Anniversary of the dedication of our new church. At this time our new pastor, A. V. Kimmell, took charge of the work here. The attendance at Sunday school was 569 and a very substantial offering was given. Families brought baskets of good things to eat and dinner was served in the lower auditorium. During the afternoon a service was held at which Rev. Kimmell gave a brief history of this church, which was the outgrowth of a tent meeting held hereby in which he had part. It was a day long to be remembered.

Rev. Broad who had been our supply for some time, has left to take up the work in Spokane, Washington, from which Brother Kenneth Monroe had been called to take a place on the faculty of Ashland College. Since our last writing another one of our young men has been ordained to the ministry, Brother Leo Polman.

It was a great pleasure to have Dr. Jacobs fill our pulpit one Sunday evening while here on the Coast. After listening to him we felt that our college had at its head a man of sterling worth and Christian principles, for which we thank the Lord in these days of apostasy.

Brother Kenneth Monroe also filled our pulpit morning and evening as he stopped over to visit his parents on his way East.

Another great pleasure our people had was that of having Brother Alva McClain with us for two Sundays, bringing forceful Gospel messages.

Pray for the success of the work here as we go forward under the leadership of our new pastor, Brother A. V. Kimmell.

LILLY M. MONROE.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

SPECIAL NOTICE TO PASTORS

Several dozen pastors failed to notify the Home Mission Secretary, by return post card, how many coin envelopes, tracts, etc., they would need for their THANKSGIVING offering. Perhaps your card did not reach you. Only in several instances have we sent the material without request from the pastor. A number of churches have the budget system, but even those could doubtless make use of this material to boost for the offering, that some individuals would make even if the budget system is used. A number of churches receive the offering later on because of some special meeting or event that would interfere at Thanksgiving time. Will not these pastors please return the card stating what material they will need, for we have sufficient printed to cover the brotherhood and would like to have them used? Let us make good use of our mission money.

EDITORIAL

The Day of the Golden Rule

We have devoted the front page this week to the interests of the thousands of orphaned children of the Near East. Other interests made it impossible for us to give the space in an earlier issue, and even so it may be that many of our churches and individual members will find their program so full as not to be able to give attention to this call at the set time. But whether December fourth or a later day, we believe the vast majority will endeavor to do their bit to the support of these children who are dependent upon American friends for their sustenance, protection and training. The Near East Relief does not ask for a big offering, but requests that we eat a simple meal on that day, instead of loading our tables until they groan, and that a contribution of the amount saved thereby, and any additional that we may care to include, be sent to that agency that these parentless boys and girls may have food throughout the year. The very eating of such a meal while having in mind these thousands of needy children of Greece, Armenia and the Holy Land, will help to warm our hearts with sympathy for them and make us to realize more keenly our responsibility for being neighbor to all the unfortunate, whose need is brought to our attention, though far removed by space and ties of blood.

The Near East Relief gives strict account to the government for all the funds it collects and disburses, and many testimonies are received of its wise exercise of the stewardship entrusted to it. The need is real and will be until these children grow to the point of self-dependence, and the responsibility is ours of seeing the job finished. Let us be reminded that there are hundreds of small children still to be given health and happiness, and hundreds of older boys and girls that must be taught trades and crafts, by means of which they will be able to support themselves when they are thrown out upon their own resources. More than half the children in the orphanages are still under fourteen years of age and must be sheltered and taught until they are old enough to meet life independently. The Near East Relief has succeeded splendidly in arousing initiative and independence in its charges, a thing hard to do in institutions. The degree of success achieved in this line is the more remarkable when we realize that after all it is only boys and girls they are dealing with and that these youthful lives are entering upon careers at an age when our American sons and daughters are still given parental care. The Near East Relief is therefore trying to keep a friendly eye upon them for some time after they leave the various orphanages, to make sure they are not exploited, and that they may feel that for every one of them is some one to whom they may bring their problems and difficulties, some one who cares as a father and mother would.

It is for all these activities, and many more that cannot be pointed out, that donations of Golden Rule Sunday will go. You are asked to do in the face of this need what you would want others to do, if it were your children in such circumstances instead of the refugees of the Near East. That will make it Golden Rule Day, and whether it be on a Sunday or a week-day that you partake of this fellowship meal, let it be in the spirit of "As ye would that men should do unto you." Send contributions to Near East Relief, 151 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y.

The Tithe is Good Business

That is, it is good business for the church. That is the lesson that the Layman Company sets forth in a tabloid, presenting a picture of the two high towers, the Woolworth Building in New York and the Wrigley Building in Chicago and pointing out that "when a business can get money from the many, in regular, frequent, small amounts, there is no limit but the sky to that business." That has been literally true with regard to these two great concerns as well as with others that might be mentioned. Wherever you go you will find Wrigley's chewing gum and Woolworth's "Five and Ten Cent Stores," and the almost unlimited success of these two business concerns is due to one great secret. Those two mighty towers that stretch their greatness into the sky so far above all surrounding buildings, are fitting symbols of the superiority of the business principle that made them what they are. That principle, that secret, in the words of the Layman tabloid, is this: "Woolworth and Wrigley have taught the crowd how to spend money steadily without feeling it."

That is what the church needs, in some manner, to teach its membership. It has depended too much on "drives", high pressure methods and big gifts to finance the Kingdom interests. They have seemed necessary to meet emergencies, but they are too abnormal to last; they are too unnatural to bring continuous response. Emergencies furnish stimuli that bring people up to high tension, but they soon become wearied under the strain of the thrill; the emotions relax and the interest ebbs away. And when the reaction has gotten under way, it is difficult to prevent a swing to the opposite extreme. What we need more than "drives" is a continuous inflow of comparatively small amounts as measured off by the tithe, which would largely do away with the necessity for "drives". The reason we have been so frequently confronted with emergencies that call for high pressure methods is the haphazard method of our giving unto the Lord. We have been giving irregularly, carelessly, and much of the time nothing at all. It will do us well to learn the wisdom of the world, as Jesus himself pointed out on occasion. The principle that brought such marvelous success to these business institutions of the world will also bring unmeasured success to the church of Christ. "Tithing puts into the business of partnership with God this same secret of success; small amounts, from many people, paid regularly and paid unceasingly." Get all the children of God to giving; get them to giving freely and gladly, regularly and proportionately; get them to giving as a life habit and as a part of their daily practice, and consider that along with such increase in giving will go a like increase in consecration and service, and the church will be so equipped and empowered that it will have "no limit but the sky". There will be no reaction to such a program; there will be no letting down to such giving and consequently there will be no emergencies that must be met by "drives". It is good business, and the only kind we ought to employ in the interest of the Kingdom of God.

A Great Missionary Convention

One of the most outstanding experiences which Christian students covet and the opportunity of which comes only once during a college career, is attendance at the great quadrennial convention of the Student Volunteer Movement for Foreign Missions. We had the privilege of attending such a convention during the Christmas holidays of 1913-14 at Kansas City, and we shall never cease to be thankful for the spiritual uplift, the vitalizing thrill and the enlarged vision that we experienced on that occasion. It is therefore with sincere pleasure that we bring to the attention of our young people the approaching Tenth Quadrennial Convention to be held at Detroit, Michigan, in the Masonic Auditorium, December 28, 1927 to January 1, 1928. And it is our earnest hope that a goodly number of Brethren students, particularly, of course, the volunteers, not only those in Ashland College, but others who may be in various colleges and seminaries throughout the states, may have the privilege of attending this significant convention.

It is expected that there will be in attendance three thousand five hundred student delegates, representing nearly all the colleges in the United States and Canada, several hundred students from other countries, together with missionaries, mission board secretaries, editors of the religious press and others. The grand total will be five thousand—the capacity limit of the auditorium.

Not only will there be such outstanding missionary speakers as Robert E. Speer, John R. Mott, Sherwood Eddy, Albert Schweitzer (musician, physician and world famed missionary from Africa) and W. E. S. Holland (author of "The Indian Outlook" and well known in British Student Movement groups), but also Christian nationals of other lands, such as Francis Wei (President of Central China Christian University, Wuchang, China). Other features of the convention will be about thirty simultaneous discussion groups where missionary problems will be considered in open forum, demonstrations of various methods of missionary education, pageants, poster exhibits, dramatic presentations, and so on. The opportunity to meet people from the four corners of the earth will be unequalled.

118 Years of Bible Distribution

The New York Bible Society will celebrate one hundred and eighteen years of Bible distribution at its Anniversary Service Bible Sunday evening, December fourth, in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church, Fifth Avenue and 55th Street, Rev. Dr. Henry Howard will deliver the anniversary sermon.

The date, December fourth, is the exact anniversary of the day on which the original society was organized 118 years ago. Because of the historic significance and the importance of the great work that the society has maintained invitations to the anniversary service have been extended to President Coolidge, members of the Cabinet, every State Governor in the Union, the mayor of our city, city officials and many others prominent in civic and national life.

The work of the New York Bible Society while carried on in this metropolitan center is national and world wide in its influence. Nearly a million copies of the Scriptures in 67 languages are annually circulated to the immigrants, the seamen, the sick in our hospitals, the prisoners, and in the raised type among the blind.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

CHRISTMAS IS THE TIME FOR WHITE GIFT OFFERINGS. Do not forget the noble work of the National Sunday School Association. Make your offering a real vote of confidence.

A belated communion announcement tells of a service to be held at Rittman, Ohio, December fourth, at 7 o'clock, with the usual invitation to those of like faith. Brother Floyd Sibert is the pastor.

Brother S. Lowman is now installed as pastor of the church at Portis, Kansas, and has been royally received and given substantial expressions of the congregation's favor. A revival just closed, with the pastor doing the preaching, resulted in nine received by baptism and one by renewal of covenant.

Harrah, Washington, the new mission point which the Home Board voted to take on this year, tells us through its correspondent some causes for thanksgiving. They are thankful for the support of the Home Mission Board, for the coming of Dr. J. C. Beal to be their pastor and for the gift of two lots on which a new church is already in process of erection. The indications are that this field has a bright outlook.

Brother R. I. Humbert, pastor of the church near Lake Odessa, Michigan, writes interestingly of the events of his parish. They have been favored with visits by a number of Brethren preachers, among which was Brother G. E. Drushal, who was their special speaker for Homecoming Day. The missionary spirit and thoughtfulness for others is being encouraged on the part of the church and its auxiliaries. One soul was recently received by baptism.

We have received a number of expressions of appreciation of our special Home Mission number of the Evangelist. We are glad for these kind words and wish to share the credit with Brethren Gearhart and Stuckman, officers of the Home Board, whose suggestions and financial support helped to make possible the special features. We sincerely hope the churches will give, if they have not already given, an offering such as shall be the signal to the Home Board to lead forward and we will follow.

We are glad to give advance notice of an announcement just received as we were going to press and which will find proper place in next week's paper. Brother Floyd Sibert, the faithful pastor of the mission church at Ellet, Ohio (Springfield Center), suburb of Akron, is asking pastors of Pennsylvania churches, having members in Akron, to send names of such members to him so that they may be looked up and their interest enlisted in the church at that place. Will not pastors, especially of Western Pennsylvania, please look over their membership lists and see if they may not have opportunity to cooperate at this point.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, makes his last report for Indiana churches this week, this being his canvass of the Clay City church, near Indianapolis and the Maple Grove group near Muncie. Brother D. A. C. Teeter is pastor of the Clay City congregation, where a courageous effort is being put forth to maintain the Whole Gospel. Maple Grove church has, as Brother Bell indicates, become the victim of a community change so complete that its future as a congregation is not bright. But the few remaining are faithful to the Word. The total gift reported this week is $851 which makes a grand total to date of $126,731.54.

Christian Endeavorers will find on the page devoted to their interests a good report from one of our live-wire Endeavor leaders of Cambria County, Pennsylvania. The organization that is being launched seems to promise renewed interest in Christian Endeavor in those parts. You may look for reports of further activity from that section. We dare say one reason for the renewed activity is the encouragement of Christian Endeavor pastors. That should be a hint to Endeavorers and their pastors in other parts. Brother E. M. Riddle, National President, is endeavoring to enlist a wider cooperation in making Christian Endeavor page of real interest and helpfulness. Stand by him and do your bit.

Miss Mary L. Emmert, who writes an interesting report of her itinerating trip, taken with Miss Tyson among the Banou tribe, says in an explanatory note: "We count these preaching tours as a great privilege, and they are a great joy to us." That is the spirit of the true missionary and it causes a thrill of satisfaction to sweep over us whenever we hear it expressed by our noble workers on the foreign fields. We are wondering, however, why we home-folks should take such delight in having our ears tickled with such expressions when we are so seldom willing to demonstrate that spirit in our service for Christ in the homeland. How much of hardship and weariness, sacrifice and persecution are we willing to endure that the Gospel may be extended in other hearts? The commendable consecration everywhere exemplified among our missionaries should be a challenge to the membership of the home church. Miss Emmert further says: "Every one is well at Yaloke and we trust at the other stations. We held a communion service here today with about 150 partaking. These are always times of blessing to us and the natives seem to feel strengthened by them, often quoting their participation as a forward step in their Christian lives."

GENERAL ARTICLES

Some Brethren Church Leaders of Yesterday, as I Knew Them

XII. Elder D. J. Bole

By Martin Shively

Not a few of the religious organizations, local or general, are the result of the conviction, courage, and ability of a single individual, as is quickly noted as one takes a bit of time to look into their history. In fact most if not all of them had their rise in this manner. Thus the splendid congregation, with its excellent equipment, in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, stands as a monument to the great devotion of the subject of this brief sketch. Following him was another, not a resident of the city,—Elder Henry Wise, who dedicated himself to the task of completing the work which Brother Bole had begun, and lived to see the work finished, and then passed on to join its real founder. To these two Brethren—Bole and Wise—this church stands as a memorial, and while both have gone into that rest that “remaineth for the people of God”, in the influence which that church exerts, they still live and work.

“Dan” had excellent blood in his veins, half Bole and the other half Goughnour, both families being high minded, religious leaders in the communities in which they lived. This advantage was greatly strengthened by the wife whom he had chosen to be his life partner, this wife being Anna Replogle, who came from a family of equal caliber as his own. This makes an excellent combination, and while some men fail in spite of it, most of the men who “make good” enter life with such advantage.

Brother Bole was born near Johnstown, Pennsylvania, in 1857, being brought up on a farm, and later becoming his father's assistant in the lumber business, until he was twenty years of age. Then he took employment with the Cambria Steel Company at Johnstown, where he was employed for ten years, coming then to Pittsburgh to take work with another concern engaged in the same line. He had united with the Brethren church at Conemaugh in 1886, a year before his removal to Pittsburgh, and had at once entered enthusiastically upon Christian work. Even when the change of residence made it impossible to attend the church of his choice, he did not waver in his religious activities, and for a time he found a place in which to work in a Baptist church of Pittsburgh, but his loyalty to his own convictions made it impossible to compromise, so he resigned the superintendency of the Sunday school and rented a hall on Liberty street, where he opened a Sunday school, having forty-three pupils at the opening. From this humble beginning the Pittsburgh Brethren church had its origin. Brother Bole was superintendent of the school, of course, and in the absence of a pastor, he felt it to be incumbent upon himself to explain and expound the word, a work which revived in him an earlier call to the work of the ministry, a call which had been denied. Four years after the opening of this Sunday school Brother Bole was ordained to the Christian ministry, with Brethren Brown,

ELDER DANIEL J. BOLE, Founder of the Pittsburgh Church

Mackey and Spanogle officiating. After his ordination he became the pastor of the little flock in name as well as in fact and during the two years of his service, seventy-four additions to the church were among the visible results of the work. And during all this time, he continued in the employ of the great steel company with which he had begun when he came to the city. As soon as the growing congregation was thought strong enough to support a pastor he gave up the leadership, and Brother Darling became his successor, though he continued to be the real leader until his death in 1907. He was a man of unusually fine personality, splendid appearance, indomitable energy and unswerving conviction. His energy and intelligence made it possible to have won big place in the financial world, but his church came first. His personality and reputation for honesty and integrity gave him the confidence of all who knew him, even slightly, so that he was elected to membership on the city council, a position which he filled as acceptably as he had filled those more definitely of religious character. When he died as he did at the age of 50, just twenty years ago, there passed on a man who would have gone far in any field of endeavor to which he would have given himself, and whose going caused deepest sorrow in the hearts of all who knew him. Not sorrow for him, but for themselves, for the loss they sustained was felt to be irreplaceable. Brother Kennedy of Pittsburgh; who sent the sad news to the Evangelist office said, “We do not see how we can go on without him.” To die thus is not to have lived in vain, and as I said in the beginning, he has an enduring monument in the church which he founded, and which he served so faithfully and creditably.

I met “Dan” only a few times, at our general conferences, but I well recall how I fell under the spell of his personality. He was dynamic, genial, and filled with a life which radiated to all who came in contact with him, and all who know him agree in that the world is a better place in which to live, because of such as he. His wife and son survive him, and they continue as leaders and workers in the congregation which he founded, and thus in them, and in the splendid men and women who constitute the membership of that church, the spirit which gave rise to it, still finds vital expression.

I rejoice as I think of the group of men who make up the present Brethren ministry, because as I look upon it, all fear as to whether the church will have vocal expression in the future is allayed. It is a splendid body, well worthy to succeed those who have gone before, but none of these ought to forget that it was the heroic devotion of men now gone, which blazed the way for them, and made their pathway easier. No real pastor in our modern ministry has an easy time of it, for the demands upon both his time and talent are perhaps more exacting than at any time in the history of the church, but it ought to be encouraging to think that he need no longer sweat in the steel mill, nor drag his weary legs after the plow, as he prepares his sermons. But when he thinks his way unduly hard, it might add new courage to remember that some who have thus toiled with their hands have wrought successfully also in the pulpit, in a ministry blessed to the salvation of men. And one of these was Daniel J. Bole.

The Vision Larger

By A. D. Gnagey, D.D.

We need it. Everybody needs it. We can not achieve without that vision which enables us to see the improbable possible. We need the vision of a larger and a better church, a larger and more efficient Sunday school, and with the vision will come the reality. It has been so always; it is so now, and, in all probability, will continue to be so. Some have had a vision of a larger Publishing House, and it is on the way; others have had a far-seeing eye for a College which shall meet the demands of the growing years; still others have had a vision of a Brethren church in South America, in Africa, and in other fields "beyond", and their visions are being "visualized." We need the lesson,—we need it more than we need a lecture upon ancient heresies or an address upon some remote and partially incomprehensible metaphysics,—real human lessons, domestic theology, household piety,—a vision of LIFE and its possibilities.

If we would achieve valiantly our vision must take in vastly more than "just holding our own." That is too limited a vision. The secret of Paul's success was the vision "splendid" on the Damascus road,—not exactly either, for that vision would have died and been forgotten in thirty days if he had not been obedient to the "heavenly vision." The key to Paul's unparalleled career in the kingdom of God lies in Acts 26:19. Unrealized visions are depressing; Paul was NOT disobedient to the heavenly vision,—are we? Have we followed up our visions? We all have had them,—what did we DO with them? that is the important question. Mr. Layman, every sermon you have ever listened to, if it was a Gospel sermon,—a sermon based on the stupendous fact that Christ was dead and is alive,—every such sermon has given you a vision; but, unless it gripped you and you determined with Paul that you would follow the gleam, the chances are that the vision passed with your Sunday dinner.

To come a little closer home: Have you a vision of the possibilities, the potentialities of childhood? What does your vision reveal in the little waif on the street? What can you see in that apparent bundle of rags? Do you congratulate yourself that on your Sunday school record book are found the names of the best and most respectable people in your community? Shame on you. It is the glory of your school, or it ought to be, that it numbers among its members the waifs on the street, the homeless, the outcasts. The responsibility of your church lies not so much in what is inside of it as in that which is yet outside. We need to learn the lesson the Master taught us nineteen hundred years ago when he first saw Matthew, for whom the Jews had no good word, and in whom they saw naught but a despised tax-gatherer. Matthew's own grateful introduction to the story tells volumes: "And as Jesus passed by from thence, he saw a man,—a MAN. That is a large term,—can you see it? On these words Dr. John F. Carson makes this comment: "The Jews saw a tax-gatherer. The Romans saw an official. The people saw a publican and sinner. Jesus saw a man. He saw the possible man. He saw in Levi a budding Matthew." Until we get from Jesus the power to see the man in the outcast, the woman in the profligate, our equipment for service will be miserably incomplete. If we can not see the possible divine in man, how can we see the God in Christ? No, let us put it this way: If you can not see God in Christ, then neither can you see the divine, the possible divine in man.

How vastly and how curiously different things and persons present themselves to the human mind Festus, speaking to Agrippa, said, "One Jesus, whom Paul affirmed to be alive." "One Jesus." He was dead, but Paul insists that he is alive. To Festus it was a piece of superstition, an idle tale. Berton Braley wrote this bit of poetical prose: They called him "fool" and "traitor" as through the land he went. They cried out "Agitator" and "Brand of Discontent." From altar and from steeple upon this man forlorn, the priests and "goodly people" hurled wrath and bitter scorn. They called him "cheat" and "faker" and drove him from the door. They shouted "Mischief-maker", begone—and come no more! From border unto border they hounded him, lest he "Upset Established Order and bring on Anarchy." At length they seized and tried him that they might have their will, and so they crucified him on a lonely hill, the Outcast Agitator, driven by scourge and rod! They called him "fool" and "traitor" and now we call him GOD!—What is he to you?

Occupying Until He Come

By Herman Koontz

When we solve the problem of a dearth of men of character and talent in the ministry we will be going a long way toward solving the problem of pastorless churches which has been before the attention of the Conference for some time. But there will still be those churches that are too small to call a pastor for full or half time, and are so isolated as to make it impossible for them to be in a circuit. Some of the churches, if given the proper amount of encouragement and assistance, will some day make strong centers of Brethrenism, but if neglected will become extinct in a very short time. There are some churches in our section of the district that are perilously in danger of closing their doors unless something is done soon.

At this conference a committee on pastorless churches is to make a report of its findings and will no doubt have a constructive program to present which the conference should ratify and put into full operation this coming year. We must always be extending our work into new fields, but all will be lost if at the same time we lose all that has been accomplished in fields already occupied.

Another serious situation is that of caring for our floating membership. A small denomination naturally has to contend with such a difficulty. When a denomination has a church in every city, town, and village the solution is quite easy. But where we have only a few churches in a whole district it is much more difficult to hold our floating membership. The matter is serious enough that some plan should be arranged to keep in touch with those who are Brethren.

The members who move could help much if they would only take the time and trouble to notify their pastor of the change of address. The minister can do his part by discovering whether the church is situated in the locality where the family is moving. If so he should write the Brethren minister to welcome the members. If no Brethren church is convenient plans should be made to keep in touch with the family by church letters, and church calendars. Some day that Brethren family may again locate near a church of their own denomination, and having been kept interested by their former pastor will naturally take their place in the work of their church. If because of the duties of a large church the pastor has no time to look after his floating membership so carefully this duty could be relegated to a capable member.

We would be making a serious mistake if we failed at this opportune time to remind this assembly that if we are to be an occupying church we must not become lax in our evangelistic efforts. It would be well for us to review the methods of Christ in his evangelistic endeavors. He used two methods of bringing people to a saving knowledge of him, the personal and mass method. We should by all means imitate him in both of his ways of spreading his work in the world.

One would think that Christ, having such a great work to perform and such a short time in which to accomplish his task on earth, would have spent his time entirely with the mass and not the individual. Not so with him. His work was largely and successfully accomplished through a personal, intimate, relationship with individuals. It was his wont to diagnose the spiritual condition of the individual and then apply the needed remedy.

One needs but read the Gospels to see how much time Christ spent with the individual. He spent a night with a ruler of the Jews and convinced him that he must be born again. He took many moments of his precious time to show a poor Samaritan woman her sins and direct her to the Fountain of Life. He oftentimes took Peter, James and John off alone to impart to them the Bread of Life. To follow in the wake of Christ as a personal evangelist is for both the pastor and layman. Every single child of God is called to be a personal evangelist. When we fail to do our share in promulgating the Gospel of Jesus Christ by neglecting to use our personal contacts with men to bring them to Christ we are deliberately letting souls perish before our eyes and are unfaithful soldiers of the Cross. May God place upon our church such a burden for lost souls that we will not be able to rest day or night until we have fulfilled our obligations to our lost friends by introducing them to our Savior and trusting him for the victory.

He also spent time in mass evangelism. Many, many times he called groups to believe and follow him. Whenever a crowd gathered about him, he would publish to them that he was the Good Shepherd, the Bread that cometh down from heaven, and the light of the world. Any incident, no matter how small was enough to serve as the beginning of an invitation to believe on himself. The mass of people today are as eager as they were then to find release from sins, and they must be shown the way. Revivals have been effective in the past as many here who have been converted in such services can testify. For Christians, many blessed experiences in the realm of faith and answered prayer have proved the worth of public evangelism.

Both individual and mass evangelism are more vitally important than this age seems to realize. It is necessary to guard against the attitude expressed today that sin is of little consequence, and can be likened to a water snake, somewhat repulsive, of course, but nevertheless harmless. Changing the label on the bottle of poison does not change the death dealing properties of the contents. No more does condoning sin protect the individual from its consequences. Sin is tragic in that it separates man from God, and we who know that all are lost who have not been washed clean in the blood of the Lamb dare not stand idle and unconcerned. In this coming year let us redouble our evangelistic efforts remembering that our Lord may tarry but briefly, and that many souls are to be garnered ere he comes.

Lastly we must stress the importance of Christian character in this great task of fulfilling our obligation to God. We must remember that we as Christians are called to come out from among the world and be a separate people, that we must now hate the things that we once loved. God has given us the strength and power through his indwelling Spirit to develop Christian character and we now have no excuse to present to God for a failure to live the overcoming and victorious life. Our excuses to God are an insult to the Holy Spirit for they depreciate his power to build Christian character.

Our greatest means of faithfully occupying is to faithfully live. Let our lives be so yielded to the Lord Jesus Christ that he will be able to reflect himself through us to the world. The world needs to see in us the very face of Jesus Christ. By our living we are either an aid or a hindrance to the spreading of the Gospel. We may plan, organize and work but unless our characters bear out our words and work, everything fails. Brethren, we cannot afford to let the world tell us that what we are, speaks so loud that they cannot hear what we say. Will we not accept the challenge to play fair with the one who has justified and sanctified us and who will glorify us, by letting his indwelling Spirit cleanse and make us pure?

May the words of this old hymn be our challenge as individuals for this year:

"Awake, my soul, stretch every nerve, and press with vigor on,

A heavenly race demands thy zeal, and an immortal crown."

Masontown, Pennsylvania.

PRAYER

We thank thee, Lord, for the brotherhood of all who are named with the name of Christ. Whether we live or die, let us have part in that great communion. Open our eyes to see unnoticed saints and to discover signs of the coming of thy Kingdom in unaccustomed places. Give us a quick apprehension for all saintly qualities. And help us by the guidance of thy Holy Spirit to grow more and more like thee. Provide for each his special work and if no man praise us, help us to do our part as in thy presence, in remembrance of thy lovingkindness and in the joy of love to thee. And let no one of thy hidden saints lack heart's assurance of thy favor. And this we ask of thee in remembrance of Christ who for our sakes made himself of no reputation. Amen—Isaac Ogden Rankin.

Why I Do Not Dance

By John C. Thompson

In recent conversation with a worldly-minded young woman, I was asked, "Do you dance?" My negative reply was followed by the question, "Why not?"

I answered that I knew from actual experience that the dance does not contribute to one's physical, moral, or spiritual powers, but rather detracts from them. To this she gave answer that she did not see any harm in dancing, that it had never harmed her. I replied, with some emphasis, that I challenged either the truthfulness of her self-observation and that of any one else who claimed he had been benefitted in a single worth-while respect by the dance.

A silence of some duration followed before she meekly and self-consciously said: "I try to dance differently from the prevailing fashion; for I do not approve of the popular steps or the way in which most persons dance any step."

And therein lies the answer to the question of dancing that to many good and honest hearts is puzzling. And therein also lies the reason why I do not dance, it destroys rather than builds up, for it is neither spiritual, Scriptural, nor moral.

Is the atmosphere surrounding the ballroom, to say nothing of those numerous other less select but more popular dancing places, of a nature to accentuate religious impulses? Is the talk one hears, the actions one sees, or the thoughts one thinks, of an elevated or noble nature?

Are the remarks of the men, when alone during an intermission or after the dance, of the kind to inspire respect for womanhood in general, or for some feminine attendant in particular? Can any one who ever attended a dance, do so again with a silent prayer to God for his guidance and his blessing? Or can he conclude a dance with an appeal to heaven for approval and benediction? Can any one imagine the Savior of mankind being in attendance upon an evening of modern dance, where everything from the dress of the women to the talk of the partners smacks of the suggestive? Unless one can reply with a candid and sincere "yes" to all these questions, should he allow himself to take part in the pleasures of the dance? And much more, should I, who am trying hard to live a straightforward, consistent Christian life and who find the way difficult at times, and possibly only by the aid that comes from above in answer to my urgent and heartfelt petitions, deliberately place myself in an environment where the Spirit of God does not and cannot dwell, or help me in case of need?

Are the products of the dance among that class mentioned in the Scriptures as possessing a meek and Christ-like spirit?

A young woman, feeling that the dance was a proper place for her, and that she could be good and do good there, took occasion to ask one of her partners of the evening if he were a Christian.

"Am I a what?" he replied.

"No; are you?"

"Yes," she answered proudly.

"Then you have no business here," was his plain but meaningful retort.

That the dance, even in its higher forms which long ago were supplanted by the present-day suggestive, sensual, and actually vulgar dances, was a school of immorality, a debaser of morals, and a feeder of the brothel, is supported by much evidence.

When a president of a dancing masters' association admits that three-fourths of the inhabitants of the brothel are there from the ball-room, and that the recruits must come the same way, it seems time to wake out of sleep and to ask the question, Am I my sister's keeper? The most accomplished dancers are the most degraded. They are the graduates. It is enough to cause to blush to be told that we, under a "no harm" banner, have had a part in influencing toward shame those whom we should have helped—when we are told by these fallen women themselves that one hundred sixty-three out of two hundred inmates of brothels, or, in other words, that of the five hundred thousand fallen women in the United States more than three hundred thousand started from the ball-room, and that their average life of shame is about six years, we are amazed at ourselves for even entertaining for a moment a doubt on this question.

That I or you were not noticeably debased when we made a habit of dancing, is no argument. Finer sensibilities may have been imperceptibly duller, never to become so acute again. I may have been one of the fortunate few who largely escaped. As a boy, like most boys, I used to take chances hopping on and off rapidly moving trains. I did not happen to meet with accident or disaster but a companion of mine did. Many others have. It was dangerous business for me to engage in, and I was always taking a chance. But I quit hopping freights before disaster overtook me. Some may "jump" freights all their lives, and not be injured; but many are killed or maimed for life. Thus with dancing.—Selected.

Two Things Needful in the Church

A Deeper Consecration, and a Willingness to Serve

By E. F. Byers

TEXT: Who then offereth willingly to consecrate himself this day unto Jehovah? ... Then the people rejoiced, for that they offered willingly.—1 Chronicles 29:5 and 9.

This is a most wonderful text. These words were spoken by King David thousands of years ago, but during all these years that have come and gone, they have lost none of their beauty nor their significance. This makes one wonder. Does the fact that a thing is old necessarily mean that it is of little or no value to us to-day? Or does the fact that a thing is called ancient always indicate that the thing is old? In some cases it may, but not in all cases. A lady's hat of last summer's style to be sure is not old, yet it would be considered by our daughters and wives today, as very ancient, indeed.

There are some things,—yes, many things, that even though they are old, have lost none of their beauty nor their usefulness. The sun for example. How old is the sun? Just as old as creation. The same sun that ripened the grain thousands of years ago in the fields of the now mummied Pharaohs of Egypt is the same sun that ripened your harvests last year. The sun that kisses the freckle faced boy and the bobbed haired school girl on our city streets today caressed the long tresses of your early parents in the garden of Eden. Who among you would dare say that the sun is less beautiful, less useful or less welcome today than it was when its rays trickled through the foliage in that beautiful garden of our first parents? Or consider if you will the water we drink, the air we breathe, the flowers we see and whose fragrance we inhale and the birds that flit from tree to tree cheering us with their sweet song; who would dare say that these are less beautiful or less useful today than at the time of their creation? In fact, all these things mentioned become more beautiful, more useful and more welcome as we learn to know the great God and to understand better the wonders of his creation. Even so it is with the text. It is just as beautiful and just as significant, if not more so, today as it was at the time it was uttered by King David many, many years ago.

The original application of the text I believe is familiar to most people. It has reference to a preparation that was being made by King David for the building of Solomon's Temple.

We have the authority of the New Testament for regarding the Temple of Solomon as a type and figure of the Christian Church. "Ye are the Temple of God." "Ye also, as living stones, are built up a spiritual house."

The beauty of the type appears in its fulness when we come to study the symbolism of the Temple. In almost every single detail there is a striking harmony between the material fabric itself and the Church of Jesus Christ. The pattern was of divine origin. Nothing was left to human skill or contrivance; the pattern of all that David had was by the Spirit. In other words, the design emanated from the mind of the Great Architect himself, and was communicated to the human instrumentality for carving into effect. Is not this exactly what is taking place in the erection of the Spiritual Temple? God has decreed the place and the purpose of each living stone, though he makes use of human help to bring the stones into their rightful position.

Note the foundation of the Temple on the threshing floor of Ornan, the Jebusite. David at the request of God, the prophet of God, purchased the threshing floor of Ornan the Jebusite, located on Mount Moriah as a site for an Altar of the Lord. This was at the time of the great plagues as recorded in 2 Samuel 1:24. It was upon this very spot that Solomon later built the Temple of God. (2 Chronicles 3:1).

Here we have the first thought of judgment against sin, and secondly, mercy prevailing through sacrifice. The two thoughts were linked together in the mind of every Jew as he passed into the worship of the Temple. But is not this again the leading feature of the Christian Church today? Her foundations are laid on the atoning sacrifice of Calvary. Judgment and mercy blend together as one "When we survey the wondrous cross on which the Prince of Glory died."

"Out of the spoil won in battles did they dedicate to repair the house of the Lord." Is not this a picture or representation of the material of which the church of Jesus Christ is built? Is not the Lord taking the spoils of spiritual conflict and suffering and transforming them into heirs of salvation? And is it not also true that these are they who constitute or make up the church of Jesus Christ?

David was preparing to undertake great things for the Lord. He needed men and he needed means to carry on this great work. In the same way, we need men and means. We need men who will willingly consecrate their services to the Lord.

David explained to his people how that he wanted to build a house for his God and then asked them, "Who then offereth willingly to consecrate himself this day unto Jehovah?" And no doubt he was well pleased when one hundred and fifty-three thousand six hundred souls offered to cooperate with him in this great enterprise.

Not only men but means were necessary in order that the Temple might be built. David received millions of money in free-will offerings, and enormous quantities of other material; Gold for the things to be made of gold, silver for the things to be made of silver, and so on. We find also in this chapter that David himself gave 3,000 talents of gold and 7,000 talents of silver. If you will stop and compute this amount of gold and silver, considering that a talent of silver is equal to about $2,000.00 and a talent of gold about $30,000.00 you will readily see that the amount David himself gave toward Solomon's Temple would make the combined treasures of Fayette County look like two cents.

David and his people gave liberally and they rejected together. He had in his heart a fixed purpose, born of God, to build the Temple, and prepare with his might for it. But because he was a man of war and had shed much blood he was not permitted to build it. This must have been a great disappointment to David. His son Solomon was selected to carry the work on to completion. Thus it was called Solomon's Temple. David graciously stepped down and out. This will give you an idea of his greatness and of his goodness. He delivered up to his son all the patterns and plans according to which the Temple was to be built, and all the money and all the materials that he had collected, even to the 3,000 talents of gold and the 7,000 talents of silver which he himself had pledged to give, with the understanding that he was to build the Temple. How different we find folks today. There are people in all churches today who, if they can't have their own way and have things done as they think they should be done, are ready at once to throw up the sponge and quit. David did not do this. He was a man after God's own heart, and it shows what the grace of God did for him and what it can and will do for all who will open the door of their hearts to him and let him have his way with them.

Solomon was not only selected to build the temple, but to succeed his father also as king of Israel, and God did magnify him exceedingly in the sight of all people. Do not think that the work that David did was in vain. Solomon his son took up the work just where his father had left off. He used the men his father had intended to use: he used the material and all the preparation that his father had intended using. The men were skillful and all the parts of the building were prepared and then brought to the site upon which it was to be built and was put up without the sound of hammer or any iron tool. In seven and one half years the work was complete. It will give you some idea of the magnificence and the size of the temple when you think that 153,600 men were employed seven and one half years and at a cost of a hundred or more millions of dollars. Little wonder he issued a call for men and means for this great work.

Coming again to the present. May we not apply this same text to our conditions today? Our temple is in ruins. I believe God is putting the question to our people today just as David did to the people of his day, "Who then offereth willingly to consecrate himself this day unto Jehovah?" (The St. James' version reads, "Consecrate his services this day unto the Lord.") We need service; honest, faithful consecrated service. As some one has said, "We have shirkers and we have jerkers, what we need is workers."

Note also that the service is a willing service. "Who then offereth WILLINGLY, etc." Men ought to be more willing to enter the service of the Lord. It should not be necessary for one to plead with men to do this, it is a blessed privilege to be permitted to enter the service of the Lord, for the blessings are many and the reward is great. Further, we are not asking men to enlist in something that will one day end in failure. The Church of Jesus Christ is growing and will some day extend from shore to shore and from the rivers to the end of the earth. But more workers are needed. "The fields", the Word says, "are already white unto the harvest. Pray ye therefore, that the Lord of the harvest that he will send forth laborers into his harvest"—that he will send you into his harvest. In some fields the work is lagging because the workers are discouraged and have lost their courage and interest. This is not as it should be, for "we shall reap in due season if we faint not," says his Word. There is work also for all; we need all with their many different talents to make his work a success.

God is still making use of human effort. "The Gospel of Jesus Christ is still the power of God unto salvation to all who believe on him." By saved men, men are being saved. The call as of old still comes to willing helpers, "Who then offereth willingly to consecrate his services, etc. The word consecrate, we are told, means literally, to fill the hand. But before the hand can be filled of the Lord, it must first be emptied. The Church needs today to undergo an emptying process. We are too selfish, too worldly, too unspiritual. Too many today selfishly persist in esteeming their own opinions above the commands of the Master. These conditions cripple the work and retard the progress of the Church, and in order that she succeed as she should it requires an emptying of some of the obstacles that retard its progress. Let us all know that we can only fill our hands to God when they are emptied of all that defiles.

Note also that the service is "This Day." The Lord intreats and solicits aid for his cause in the extension of his Kingdom in the world. The time of service is this day. As some one has said, "Yesterday is past; tomorrow may never come; if you have anything to do, get busy and do it now." Opportunity is fast passing from us. He who invites today may be passing out rewards tomorrow.

Then note, lastly, that the result of consecration in service was JOY. "Then the people rejoiced for that they offered willingly" (verse 9). We sometimes wonder at the absence of true Christian joy. How can there be real joy when God's people see his temple in ruins and make so little effort to rebuild it? The joy of doing good is known only to those who engage in it. We rob God and starve our souls when we hold back from compliance with the Divine requirements. Many a Christian's heart is parched and withered today simply because religion has become a mere matter of salvation of self. We shall reach the fulness of the joy held out to us in the Gospel of Jesus Christ, only when we think more of the salvation of others than we do of ourselves.

As Paul said of the Macedonians, first, let us give ourselves wholly and unreservedly unto the Lord and then trust him for what follows. Uniontown, Pennsylvania.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE UNCHANGING CHRIST—Heb. 13:1-9. "Jesus Christ the same yesterday, and today, and forever." That is our inspiration and our comfort. Men change, and some who stood with us yesterday, may be against us today, and tomorrow we ourselves may be false to some one else. But Jesus remains true and steadfast; we can count on him always. He is not one thing today and another tomorrow. We know as Tennyson said:

"Our little systems have their day,
They have their day and cease to be;
They are but broken lights of Thee,
And Thou, O Lord, art more than they."

TUESDAY

VOICES WE UNDERSTAND—1 Cor. 14:6-11. "There are, it may be, many kinds of voices in the world, and none of them is without signification." "Many kinds of voices!" How many kinds! They are babel. It is difficult to distinguish them and to understand their meaning. But those to which we regularly give attention we will come to understand. In the midst of prosperity we may hear the voice of materialism. In the midst of oppression, the voice of revolution. In the midst of plenty, the voice of indulgence. But always, in every circumstance there is to be heard the voice of God calling through his Son, "Come unto me, . . . and I will give you rest." To which do we give attention? Which do we best understand?

WEDNESDAY

ACCEPTABLE WORSHIP—John 4:22-24. "They that worship him must worship him in spirit and in truth." It is fundamental to worship that we believe in God and that we believe that he is personal and approachable. But still more is essential to acceptable worship. We must give reverent, devoted response to the personal presence of God. That is true and acceptable worship.

THURSDAY

THE PLACE OF FAITH—1 Cor. 13:8-12. "For we know in part and we prophesy in part." Limited knowledge always requires the operation of faith, and in our world, so full of the mysterious and undiscovered, there are great reaches for the exercise of faith. In whatever field we labor, we soon reach the end of our knowledge, and we must walk by faith, if we would proceed. Life itself is a vast walk of faith. We can see but a step before us, and that is but dimly discerned. But with our faith resting in the Son of God we can walk with confidence and courage.

FRIDAY

SERVICE THAT SATISFIES—1 Chron. 28:9, 10. "Serve him with a perfect heart and with a willing mind." That is, our service must be sincere and honest,—from a "perfect heart", and it must be freely and gladly and persistently given,—by a "willing mind". The service that is given grudgingly, under the lash of compulsion, or niggardly, with the eye upon the clock, is not satisfactory or acceptable. The spirit in which the work is done as well as the quality of the finished product determine the degree of satisfaction that service produces.

SATURDAY

MINISTERING TO THE POOR—Deut. 15:7-11. "Thou shalt not harden thine heart nor shut thine hand upon thy poor brother." No one has a right to turn a deaf ear to the cries of those in need, whether they be the poor of his own neighborhood or the starving millions in devastated lands across the sea. Jesus had compassion on the poor, and he did it not because he was God, but because he was man. It was his response to the laws of our common humanity. Nor do we prove ourselves Christian by so doing, it is merely to be human, but we cannot be Christians and fail to do it.

SUNDAY

THE CHRISTIAN'S INFLUENCE—Matt. 5:14-16. "Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on a hill cannot be hid." The Christian, by the very fact of his acceptance of Christ, has been lifted up in the community. He cannot hide his light, and it makes a vast difference how it shines.—G. S. B.

Lesson Poem

Our Cry

God of the nations, who from dawn of days
Hast led thy people in their widening ways, Thro' whose deep purpose stranger thousands stand

Here in the borders of our promised land:

Thine ancient might did break the Pharaoh's boast,

Thou wast the shield for Israel's marching host,

And, all the ages thro', past crumbling throne

And broken fetter, thou hast brought thine own.

Thy hand hast led across the hungry sea
The eager peoples flocking to be free,
And from the breeds of earth, thy silent sway

Fashions the nations of the broadening day.

Then, for thy grace to grow in brotherhood,
For hearts aflame to serve thy destined good,

For faith, and will to win that faith shall see,

God of thy peoples, hear us cry to thee.

—W. Russell Bowie.

The lesson is very dramatic. The first thing to do is to read the story out loud to yourself, more than once, till it presents itself as a living picture before your minds.

Time.—Downfall of Samaria and the Northern Kingdom, B. C. 718. First invasion of Palestine by Sennacherib, B. C. 710. Second invasion of Sennacherib and his withdrawal, B. C. 701 (the time of our lesson).

Place.—Jerusalem and the temple.

Isaiah the Statesman

"From the time that Isaiah began his prophetic ministry he was the adviser of the successive kings, conveying them messages from Jehovah, and in some cases at least, inducing them to act on the advice which he offered. In 734 B. C., when Syria and Israel in alliance sought to capture Jerusalem, and put a creature of their own upon the throne, he declared Jehovah's purpose that the attempt should fail, and he vainly endeavored to persuade Ahaz to rely on Jehovah and not put confidence in heathen princes. Though the extreme peril into which Jerusalem was brought in Ahaz's reign was from the confederacy between Israel and Syria, the more permanent danger was from another quarter, namely, from Assyria, which was anxious to possess itself of Palestine, to open a way for the conquest of Egypt, which was its great rival. Isaiah's counsel was to avoid entangling alliances with any of the Gentile nations, and simply to trust in Jehovah.

Ahaz unwisely rejected this advice, called in Tiglath-Pileser, king of Assyria, and became his vassal. Under Hezekiah the prophet's counsel was treated with more respect.

"It is not altogether easy to defend the patriotism of the prophets. They absolutely refuse to make a bogey out of nationalism. They were never so enthusiastic about the kingship, the nobles, and the wealthy classes who inhabited the trade centres that they were not willing to denounce them to their faces. What they were willing to say about the leaders they were willing to say about the nation which these false leaders had created. At a time when the Hebrews needed to conserve all their strength in order to resist the threatened

Love's Wages

*A glance, a smile, or the clasp of hands,
The coin of a heart that understands;
A name soft whispered, a lingered kiss—
The wage of love is paid in this.*

The walking joy of a dawn-flushed sky,
Drudgery speeding on skylark's wings,
Songs in the heartbeats of common things,
And firelit shadows of evening bent
With peace and comfort and all-content.*

*The wages of love are small, so small,
One scarcely say that they cost at all.
Yet lives are lonely, and hearts still ache invasion of the big nations to the north and to the south, at a time when internal strife meant national suicide, the prophets were responsible for several violent revolutions in Hebrew society. It was the prophet Ahijah who spurred on Jeroboam to lead the ten tribes of the North in revolt. It was Elisha who inspired the bloody revolution of Jehu." But Isaiah seems to have set himself to save Judah in spite of its kings, if possible, through the intervention of Jehovah.

The Siege of Jerusalem

This siege of Jerusalem by Sennacherib is recorded in 2 Kings 18:17—19:36; 2 Chron 32:9-23; Isaiah 33, 36, 37. There was a previous attack by the Assyrians, but Hezekiah bought them off with a very large sum of money in order to pay which he had to strip the gold from the doors and pillars of the temple, and use all the silver in its treasury. But the Assyrians broke their promise and besieged Jerusalem. As the Assyrian army approached, "terrible as an army with banners," a resistless torrent, an overwhelming scourge, the people lost faith in their defences, and in Hezekiah's assurances.

Signs of the Assyrian advance were given in the sky, and night after night the watchers on Mount Zion, seeing the glare in the west, must have speculated which of the cities of Judah was being burned. Clouds of smoke across the heavens, from prairie and forest fires, told how war, even if it is passed, would leave a trail of famine; and men thought with breaking hearts of the villages and fields, heritage of the tribes of old, that were now bare to the foot and the fire of the foreigner. Then came touch of the enemy, the appearance of armed bands, vistas down Jerusalem's favorite valleys of chariots, squadrons of horsemen emerging upon the plateaus to the north and west of the city, heavy siege-towers and swarms of men innumerable."—George Adam Smith.

"Isaiah describes to us how the people crowded to the housetops, half dead with fear, weeping and despairing, and crying to the hills to cover them. They gazed on the quiver-bearing warriors of Elam in their chariots, and the serried ranks of the shields of Kir, and the cavalry round the gates."—Farrar. The Rabshakeh, whom some think to have been an apostate Jew, shouted his harangue in Hebrew that the populace might understand him, refusing the request of Hezekiah's officers that he speak in his foreign tongue.—Illustrated Quarterly.

Well Organized Sunday School in Syria

In the village of Brummana, Lebanon, Syria, where the English Friends' Mission has been at work for many years, there is a flourishing Sunday school conducted under the leadership of Miss Farcedeh Akl. The school is organized in four departments, Primary, Intermediate, Senior Girls, and Senior Boys, each department meeting separately. In the Primary department there are 100 children from 5 to 9 years, in the Intermediate school about 60 boys and girls, in the two Senior departments about 15 girls and 30 boys of high school age. Each department follows its own course of lessons. Occasional meetings of the entire school together are arranged.

On a recent visit, Rev. George H. Scherer, General Secretary of the Bible Lands Sunday School Union, noticed that the blackboard had a recognized place in the Intermediate school. The Primary children are learning songs of special interest to themselves. The discussions of the Senior Boys center about the theme "Truth Seekers".

Special attention has been given to Sunday school work among the Armenians. Four Sunday schools are conducted in various orphanages of the Near East Relief in Syria, among the Armenian children. They are all officially registered with the Bible Lands Union. A Beirut City Armenian Sunday School Union was organized several months ago. The union holds monthly meetings, for conference and inspiration. The Armenian Sunday School Union of Syria was organized the last week in May, in connection with the annual meeting of the American Board missionaries and the Armenian Evangelical Union.

Brethren C. E. Societies of Cambria County Organized into a Union

Twenty-one persons, representing the six societies of the Brethren churches in and near to Johnstown, heartily indorsed the plans for a union of the Christian Endeavorers of the Brethren churches of Cambria County at a meeting held Sunday afternoon, October 23, in the First Brethren Church, Johnstown. In attendance were members of the societies in the First, Second, and Third churches in the city, as well as the Conemaugh, Vinco and Mundy's Corner churches. The Rev. Joseph Gingrich presided.

The advantages of a union were discussed and particularly encouraging was the hearty approval of the pastors who were in attendance. It is the aim of the union to promote in a much larger measure, the work of Christian Endeavor, than has been possible as individual societies. Also, we believe much will be gained from the regular mass meetings to be held in the different churches. Christian fellowship will feature such meetings. Organization of new societies and helping the weaker, will also be a work of this union.

Two committees were appointed to prepare a program and have reports in readiness for the first mass meeting to be held in the First Brethren Church, Johnstown, Tuesday, November 22. They are the Constitution and By-Laws Committee and a Nominating Committee.

The Christian Endeavorers of the First Church will act as the hosts for the occasion, providing for an excellent social hour to follow the business session. An officer of the Pennsylvania State C. E. Union is being secured for the speaker of the evening.

Every society in the county is striving for a one hundred per cent attendance.

To date the Vinco church has not had a C. E. society, but efforts of the young people in that district are to be rewarded by the organization of a society Sunday.

Berlin, Pennsylvania

A recent visit to the Christian Endeavor society of the church at Berlin, was very encouraging. The society had just elected officers and a mighty fine group they proved to be. They gave some talks regarding the work of their respective offices and the plans they proposed for the interest of the society. The number in attendance was 18 and with one exception girls. If anyone reading this article can suggest a good plan whereby the boys might be encouraged to join, send same to the president of the society. They will be very glad to receive any suggestions.

A Junior society is also doing some fine work, under the supervision of Pauline Pritz. With the great number of boys and girls of the Intermediate age attending the Junior society, it will not be long until there will be need of organizing an Intermediate society.

The officers recently elected are: President, Ruth Menges; Vice-President, Geneva Altfather; Secretary, Ray Tipton; Treasurer, Rose Smith; Lookout Committee Chairman, Lillian Dietz; Music Committee Chairman, Thelma Saylor; and Junior Superintendent, Pauline Pritz.

The Story of Billy and His Friends

(In Four Parts. Part II)

One day as Billy and his friends were returning from a long hike to the woods, a surprise awaited them. They found that a new family had come to town that very afternoon. They were moving into a rather nice big wooden house that had had a "For Rent" sign in front of it. However, the big surprise was not that a family was moving into that house. The surprise was this—the people that were moving into that house were not white like everyone else in Woodville. Instead, they were colored people. Now Billy had seen quite a few colored boys and girls in Chicago but some of Billy's friends had never seen anyone that wasn't white.

One of the boys said to Billy, "I wonder how many children there are?"

Soon they found out. There was one little boy about their own age and there was a little tiny girl. Moving is always very interesting to little boys, so Billy and his gang stood nearby and watched. After everything was in the house they moved on and Billy said, "I wonder what the little boy's name is. Just think there is not anyone here in Woodville to play with him. He will be the only colored boy. That will make it lonesome for him."

Not much was said by the rest of the gang. Soon they separated and went to their homes. Each of them told their parents about the new inhabitants. Billy said to his mother and dad, "In Chicago, the boys that I played with never played with colored boys. Won't it be lonesome for that boy in Woodville?"

The next day, the boys found out that the new little boy's name was Sammy. Sammy looked all about the town. The other boys saw him but they did not pay much attention to him. As Sammy passed along the street all by himself, Billy remembered his first lonely days in Woodville. Some of the boys even started saying little unkind things about little Sammy, but Billy did not like that. Billy realized more than any of the rest just how lonesome and unhappy Sammy was. Sammy did not even have a whole house full of toys so that he could have a good time by himself.

One day when Billy and his gang were all having a big time together, someone made an insulting remark about Sammy, and Billy decided that it was time for him to have his say about their new citizen. He waited until all of them were near enough that they could hear then he said, "Suppose one of us had been born with a colored father and a colored mother, and our parents moved to Woodville, do you think that we would be very happy? It isn't Sammy's fault that he is a colored boy. He did not choose his color any more than we choose ours. And just think he really is a boy just like us. He has feelings just like ours. I am afraid that he is terribly unhappy and feels that we have not treated him like we would have treated a white boy."

Another boy, one who had been particularly interested in the Christian Endeavor Mission topics, said, "Yes, and we know that Jesus loves the little foreign boys just as well as he does us. You remember we had that in one of our topics just lately."

Another boy said, I never thought about how mean we have really been to Sammy. I forgot that he has feelings just like the rest of us."

"Yes, and maybe he notices things even more just because he is a little different from the rest of us," said Billy. "I am so ashamed of us all."

They decided right then from that time on they would play a fair game with the little foreign boy. So they started out in search of Sammy, hoping very much that Sammy would be willing to forgive them for their unkindness.

THE CHILD'S QUIET HOUR

For Quiet Hour Committees

If you have no Quiet Hour committee in your society you might appoint two members to be such a committee for one month. Next month appoint two other members to form the committee. The work of the committee is to encourage the Juniors to read their Bibles and pray at home. The committee may get, through the superintendent, or from the United Society of Christian Endeavor, copies of "The Daily Portion" which contains daily Scripture readings on all the topics of the year. Or better still, urge each one to subscribe for "The Evangelist" and follow Virginia Haun's "Daily Readings."

Give one of these little booklets to each member. Each Sunday find out by a show of hands, or by roll-call, who have read the daily readings each day during the week. Urge the Juniors to write down thoughts and questions that occur to them as they read these daily readings, and give the thoughts in the meeting, and perhaps ask the superintendent the questions.

A Journey Into the Wildwood

By Mary L. Emmert

Native villages are a great deal like their chiefs. The people follow their leaders for either better or worse. On our itineration trips we meet with many different kinds of villages and many experiences. In the village of Dorombi, for example, the chief met us with the usual stiff military salute and with an unbending countenance. He said there was no food for the porters and he didn't occupy himself much with the matter. He seemed to carry a permanent grudge from the past, and like Cassius he smiled not. At sunset he called some of his people together to hear the Gospel as we had requested him to do. They liked the victrola and listened to the message with a mild interest.

Perhaps our general opinion of this place was heightened by the house where we slept. It is the worst one in which we have staid in Africa. The roof had given in on one side and there were large cracks in the walls. We soon found that it was not without inhabitants as the boys speared a good-sized snake in the wall. A big fat worm dropped down to the floor beside us from the decayed roof which we were assured was no doubt infested by plenty more. We were glad of a substantial mosquito net as we went to rest. The light had just been blown out when a lizard fell "plunk" on the edge of the wash basin. That was a small matter, though, so we resigned ourselves to sleep, but alas a lively shower soon wakened us to the fact that neither the roof nor the net were sufficient to keep out the rain, so rain coats had to be pressed into service. The morning found us happy, although there was another worm on top of the net and one on the floor.

You may be sure we were glad to get out into God's sunshine and leave the haunted house. This experience was decidedly an exception to the rule but after all it is a just picture of the ruined condition of this world and of the loathsomeness of sin. These poor black people, however, are so accustomed to their condition that they don't think much about it. A small present didn't cheer up the chief very much, for he asked why we didn't give him five or ten francs.

But that same day we were greeted by a captain that came out to meet us with some eggs and a chicken and the welcome news that he had already cooked food for the porters. He wanted us to stay in his village and tell them the Good News, but our boxes had already passed on. He said then that we should preach to them while the porters ate their food. So we sat down by the wayside and told them as simply as we could the old, old story. We were sorry to leave them but found just as hospitable a village for our Sunday stop. During our stay there the captain and six or seven men and women said they no longer wanted to worship the devil but wanted to travel God's road. Both the simplicity and depth of the Christian religion are a proof of its divinity and it is a joy to see how it fits the needs of the most ignorant heathen as well as our own more complicated ones.

We realize on these trips that we are just breaking the soil and that it will take patient teaching and much prayer to really reap the benefits, but why not claim the soil for our King as did Columbus and other explorers in ancient days as they planted their emblems on new ground? We are given the ground that the soles of our feet tread upon in a spiritual sense and we know that some day he will claim all this territory by right of conquest. Let us then be bold to press in and take it from the arch enemy now.

The two evangelists who accompanied us were a great help. Jodawan, the older, more experienced of the two, is surely worth his weight in gold. He labors with the villagers untiringly, telling them what a wonderful salvation there is in Christ Jesus and arousing a great interest before time for the evening service. His translations are so full of zeal and enthusiasm and he drives the points home to the hearers so

My Will

"My will is not my own
 Till thou hast made it thine;
 If it would reach a monarch's throne,
 It must its crown resign:
 It only stands unbent
 Amid the clashing strife
 When on thy bosom it has leant
 And found in thee its life."

—George Mathison.

forcibly in a native style which the white man can't imitate, so that the translation is usually better than the original. You will agree with me that this is no mean gift in a translator. He is especially good in dealing with the porters also. His untiring efforts bore fruit this time in a noticeable way.

We are always thankful to these patient burden-bearers who carry us over the vast stretches of country in the burning sun, so we were very glad to see a number of them saved after about a week of the trip had passed. Perhaps you can imagine our feelings in the matter in the following incident. We had chosen a by-path in order to reach some villages that had never heard the Word. We knew there was a big river ahead of us to cross and since it was the rainy season there would be plenty of water. But we were surprised upon nearing it to find a quarter of a mile of marsh through which the men had to wade, and when we saw the swift current of the river we looked upon the frail bridge with some misgivings. It was a native makeshift. A huge tree had been felled at one side and its trunk and branches formed the first part of the bridge. A suspension bridge of small tree trunks tied together by vines joined this tree to the lowest branch of a tree standing on the other bank. This branch was about fifteen feet above the water and we found later that it was a dead branch.

The men with the boxes and trunks passed safely, but the greatest difficulty was with the tepoy as their turns were so short and there were so many branches and vines to pass. After about fifteen minutes of strenuous work the porters got one tepoy across. We had heard the bridge crack and crossed over it ourselves with all the care possible. The next tepoy proved too much, however; the rotten limb gave way and there was a loud splash. We rushed to the bank in time to see eight or ten men struggling in the water with the heavy old tepoy turning over on its side in the water.

How we prayed that none of these men should be drowned as the water was beyond their depth and they might easily have been entangled under the tepoy or in the fallen bridge. Will you believe it? Not a one of these men struck out for the shore. Their first thought seemed to be to save the tepoy and they all swam after it and were not content until they had brought it safely out. Not a life was lost although we learned that some of them did not know much about swimming. The good swimmers went back and forth time and again until they had attached a vine cable so that those who were left on the other side who couldn't swim could cross. One huge sack for the bedding remained to be brought across, but happily it was water proof and although it got in the water the contents were kept dry.

It took nearly two hours in the heat of the day to pass that river but we were so thankful that no one was missing that we didn't much mind a badly shattered schedule. We had been misinformed also concerning the distance, and although we just stopped a short time for food under some trees, the sun had long since set and the moon was shining before we reached our destination. The porters were nearly exhausted so we walk for several hours. Our boys had arrived before us, so when we were met by the chief's son and assured that food had already been prepared for the weary porters we were thankful.

Upon asking the people of this village if they wanted to hear the "affair of God", they said, "Why shouldn't we, when you have come such a long way to tell us and we have never heard before?" They listened very intently, too. All concerned were thankful it was Sunday and in a special service, with the porters there were real evidences of God's working as we showed them how he had saved them from drowning the day before. A backslider said that he knew now that God existed, that he felt sure of it as he floundered around in the water. He prayed very earnestly and said he now wants to live right and give up all his sins.

Is it all worth while—this long tiresome journey through the tall grass, over bridgeless streams, and literally through the waters to find a few scattered villages? Yes, even the present joy would well repay our efforts, and we know that those who were praying for this work will be gladdened in eternity by meeting the answers to their prayers in person. Pray for us that the way may open for more such pilgrimages, and pray for the evangelists who will probably follow up this trip visiting these same villages again.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Clay City, Indiana

This church is isolated from any other church of the same faith, being located in the southwestern part of Indiana about sixty miles from Indianapolis.

They have a neat comfortable church building and parsonage and while they have a small membership, yet they are supporting a pastor for full time.

Brother D. A. C. Teeter was recently called to serve this congregation and this made him the second time to go through the endowment canvass with me, as he was serving the Roann charge earlier in the summer when I was there. He gave good loyal aid and my stay was made pleasant.

For a small group of people, they are assuming large obligations in their own local work. Their love for the church and desire to promote "The Faith" is commendable. They are interested in the College and desire to see it go forward. Their gift was $375.

Maple Grove, Indiana

There are only a few families left at this place, most of them having moved away. They hold no regular services. The church is located in the country and I see no opportunity of building it up, as there is no material to draw from.

The town is only a few miles from Muncie and the most practical thing is for the members there to place their membership with the Muncie church, as it will aid all concerned. I received from the members here $156.

Miscellaneous Gifts

Unreported miscellaneous gifts from this state not reported is $320, giving a total for this report of $851.

HARRISONBURG, VIRGINIA

Dear Readers of the Evangelist:

I know you will be glad to hear that a group of the Bethlehem members near Harrisonburg, Virginia, remember one whom so many of you know and admire and one that there can be no finer example of partnership with God than in the person of Sister Susan Garber of Dayton, Virginia, mother of our beloved Adam Garber.

This Bethlehem group gave her a real surprise, November 6, and served a bountiful dinner to her. We spent the day talking about the great truths in the Bible, of which Mother Garber took an active part. She highly appreciated our remembering her in her declining years and gave us all such good advice, how we should stand firm for the whole Gospel. Before we parted we sang, "Nearer my God to Thee" and "Blest be the Tie that Binds."

MRS. G. C. DOWELL.

HARRAH, WASHINGTON

Dear Evangelist Readers:

This is Thanksgiving month and the Brethren at Harrah, Washington, have much for which to be thankful.

We appreciate the very fine support being given us by the Home Mission Board which makes possible our erecting a church building and securing the services of Dr. J. C. Beal as our pastor. Only those who have been isolated, as we have been, can appreciate what this means to us. We are grateful, too, to Brother Beal for his acceptance of our unanimous call to serve the Harrah church as pastor. Another cause for thanksgiving is the gift of two lots on which to erect our building, by Brother and Sister W. C. Kennedy. The actual transfer of this property will be made just as soon as the church is legally incorporated. This is a fine gift and will mean much to the work here.

Excavation for the basement of the church building began on November 10 and we are planning to have a place for worship by the time our pastor arrives on the field which will be January 1.

A number of the members from Harrah attended the Love Feast and Communion at Sunnyside, October 30.

We know the Lord answers the prayers of his children and we thank him for making these many blessings possible. Pray for us and the work here.

MRS. E. B. GOULD.

LAKE ODESSA, MICHIGAN

Several months have passed since our last report from this place. We are now closer to the time when we shall stand before the judgment seat of our Lord to give account of all that we have done, even every idle word we have spoken. May we live so close to the Lord that we may have confidence and not be ashamed before him at his coming.

We are in the North country and are somewhat isolated but nevertheless we have been favored with a visit from several of the brethren from other places. Brother R. D. Barnard, of Mansfield, Ohio, paid us a very welcome visit. Brother E. S. Flora, of Beaver City, Nebraska, preached for us one evening. We were also glad to have Brother Sickle with us to tell us of our work in South America. On Home Coming day we had the honor of a visit from Brother Drushal of Lost Creek, Kentucky. I have been to the Kentucky mission three times and know something of the work. Only a man consecrated to the Lord could accomplish so much. I believe there are few, if any, enterprises in the Brethren Church that have been so used of the Lord. Also Mrs. McMillian Amie gave us a very profitable lecture on African missions. She was nurse the first time we were in Kentucky. She is on furlough from an African mission near our own work.

The S. M. M. have collected and sent two large bags of clothing to Kentucky, one for Krypton and one for Riverside.

In October the W. M. S. met and elected officers for the ensuing year. At one of the regular meetings they gave the inside of the church a thorough cleaning.

The church sent over seventy large scripture placards or mottoes to the Kentucky missions. They will be placed in the students' rooms.

Our motto is "The Bible, the whole Bible, and nothing but the Bible." And these people are content with "The foolishness of preaching." The enemy has not fooled them into "Putting on something to hold the young people". Neither have they fallen into the snare of supporting the Lord's work by mercantile adventures.

One young man confessed our Lord as his Savior at the morning service and was baptized in the afternoon.

Communion service was an enjoyable event for all, as was audibly expressed by several in a testimony meeting before dismissal.

In the making of books there is no end. Some are good and some are not. This presents a problem to parents who are concerned about their children. So many books in our school libraries ignore the Bible and its Christ. Some even have an unsavory atmosphere. For years I have conducted a circulating library. My mailing list now includes three states. These books are selected for their Christian viewpoint. In anyone, young or old, would like to read them, they can obtain same by writing to me. Books will be sent free with the understanding that they will be read and returned promptly.

Peace be with all that are in Christ Jesus.
R. I. MUMBERD.

PORTIS, KANSAS

California to Ohio and Back to Kansas

After a couple months' visit with relatives and holding a meeting for Camden, Ohio church, we again turned our faces westward and on September 10 arrived in Portis, Kansas, to take the pastorate of the Portis Brethren church. This is the church our good Brother W. R. Deeter served for some five years as pastor. We found the work well organized and good crowds greeted us from the start. We were entirely strange to this field, never having preached in Kansas. But Kansas Brethren act about like Brethren everywhere. We found them kind and charitable, ready to move out into the work. We were only here a few days until we got some pounding, but it did not hurt much physically. It helped to furnish the pantry and fruit cupboard with canned goods, sugar and vegetables, and there were a lot of kind words of encouragement to the new parson and his wife. Thank you, Portis folks. We have just closed a three weeks' meeting a few days ago. This was well attended from the start and on the second Sunday night the crowd could not all get into the church.

Interest was good, but always when you start a revival and the Holy Spirit begins to move on the hearts of the people, the devil always gets busy and tries to deceive the people. But in spite of the contending forces, through the preached word of the Cross and the blood, and holding to the great fundamental teachings of God's word, the Bible, victory will crown our efforts. As a visible result of the meeting nine young people confessed Christ as Savior for the first time and one reconsecration. "Praise the Lord." God says, "My word shall not return unto me void."

It was a bitter fight; many prayers went up to the throne of grace and some tears mingled with our prayers for the unsaved. I am still Brethren and believe we have a plea that the world wants and needs. Next Sunday we will receive the Home Missionary offering and we are hoping this may be the best and largest ever. Yours for a greater Brethren church in the days to come; and as long as the Lord carries let us push forward, gathering the few that will hear.

Pray for Portis church and we are your Brethren in the blessed Hope, S. LOWMAN.

Memorial to Elder E. B. Shaver

Brother E. B. Shaver is dead. He was the war-horse of the Brethren church here. He was the leader and pioneer in that cause in Virginia and Maryland. He was a man who stood head and shoulders above every one else in the church here. He gave 43 years of his ministerial life in behalf of the Brethren church.

The Late Elder E. B. Shaver

No man loved the church more. No man had more faith in the church. No man labored more for the church in this conference district. No man gave his life for the cause any more than he and received less compensation for his work.

In May of 1884 Brother S. H. Bashor came to Tom's Brook, Virginia, at the invitation of Brother Shaver and by permission of the U. B. pastor was permitted to hold a few meetings in that church. The result of that meeting was eight converts and baptisms. These eight converts were the nucleus of the first Brethren church here in this part of the Valley of Virginia. A call was later issued for the organization of a Brethren church which was held at Tom's Brook schoolhouse, May, 1884. At this meeting which included some members of the German Baptist church from Frederick, Warren and Shenandoah Counties and the eight new converts the first church was organized. In all of them were 36 persons who gave their names to the formation of the new church. There was not a church building in which to hold services and only one preacher to do the preaching, and he was Brother Shaver. He preached in school houses, tents, and union churches until a sufficient number had been secured to build a church.

This church was erected at Maurertown and dedicated in April, 1887. From this little nucleus of scattered membership has grown more than half a dozen church buildings and several hundred members. Brother Shaver was instrumental in some way in the building of about all these churches.

Brother Shaver was Moderator of the Maryland and Virginia Conference for a number of years, was chairman of the Ministerial Examining Board, a member of the Ministerial Aid Committee and pastor at some time of all the different churches in the Valley.

Brother Shaver died October 18, 1927, in the 85th years and preached up until two weeks of his death, being pastor of the Bethlehem and St. Luke congregations. He baptized into the church about 2,000 persons, married more than 500 couples and preached numerous funerals.

Funeral services were held at Maurertown, October 21 at 2 P. M. to a large concourse of people from several counties and a number of congregations.

Those who conducted and assisted in the service were Dr. J. M. Tombaugh, G. C. Carpenter of Hagerstown, Rev. E. J. Rohart of Winchester, Rev. E. L. Miller of Maurertown and the writer. The floral tributes were abundant and most beautiful.

His body was laid away in the cemetery at Maurertown by the side of his wife.

ELDER E. B. SHAVER—AN APPRECIATION

Even though there will be others who may write in appreciation of our departed brother, Elder E. B. Shaver, yet as his successor in the Maurertown pastorate, which pastorate he founded some forty years ago, and as his grandson in the faith, I feel a word from me would not be out of place. Not only did Brother Shaver found this pastorate but with it as a center, or should we say mother church, he was largely responsible for the Brethren movement in the Valley of Virginia, as the Shenandoah Valley and vicinity are called. Brother Shaver was indeed the patriarch of the church in the Maryland-Virginia district. In the early day of the church when it meant ostracism and hard work to take the stand of the so-called progressives, then our brother was on the firing line, counted for progress and a contender for the faith once delivered.

It is about twelve years since I first met and learned to know Brother Shaver. As evangelist I served in the church at Maurertown where he had been pastor for many years. I found him suspicious of everything that did not ring true to the old-time Gospel. I can well remember how he watched closely the first few evenings to see whether anything of heresy would creep out in the preaching. He showed his appreciation of the service rendered by requesting that the evangelist come back again the next year. And the good brother was free in saying that such would not have been the case had there been any looseness in preaching or doctrine. I say this to stress the type of contender for the faith that the departed proved to be all along the way.

Many years ago Brother Shaver received Elder I. D. Bowman into the church and later ordained him to the Gospel ministry. Then later yet Brother Bowman received the writer of this sketch and ordained him to the ministry. Thus Brother Shaver was indeed our grandfather in the faith. And as "Grandpa" he was affectionately known to all in this valley. He was a man of strong faith and of great physical endurance. Many times in his later years he took trips and performed tasks that would extend many far younger in years. In fact the beloved brother never seemed old as we have thought of old men. He was very active and even up until within two weeks of his death he was on the firing line. Some of us protested that he should not be going the past few weeks of his life, but it seemed to be his desire to die in the harness, and he had his wish gratified. For many years he served his community as business man, pastor and advisor. He held many revival meetings, established quite a few churches and performed the usual ministrations in baptisms, marriages and funerals. Brother Shaver was of a positive temperament and when it came to things of church and religion one could readily find out where he stood. If we might stress that in the lives of those who are left to carry on as these patriarchs are called away it would be well.

Brother Shaver was, as already intimated, perennially young. He appreciated the company of the young folks and seemed at his best when with those far his junior in age. He was ever cheery and loved both to hear or tell a good story. This endeared him to all those whom he met, for it made out of him real good company. Many a story out of his experience in the early days of the church will stay with the writer and others to whom he told these interesting and sometimes amusing anecdotes. And he had an inimitable way of telling these things that made them all the more interesting. Indeed, Brother Shaver filled a place in the life of this community that will be unfilled since his going from us. His moving in our midst, which shall be seen no more, was carried on for so long a time and with such a fine spirit that we shall indeed meet but miss him in all our times of gathering. Personally I must say that Brother Shaver has meant much to all of us. His earnest support of the fundamentals inspired more than one to stick to the truth as it is in Christ Jesus and his Word. Along with hundreds of others who owe their being in the Brethren church either to the direct or indirect work and influence of Brother Shaver, I must say we are eternally indebted to him for his self-sacrifice during the many years that he tried to serve the Lord and win souls to the way of truth and life. The valley churches lose their father, but we must take hold where he left off and show our appreciation in the way that will be the best thanks to him, that is, by carrying on successfully from where he left off. Brother Shaver laid a solid foundation in that he had Jesus as the foundation Stone, and we will seek no other base upon which to build. May his memory remain green among us. His earthly tabernacle rests on the knoll overlooking the scenes of his childhood and manhood. The home which he loved so well and the mother church of the valley are just beneath the place where his body is interred. But while he rests from his labors we hone and pray that his soul of love to the church and untiring effort for her advancement might continue on the move in the lives of his children, grandchildren and great-grandchildren in the faith. They all arise to call him blessed for his faithfulness in proclaiming the way of truth. So we do say "good night" here to the departed but with the assurance of saying "good morning" up there.

E. L. MILLER.

AN APPRECIATION

That death is an appointment which all must meet is verified again by the death of our dear pastor, and Elder, Brother E. B. Shaver, who left us October 18, 1927.

Brother Shaver was our pastor at Bethlehem church off and on for 30 or more years. He had a deep interest in us of which the church was highly appreciative. The day before our communion, Brother Shaver with a temperature of 103 rose from his bed when no one was in his room and dressed himself, and when Dr. Shaver, his son, went in his room and asked him why he was out of bed, he said, "I must exercise myself so I can go to Bethlehem and hold the Communion."

He asked Dr. Shaver to fill his appointment at Bethlehem on the fourth Sunday in October, which he did.

"Sorrow has settled upon our church. Death, the pale reaper with sickle has come. Spring summer and autumn are past. He has sown, reaped and gathered life's harvest at last.

Appropriate words were spoken by Dr. Tombaugh, Rev. Miller, Rev. Copp and Rev. Carpenter. Rev. Rohart of Winchester sang "No Disappointment in Heaven", which Brother Shaver had him to sing a few days before he died, it being his favorite hymn.

"Servant of God, well done!

Rest from thy loved employ!

The battle fought, the victory won,

Enter thy Master's joy!"

MRS. G. C. DOWELL.

The Holy Spirit came down for the specific purpose of telling the world about Jesus. His work down here is to convict men of their terrible wrong in rejecting Jesus, and of his righteousness, and of the judgment passed upon Satan. Only he can convince men's minds and consciences. A thousand preachers with the logic of a Paul and the eloquence of an Isaiah could not convince one man of his sin. Only the Spirit can do that.—S. D. Gordon.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

MORROW-MURRAY—On October 17, 1927 at the Brethren parsonage in Sunnyside, Washington, Mr. Elmo Morrow and Miss Alice Murray were united in marriage by their pastor the writer. Both are members of the Brethren church and excellent young people. It was our privilege to baptize the groom the Sunday after their marriage.

May the Lord cause his face to shine upon them.

IN THE SHADOW

GRIFFIN—Edward Joseph Griffin was born in Fulton county, Illinois, May 17, 1876, a son of Ambrose and Elizabeth Griffin, who were of Pennsylvania pioneer stock. He answered the call of the death messenger on October 17, 1927, at the age of 51 years and 5 months. Death occurred at his home at Windsor, Pennsylvania, as he was about to enter his home after his day's labor, and without a struggle he sank down at his door, where his beloved wife found his lifeless form. His demise was caused by heart failure.

Brother Griffin was married to Ella G. Dietz on July 7, 1895, to which union seven children were born. Five of the children preceded him to the grave. Two sons, Ernest S. and Clyde M., both of Somerset, together with the wife and three grandchildren constitute the immediate family who mourn the departure of a loving husband and father. Three brothers, two sisters and a large number of more distant relatives mingle their tears with those of the widow and children in the consciousness of a common loss in the home-going of Edward Griffin.

Soon after his marriage Edward Griffin united with the Brethren church at Jones Mills, Penna., under the ministry of Elder W. A. Harman. Later he transferred his membership to the Listie, Penna., congregation where he remained a member until about a year ago when he and Sister Griffin brought their membership to the Second Brethren church of Johnstown.

The writer first met Edward Griffin some twenty-five years ago, when called to minister to the family at the death of a little daughter. Time and distance separated us for several years, and then we were again brought together and for a year have associated as pastor and parishioner. And the relation was a most pleasant one, for he was a most loyal supporter of the plans and hopes of his pastor, solicitous for the best interests of the church, and ready to help in whatever way possible. We shall miss him keenly at the services of the church, and our sympathy goes out to the afflicted wife whose loss is more keen than ours, and to whom he was most lovingly helpful and thoughtful.

Brief funeral services at the home, on October 20, preceded the stated services later at the Husband Cemetery, at Somerset, Penna. Vocal solos were rendered at the home by Rev. J. A. Richter, pastor of the Scalp Level Lutheran church, and an old time friend of the family, and by Mrs. W. W. Hammer of the Second church. Scripture was read and prayer offered by the pastor. At the chapel music was furnished by a mixed quartette from the Listie choir. The utter stillness in which the message of the pastor was received by the assembly at the chapel was indicative of the sense of the divine which pervaded the minds of those who gathered to pay last respects to one who had dwelt among them, and had endeavored himself to them by his unselfish, Christian life. Farewell, my brother, we shall meet on a fairer shore, and "There will be a 'Good morning'." Sometime."

—DYOLL BELOTE.

MILLER—Lizia Lyons Miller, a charter member of the Brethren Valley church, died October 18th, 1927, at 83 years of age, at her home. She is survived by five daughters and one son. During the last few years she was denied regular church attendance on account of much infirm health. Her life was filled with service for others. Surely her good influence shall ever live after her.

The funeral was at the home, and conducted by Rev. Dunn, a Lutheran minister, assisted by the pastor.

REV. E. M. KECK.

TERRY—Martha Burger, daughter of Samuel and Barbara Burger, was born November 22, 1864, in Owen County, near Clay City, Indiana. She was called to her eternal home August 18, 1927.

She was united in marriage to William C. Terry, September 17, 1894. To this union was born a son, Charles, and a daughter, Flossie, both married and living at Clay City. Five grandchildren, five sisters, two brothers also mourn her passing.

Early in life she united with the Church of the Brethren at Denmark, Indiana, later transferring her membership to the Clay City Brethren church. She was one of those precious, uncomplaining Christian characters that add great strength to the church. She was wholly resigned to God's call—"Ready to go, ready to stay, ready to do his will."

The writer, a former pastor, was called from his home at Williamstown, Ohio, to officiate in the funeral services. Text—"In the beginning God." Genesis 1:1.

MARK B. SPACHT.

FURRY—Dr. Samuel E. Furry departed this life October third, 1927, being in his eightieth year. He was a native of New Enterprise, Bedford County, Pa., and was the eldest child of Jacob and Elizabeth Furry. Of their family of seven sons and five daughters, only three brothers and three sisters remain. After graduating and practicing medicine for a number of years in the vicinity of his childhood home, he went to Nebraska, where he engaged in business. About forty years ago he removed to New York City. There a greater part of his talent and energy were expended in rescue mission work. In this blessed work of soul salvaging, he was sympathetically assisted by his wife, two daughters and a son. The first wife and daughter preceded him in death. After impressive funeral services in New York City in the presence of scores of people, many of whom he had led out of deepest sin and pointed to The Great Physician, the body was brought to New Enterprise where the burial services were conducted by this writer.

W. S. CRICK.

WISSINGER—Brother Nathaniel Wissinger was born December 14th, 1850, in Stony Creek Township which is now a part of the city of Johnstown, lived his entire life there and passed away October 1st, 1927, aged almost 77. He was married to Catharine Lavelly a little more than 55 years ago. To this union were born 7 children, four of whom survive him, three boys and one girl, Milton, Albert, Earl and Jessie, now Mrs. George Jones of Muncie, Indiana. Nine grandchildren and three great-grandchildren survive him.

Brother Wissinger was for many years a faithful member of the Brethren church. He was faithful and regular in his attendance on all means of grace as long as his health and age permitted. He was of quiet disposition and won many friends to himself. In his death the Napoleon Street church sustains a real loss. He is survived by his widow who feels very keenly her loss. May a kind Father sustain her in her bereavement and bless the sorrowing children. Funeral services were conducted by the Rev. J. L. Bowman of the Vinco Brethren church, assisted by Rev. B. F. Coleman of the Dale Brethren church. The services were conducted in the Napoleon Street Brethren church and were largely attended.

J. L. BOWMAN.

JUILLERAT—Mary Grace Juillerat, youngest daughter of Edward and Martha (Hunmer) Juillerat, was born June 7, 1902, and departed this life October 6, 1927, being at the time of her going, 25 years, 3 months and 29 days of age.

Her early school days were spent at Center. From here, she graduated with the class of 1921.

Being interested in school work and teaching as a profession, she entered the Ball Teachers' College at Muncie. Her work was taken at various periods of time and she graduated from this institution in 1926. It was her privilege to have four years of teaching experience, the first three of which were in Greene Township, the last in the Anderson city schools. She was to have taught in Anderson again this year.

At the early age of nine, she felt and heeded the Master's call and was converted at the union meetings in Portland during the Oliver campaign. The following summer, in 1912, she was baptized by Rev. Hazlett and taken into full membership in the Brethren church at Bethel, near Berne. She tried every day to live faithfully to the trust given into her keeping. It was her greatest desire that her life might speak for the highest and best in life, rather than just words.

Though hard to understand why she should go in the morning of life, she prayed as the Master taught her, "Not my will, but thine be done", and though sad at the thought of leaving those she loved, she slipped peacefully away to God, who death all things well.

J. L. Kimmel of Fort Wayne preached the funeral, in the U. B. church near the home.

JOHN PARR.

DIXON—Mrs. Rachel Stutzman Dixon, daughter of Samuel and Elizabeth Stutzman, was born June 6, 1872, and died at the Mercy Hospital February 19, 1927, aged 54 years, 8 months and 13 days, death being due to pneumonia. Mrs. Dixon was a patient sufferer throughout her entire illness. She was a member of the Third Brethren church and when able to attend was regular. She is survived by the following brothers: John of Oakhurst, Samuel of Somerset, David of Indiana county, Hiram Stoner of Johnstown, Louis of Scottsdale and Charles A., of Johnstown; and the following sisters: Barbara Staumbaugh of Johnstown, Sadie Adams of Akron, Ohio, Annie Murphy of Conemaugh; also by one son, Wilbur, and one daughter Beulah, and three grandchildren. Services by the writer.

JOS. L. GINGRICH.

BERKEBILE—Austin Berkebile, son of Levi and Caroline Frye Berkebile, was born in Shade township, Somerset county, Pennsylvania, December 10, 1850, and died May 8, 1927, aged 76 years, 4 months and 28 days. His early life was spent in Indiana county and his latter days in Johnstown. During his last illness of two years he made his home with his son-in-law and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Rager. He is survived by one sister, Mrs. Caroline Baker; one son, Paul A., five daughters, Mrs. C. M. Rager, Mrs. A. C. Smith, Mrs. M. G. Bender, Mrs. Emma Swallow, and Anna Berkebile, and twelve grandchildren. His wife preceded him by nine years to the glory land. He became a Christian in early life, was for many years a member of the Christian church, and at the time of his death was a member of the Brethren church.

J. L. GINGRICH.

MILLER—Merle A. Miller, son of Adam M. and Lucie Kels Miller, was born July 18, 1900 and died May 1, 1927, aged 26 years, 9 months and 13 days.

In early youth he was a member of the Brethren church and a regular attendant of the Sunday school. He served for eighteen months in the A. E. F. during the World War. Death came as a shock to his friends as a result of a mysterious accident. He is survived by his father, step-mother, one brother and one step-sister.

J. L. GINGRICH.

MARDIS—Macks Elden, son of Mr. and Mrs. James L. Mardis, died September 25, 1927. The baby was a member of the Cradle Roll of the Third Brethren Sunday school. The parents are faithful members of the church. They have two children remaining. The child was two months old and was ill only two days, death being due to acute indigestion.

J. L. GINGRICH.

HAGEE—John Wesley Hagee was born in Hillsboro, Ill., September 23, 1843, and departed this life at his home in Oswego, Kansas, November 17, 1927, at the age of 84 years, one month and 4 days. Mr. Hagee spent many years of his life teaching music. He was also in the clothing business in Indianapolis, Indiana, for a number of years. He came to Kansas about 43 years ago and had made Oswego his home for about 20 years. He leaves three sons, Carl, Clyde and Chester, the latter lives in Fort Scott, Kansas, and is a brother-in-law of the writer. Chester went to Oswego and had charge of the funeral arrangements, and was accompanied by his wife and son. Mr. Hagee was well respected by the citizens of his city and community.

Funeral service was conducted from the Methodist church of that city, November 19, 1927, by the writer, assisted by Rev. Sutton, pastor of the church.

Burial was made in the cemetery of that city.

L. G. WOOD.

FESSLER—Richard Fessler, drayman, and former employee of the Lotterer second-hand store, passed away at the Fort Scott Hospital, Wednesday, November 16th, 1927, at the age of 78 years, 6 months and 10 days. Mr. Fessler had no relatives in this country. The funeral was conducted at the Konantz Mortuary on November 17th by the writer.

Burial was made in the Oak Grove cemetery.

L. G. WOOD.

MEMORIAL

Rosy F. Talbott, daughter of Nancy and William Talbott, was born at Prairie Center, Illinois, December 21, 1868, and passed to her reward from her home at Milledgeville, Illinois, November 4, 1927, aged 58 years, 10 months and 13 days.

In the beginning days of her girlhood she, with her parents moved to Malta, Illinois, where she spent the happy days of her girlhood.

In February of the year 1887 she came, with the parents, to make her home in Milledgeville.

On December 3, 1890 she became the happy bride of O. M. Myers who has been to her a faithful, loving husband and who now mourns her sudden and unlooked for departure.

To this union were born three children, Guy Allen, William Henry, and Hazel Courtney Knox, all residents of Milledgeville and community.

Besides the relatives above mentioned and four grandchildren, she leaves to mourn their loss two brothers and one sister, Mrs. Laura Balcom of Malta, Illinois, W. L. Talbott of Sioux City, Iowa, and Charles Talbott of Wausaukee, Wisconsin and a host of more distant relatives and friends.

The whole community was shocked by her sudden demise.

On March 13, 1910 she became a member of the First Brethren church of Milledgeville and the members of the church and its auxiliary organizations will very much miss her from their assemblies. The great God of the heavens in whom she trusted and his Son Jesus Christ whom she accepted as Lord and Master will abundantly reward her for her faith and trust in him in which faith, by the power of the Holy Spirit, she continued to the end.

It has been known to the husband, and perhaps some of her very closest associates, that at the time her two sons went into the service of our country in the late World War, her nervous system received a shock from which she never fully recovered.

The people of the church and community extend to this bereaved family their most heartfelt sympathy.

Funeral services from the home, November 6, 1927 by GEO. E. CONE.

BAUM—Sylvia Alergra Barnett was born March 9th, 1909, at Canal Fulton, Ohio, died at Wooster, Ohio, September 27th, at the age of 18 years, 6 months and 18 days.

She was married to Louis Geih Baum at Medina, Ohio, December 7th, 1926, making their married life to extend over less than a year.

Sylvia was a girl whose laughing happy character was not to be forgotten, and her early demise is mourned by many friends and relatives.

When quite a young girl of perhaps 9 or 10 years, she united with the church, having received Christian baptism.

The mystery of her early passing can not be explained nor understood, but let us believe that a Merciful God knows best and that he never mistakes but does all things well.

CHARLES A. BANE.

MOORE—Mrs. Nancy Moore, wife of Albert Moore, sister of the late Dr. Gordon, died at the home of her nurse, Miss Bessie Leach, in Frankfort, Indiana, Friday, November 4th, of paralysis. She is survived by her husband and numerous relatives. She was a life-long member of the Brethren church, belonging to the old Salem congregation and later, of the Flora church. Living at some distance from the church, she has not been active in it for some years, but her Christian character was above blemish. Within the past nine months, both she and her husband were stricken with paralysis and he is confined to his bed, childish and almost helpless. It is pathetic when these calamities befall us, but these people were well cared for by the above named nurse, who is a good Christian girl. Funeral services were conducted in Endsley's Funeral Home, Frankfort, and burial in the Burlington cemetery.

CHARLES A. BANE.

SOLOMON—Lavina D. Solomon was born in Berks County, Pennsylvania, October 28, 1846, died November 1st 1927, aged 81 years and 4 days. In 1869 she was united in marriage to J. D. Solomon in Indiana, moving from there to Vanburen County, Michigan, the same year of their marriage. With the exception of five years spent in Kansas they have lived at New Troy, Michigan. She was the last charter member of the Almeha church. She leaves an adopted son, 3 grandchildren and six great grandchildren.

J. D. Solomon passed away nine years ago this month.

Support That Is Deserved

The time of the year has come when we are called upon to give financial support to the great work being done by the National Sunday School Association. Making a "White Gift Offering" has become a fixed event in our church calendar, one to which most of the Sunday schools look forward with pleasure and satisfaction. The very generous and almost universal response that has been made year after year to the financial needs of the Association is a testimony to the sustained confidence of the brotherhood in it—a most enviable compliment indeed. And in view of this we have no fear of sounding a contrary note when we say that the support given has been deserved and urge that as a reason for continued support.

The Sunday School Association deserves our continued support because it has proven itself a good servant of the brotherhood. It has promoted quite successfully through the years the efficiency, spirituality and outreach of our local Sunday schools. It has challenged us with goals, thus inspiring to greater activity. It has supplied us with methods and means of religious education in increasing amount and worth. It has guided in organization and training that have made for greater effectiveness, stronger appeal and more permanent results on the part of our church schools. It has led the way into new lines of religious educational activity that has made it possible for the church to reach many of the hitherto unreached children with its message of life and moulding influence. It has given larger vision and helpful counsel by means of the printed page, field workers and conference program, and in many other ways has shown itself a servant worthy of our confidence and support.

But aside from what may be termed its organization work, the Sunday School Association has served the brotherhood in ways that merit commendation and continued support. It has long been a generous contributor to our mission work in Kentucky, a work that lies very near the heart of our church, a goodly portion of its annual budget being set aside for that purpose. It is, therefore, to be kept in mind, when making your gift at the Christmas season in response to the Association's call, that you are giving to home missions, and a very challenging and noble type of home missions. By that gift you will be helping to make known the Gospel of the Incarnate Son to many who have had little or no chance to hear it in its fullness and purity.

This support is deserved also because of what the Association has made possible for Ashland College. It made our church school a leader among other colleges in the matter of religious education by assuming the major portion of the salary of the teacher in that department. It is feared by some that the brotherhood does not realize as it should the importance of such a department to the young people of our church. It is of very great importance and worth. It imparts a practical knowledge of the Word of God, gives guidance and inspiration to a life of service, and trains and equips for leadership in the church. One of the most urgent needs of the average congregation is a trained and intelligent leadership, lay as well as ministerial, and every young person who goes to college ought to come away equipped and trained to take a place of leadership in the church that becomes his home. The Religious Education Department of Ashland College aims to supply such preparation to the Christian young people who have the good fortune to attend there. In one sense it is to the college what the Christian Endeavor is to the local church—a sort of training school in religious activities. It has borne splendid fruitage in the years past and is full of promise for the years that are just ahead. To make such a service possible is a really great contribution, and the church can well afford to stand back of the National Sunday School Association in its purpose to continue its good work. The college would find it difficult, if indeed possible, to maintain such a department without the aid which is thereby provided.

In addition to all this, the Association has been making liberal contributions to the college for the purchase of much needed religious books. Through this generosity, along with other gifts, our church school library has been experiencing a steady and respectable growth, such as has called forth commendation on the part of examiners.

But the details need not be extended further. It should be evident that the work that the Sunday School Association is carrying is a most vital one, that it is a service to the brotherhood that we we could ill afford to dispense with, and one that is of real consequence to the advancement of the kingdom of God. An organization that performs such a service fully deserves our support, our unstinted loyal support. Remembering this our gifts will be the more spontaneous and hearty, and so the more truly will they be white.

The Value of Mature Preachers

No one has given more hearty and persistent support to the effort to provide for the pensioning of our aged ministers than has the Editor of The Evangelist, but there is another side to our treatment of our older ministers that we are prone to neglect or to cherish wrong ideas about. We are inclined to label the men of mature years "old" and to begin to "shelve" them all too soon. And because of our attitude toward them, they not infrequently grow old prematurely and agree with us that they are unable longer to carry the burdens of a pastorate, when if we had not told them they were old and that we wanted younger men, they might have been rendering their richest and most vital service.

This thought was brought forcibly to our attention recently upon receipt of a personal letter from our good friend, Dr. A. D. Gnagey, who in some respects has been a father to us in our ministry. Of course no one will think of Brother Gnagey as "old", though he says he was seventy-one the twenty-ninth of last month, because his characteristic vigor of mind and body and his long-time interest in and understanding of youth have been maintained with such undiminished force that we have thought of him merely as one of our matured ministers, seasoned in judgment and enriched in life. He is one of a few who have refused to think of themselves as old or to allow us to classify them as such. He is carrying forward a most thorough and exacting program in his pastorate at Altoona, Pennsylvania, and is doing some of the best and most constructive work of his ministry.

Another example of such efficiency and aggressiveness of service and such retention of vigor and ambition is to be found in the person of another very good friend, Rev. J. L. Kimmel, of about the same age as Brother Gnagey, and doing a real man's work in building up the mission at Fort Wayne, Indiana. He displayed more courage than many young ministers would have had in undertaking such a big and difficult task as the launching of a mission church in a city like Fort Wayne, and the success he is achieving under the mighty hand of God is such that many young men would be proud to claim. He is able to do this big job because he has remained young, and he is able to do it so well because he has grown rich in pastoral experience and in spiritual understanding.

Another shining example of those who are able to carry the spirit and vigor of youth into the evening of life was, until now, found in the person of our lamented Brother E. B. Shaver, whose ministry of more than half a century won for him the title of "Father of the Churches of the Virginia Valley". He never did become inactive; he was always needed; he was pastor of two churches when he died at eighty-four and preached up to within two weeks of his death. And how rich and valued was his ministry in those latter years, those who sat under his preaching or shared his ministry in the home bear witness.

Why should we establish a ministerial deadline when none exists? Why should we encourage preachers to grow old? Some will grow old more quickly than others for various reasons. But old age could be greatly deferred, if we were not so thoughtlessly cruel as to tell our preachers of mature years that they are getting old, that they are not worth as much as they once were, that they must begin to step down and out. We need their ripened judgment; we need their deepened spirituality; we need their far reach of faith. And they deserve the joy of service to the last.

The Bible as a Missionary

(This editorial written two weeks ago, but crowded out for lack of space.)

We sometimes get the relation of the Bible and the messenger turned about in our thinking. We think of the preacher or missionary as the principal factor in the propagation of the kingdom of God, and the Bible as a sort of an accessory, a tool, an aid in the undertaking. Whereas the Bible is the principal factor and the messenger incidental. The Bible is essential and is divine. It is the message of God that brings life and immortality to light. It is the Bible that sin-sick humanity wants and needs and not the preacher or missionary. It is well that we keep this in mind and not exalt the messenger above the message.

It is good that we have a day set apart on which to give special attention to exalting the Word. The first Sunday in December is known as Bible Sunday. Various Bible societies are urging the observance of this day with a view to making possible the wider circulation of the Bible. We commend the work being done by both the American and New York Bible societies and also the objectives of Bible Sunday.

But we also believe there ought to be more constant emphasis given to the place and influence of the Bible,—in our services, in our personal contacts with men, in our homes and in the schools. There is special need just now of giving larger place to the importance of the Bible in the face of the organizations set for the discrediting of the Bible and the breaking down of the hold of its teachings and influence on the people. The best defense of the Bible is the Bible itself. Put it more widely into the hands and hearts of the people and give it greater prominence in every way and it will win men to God.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

President E. E. Jacobs gives us a brief digest of college news this week.

Two new Sunday schools are reported organized in Kentucky, at Manuel and Napfor. At both places keen interest on the part of the people is being manifest.

Our correspondent from Allentown, Pennsylvania, reports that the church is rejoicing at having secured the leadership of Brother S. E. Christiansen, and that they are expectant of great gains.

Read what the Business Manager has to say this week. He introduces the Brethren Annual which is already in the mail. Also don't fail to notice his special offer to those who wish to make a Christmas present of the Evangelist to some friend. Also, let us drop a hint. Suppose your church should want to make a Christmas present of the Evangelist to the membership—every home in the church! What better thing could it do? And you would get it at the $1.50 rate, too.

Prof. A. L. DeLozier recently occupied the pulpit of the Fremont, Ohio, church. Mrs. Grace Srack will occupy the pulpit on December 18th. After that they are expecting the arrival of their new pastor, Brother W. S. Crick, the first Sunday in the new year.

Dr. W. H. Beachler, pastor of the First Church of Dayton, writes an interesting letter of the doings of his large congregation. Notwithstanding a certain loss in membership, the church is pressing on endeavoring to do substantial work. The various auxiliaries are loyal and active, the Christian Endeavorers being graded and well organized.

Brethren Beal and Wood were yoked up in an evangelistic campaign at Fort Scott, Kansas, where the latter is the efficient pastor and is leading the people out of confusion and hopelessness into order and bright prospect. Doctor Beal proved a highly appreciated evangelist and the Lord blessed the efforts of these two capable and consecrated workmen, and as a direct or indirect result eight have been baptized, one awaits baptism and others have expressed a purpose to obey the Lord in this manner in the near future. Brother Beal believes the pastor is the right man in this difficult field and that the prospect warrants the brotherhood's loyal support.

Brother W. R. Deeter tells of the closing of his pastorate of five years at Portis, Kansas, in August, and of the many fine expressions of respect and appreciation by church and community. He had made himself a real part of the community's life and with the fine spirit in which he did his work, he doubtless was greatly appreciated. The church house and parsonage were remodeled and modernized and the membership greatly increased during his ministry. He is now hard at work in his new pastorate—the West Alexandria and Clayton churches—and has been well received. He is now engaged in a revival meeting at West Alexandria, being assisted by Brother L. V. King as song leader.

Brother W. C. Benshoff gives us a brief summary of his work at Berlin, Pennsylvania, where he closed a successful pastorate of six and one-half years last spring. It was a remarkable work that was accomplished there during that time—the building of a large, beautiful new church house and the adding to the membership of 155. During the summer months he supplied the pulpit of the Armstrong county circuit, and at the West Kittanning church three were added to the membership. He is now well established in his new pastorate at Waynesboro, where one has been added by baptism since his arrival on the field. Recently Brother Benshoff was a co-worker with Brother F. C. Vanator in an evangelistic campaign in Canton, Ohio. He speaks highly of the fine work the Vanators have done there.

Dr. W. S. Bell, Endowment Campaign Secretary, has begun his canvass of the Ohio churches, and the first one to be reported is Ashland, at which place he merely gathered up the fragments, as nearly all the members had been canvassed at the opening of the present campaign. The brotherhood would naturally expect the Ashland Brethren to be on their toes regarding the college campaign and they are not disappointed. The largest offering of any church yet reported was made by this comparatively small group of heavily burdened Brethren. Only $295 of this amount, however, are new pledges, which we added to the former total and get $127,026.54.

Malcolm Miller, son of Dr. J. Allen Miller, won the Ashland County Peace Declamation Contest, after having won the church contest of the First Brethren Church. As a result of the first victory he won a bronze medal and a money prize, and in the county contest from five contestants he won a silver medal and ten dollars in gold. He will be the county's representative in the congressional district contest. The winners of the various congressional districts will engage in six elimination contests, the six winners of which will meet in the final state contest at Columbus the latter part of January, the first prize being $500 and a four year college scholarship; the second, $200 and a two year college scholarship; the third, $100 and a one year scholarship, and three prizes of $50 to the next winners. The contests are sponsored by the Ohio Council of Churches for the purpose of promoting the cause of world peace.

GENERAL ARTICLES

That White Gift Offering!

By W. I. Duker, President National Sunday School Association

Seasons come and seasons go but the Love of God goes on forever. Special days are valuable and glorious to us, as we hold them in our heart. We can no more compare or contrast such days as Christmas, Easter and Thanksgiving than we can contrast mother's and father's love. Each has for us a special significance. While it is true, that in a way, "Thanksgiving" was born at Plymouth by the Pilgrim Fathers, yet Christmas was born on the Plains of Bethlehem by Almighty God. And while we revere our Pilgrim Fathers, yet our "All" is given to him who gave us the Matchless Gift of his Son, the Lord Jesus Christ. This is the season again dawning. This is the time of "Giving."

In years gone by, our Brethren people, wisely planning and carefully working their plans, have directed the work that is made possible by our yearly White Gift Offering. Nothing new, save a normal growth, is presented to our people. We are not asking that you consider new plans and a pronounced departure. So splendidly have others striven that by this time the entire brotherhood is conversant with the work of the National Sunday School Association. It is not the time and surely, just now, not the place to enter into a discussion of the relative merits of the work of this Association. All have passed the scrutinizing eye of the entire interested brotherhood. Our interest in every phase of this work has been indicated again and again. There is not a single feature of this work that augments the slightest doubt in the minds of any "Brethren." Just a bit of splendid effort of which we are justly proud.

The Brethren people have been generous in the past as relates to this Gift. Of course, as always happens, there are those who fail to catch the spirit and give their part. Some few churches have gone way beyond their indicated share. Thus the "median" has been retained. Our only desire this year is that we may do as well as before, and that a few churches that have forgotten their parts will get in line. Greater blessings will come to us as a church if all churches give a Gift, though small, than if the burden falls upon a few. Or would we have said better, had we said, "than if but a few availed themselves of the splendid opportunity?" In our local church we would rather that fifty men give one hundred dollars, than that two men give two hundred dollars. After the fifty men have made their contribution of one hundred dollars, we have just that many spirit-filled men to do still greater things, after the two hundred dollars have been given by two men, we have but two spirit-filled men to continue the work. If we can stimulate therefore, a few local churches to push this phase of our entire programme a bit more so that we shall have a more complete response, we shall be satisfied.

Certainly every gift throughout the year, given unto the Lord, commemorates the Wonderful Gift of our Savior, yet all the more may we remember him at this appropriate season of the year. Wise men from the East, came bearing gifts to the Babe in the Manger. While other gifts are forgotten these gifts of the Wise Men still remain in the foreground. There is something wonderful in the birth of a child. There is an association with the day of our birth that never leaves us. You may forget some of those splendid days of our Lord's life here among men but you never will forget the day of his birth. There is one day that stands out in the mind and heart of every Christian like, "A city set upon a hill" and can not be hid. Christian or pagan, the Spirit of Christmas holds you in its magic grasp. Men who know no Christ and live a life of sin, observe this day as one of joy and delight. There is no other day like unto it and never has been in the catalogue of days.

Until the day when we shall all sit down with him and he shall gird himself and serve us, this day will be a beacon light to all people. And we love to think that even in heaven, the Birth of our Lord and Master as a babe here on earth, will be a day of special rejoicing. Man cannot properly sing its praises, and angels must fall down before him and admit their inability to give due recognition to this wonderful day.

In your town already, men, who surely have never known him, are planning a Christmas dance. One to start early in the evening and lasting far into the night. Each participant will be required to contribute largely to a fund raised at that time. This money in most instances will be given to some philanthropic venture. Soon the papers will be telling the story of "how much" this dance afforded in the way of revenue. You may feel that your sense of the Christmas season has been outraged. You may lift your voice in a loud denunciation. And this we think, you ought to do as Christians. But what better can you do than to indicate to these folks a "Better Way." Let us meet in a House dedicated to the Lord, and after honoring him with our lips and our hearts in sincere worship, dig down into our pockets and place upon the altar some tangible evidences of our worship. When every church contributes more than the local dance hall, then may we lift our heads and tune our hearts to sing his praise. Negative teaching has its place, but positive teaching is more appropriate at this season of the year.

Certainly, each pastor will understand how best to apprise his congregation of the offering and their opportunity. No one can suggest to another how this may best be done. We do recall, however, a splendid plan made use of last year by the immediate past president of this association. As we recall, first of all this offering was dig-Opens the appeal this week in behalf of White Gift Offerings. This will be followed next week by appeals from other officers of the Association. It is to be hoped that every Sunday school in the brotherhood will be already well under way with plans for promoting the spirit of giving at the Christmas season and for directing that spirit in unselfish and loyal channels. The Sunday School Association with its worthy program of Missionary and Religious Education promotion deserves the support of the entire church. nified in the minds of his people. A very splendid step. Then definite plans were made to acquaint each and every member of his congregation with a definite method of securing this offering. No one was allowed to escape knowledge of the fact that the offering was before them. Letters were written to all, in which a definite call was made. Then a certain challenge was ejected. Church loyalty was aroused. And best of all a very splendid offering was given unto the Lord. Surely we do not mean to suggest that any one's plan be adopted, but we do suggest with all our heart that SOME DEFINITE PLAN be adopted in each local church. The very splendid thing to be complimented in the church referred to was the fact that they had a "PLAN." If every congregation has the vision plus the plan the work will be cared for in such a way that all will be delighted.

What more need we say, brethren, what else may we do, that his name may be glorified and his blood be accepted!

Things By the Way

By A. D. Gnagey, D.D.

America and the Puritan

We have just passed another Thanksgiving Day. A few really did give thanks for something, but the dominant thing in the life of the American people on this annual holiday is not thanksgiving, it is feasting. There was a time, in the days of the Puritans, when it was a day of fasting, and it were better if it were that now. But the Puritan type of life no longer appeals to us. We sneer at it. Yet we should not forget that it is thanks to the Puritan that we are what we are as a nation—that we are no worse than we are. It would make tremendously for health,—physically, intellectually, and spiritually if we would allow ourselves to be brought under the restraints and the exacting discipline which characterized those early pioneers. They were a people who knew perfectly well, and let every one else know, that their God was the Lord. The unpatriotic habit of sneering at the Puritan is no credit to any one. It is told of Agassiz walking through the Alps with a boy younger than himself, and coming to a chasm which the other could not leap across. Agassiz made a bridge of himself to let the other boy crawl over his back to safety. Many of us have come to where we are, in just that way. Some one is responsible for the statement that there isn't a wealthy or prosperous American citizen today who has not crawled into his present position over the back of a Puritan. Probably an exaggerated statement, nevertheless one that carries with it something worth thinking about. Isn't it a fact that most of us have come into our present heritage in just about the same way? Do we, the Brethren people, in our public worship ever give recognition to the price some noble souls paid two hundred years ago for the privilege which is ours today? Let us not forget to acknowledge our indebtedness to the past; it will keep us humble and thoughtful. It was a wise old gentleman who once said: "God requireth that which is past." Let us think of that as we approach the New Year.

A Blot on the Schools

Mayor Thompson's scandalous "freaks" brings to our memory an opinion handed down by Judge Grosscup some years ago on the subject of excluding religion from our public schools: The only blot on the American public schools is the exclusion of spirituality as one of the great facts of the world. The law admits Darwin, admits science and admits all facts except the supreme fact that religion is the fundamental influence in all movements of mankind. As long as America turns its back on religion and the existence of God—the perfect message given by Jesus Christ—it is excluding the most powerful influence for good, both spiritual and civil, that the world has at its command.

Boys Take Notice

The most natural illustration of leadership in our own nation is that signified by the office of the presidency. Is it entirely accidental that the only president who was ever impeached and who is generally regarded as having made a failure of a matchless opportunity was a heavy drinker? With all sympathy for Andrew Johnson because of his lowly origin and because of the fact that he was unexpectedly promoted by the assassination of his chief to become the successor of Abraham Lincoln, the tragic story shows that the whole delicate problem of reconstruction, involving the destiny of the whole colored race, was mishandled by a man who was often without self-control because of his indulgences. The writer cherishes the hope that if the Evangelist has among its readers a group of boys they will read the story of Jehonadab the Rechabite, of a family of total abstainers: it is found in 2 Kings 10:15-17 and in Jeremiah 35:1-11.

Christ Calls Busy People

"I am too busy; I do not have the time." Such is one of the excuses only too frequently offered for the purpose of evading doing the thing which the mind is convinced ought to be done. It might be well to remind such people that the only kind of people God can use in his service are busy people. A young girl who had been reading "Deep Sea Missions" enthusiastically, became interested in Dr. Grenfell's wonderful work at Battle Harbor, and begged her friends to allow her to write and offer her services as a nurse in the hospital. Her pastor asked kindly but keenly, "What are you doing HERE, in your own church at home? Get to work in the church and Sunday school. Christ calls busy people." It was a gentle rebuke, but effective. Here are some Bible facts for those who are too busy to engage in the Lord's work:

Moses was busy with his flocks at Horeb.

Gideon was busy threshing wheat by the wine-press.

Saul was busy searching for his father's lost beasts.

David was busy caring for his father's sheep.

Elisha was busy plowing with twelve yoke of oxen.

Nehemiah was busy bearing the king's wine cup.

Amos was busy following the flock.

Peter and Andrew were busy casting a net into the sea.

James and John were busy mending their nets.

Matthew was busy collecting customs.

Saul was busy persecuting the friends of Jesus.

William Carey was busy mending and making shoes.

What are YOU doing that you are too busy to answer God's call to service?

The Bible Church

By Charles W. Mayes

(Moderator's address given at the Illiokota District Conference of the Brethren Church, held at Leon, Iowa, and voted by that body to be published in The Evangelist.)

We are indeed grateful to our Lord that we have been privileged to meet again in Conference. Throughout this Conference may we be mindful of his care and supreme goodness to us during the past year.

It seems that a moderator's address at a District Conference is sometimes a formal affair to take about so much time at the beginning of the conference and then to be forgotten as soon as the conference is over. I trust it may not be so today, for if the matters which I bring before your minds are to be forgotten as soon as we go back home, I am ready to stop now.

It is the purpose of this address to show how we can make our churches greater, strengthen their testimony both at home and abroad and make them more worthy of the Lord's commendation.

First, we should have a renewed emphasis on Bible preaching. I do not mean to insinuate that our preachers have not been doing this. But it is my firm conviction that the world and the church need more of the "Thus saith the Lord" today. Many preachers of other denominations in particular, are blown about with the winds at the present time and the people who want the truth and believe the Bible, (and there are many such) will seek the church where the preacher has a positive message. It is the preachers who preach expository sermons and have a teaching ministry who are doing the real and lasting work for the Lord today. We claim to be a "revival" church. But in connection with these we can very profitably hold Bible conferences for the exposition of the Word. Many strong Bible teachers from other denominations are many times very willing to assist in an effort to expound the great doctrines of the Bible. Every time we call in great Bible expositors from our own church or from others our own testimony will be strengthened after they have left. The interest in Bible conferences among Bible-believing and Bible-loving people is increasing today and there is no reason why the Brethren church standing for the Bible, as it claims, cannot receive great and lasting good from such. To this end I would offer the suggestion that every church in this district hold a Bible conference this coming year.

We in the Brethren church hear quite frequently about the "Bible the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible." And when we say a whole Bible, we should mean a whole Bible. We should not only mean a whole Bible, but preach a whole Bible. With the present trend of world affairs Brethren preachers should acquaint the people with the prophetic Word. This means the study of the books of Isaiah, Jeremiah, Zechariah, Daniel and the Revelations with, of course, many others. The church today is bewildered after listening to man's ideas, man's plans, and man's programs. Much of the church is engaged in work that is contrary to God's program. Yet where can you see God's program unfolding but in the prophetic Word. Besides there is no more fascinating subject today than that of the Biblical truth unfolded. Let us use the whole Bible.

Second, let us place new and renewed emphasis on Bible classes. By this I do not only mean the Bible class of the Sunday school. We have always had these and they have been the means of much of our progress but a Sunday school class will double its testimony when it becomes a Bible class. It seems that in many instances the committee which chooses the Sunday school lessons has been so kind as to relieve us from studying great portions of the Bible. For instance who ever heard of a Sunday school lesson on the book of Jude? Yet is not Jude a part of the Eternal Word? Likewise many other important portions of the Word are omitted by the committee. It is my suggestion therefore, that wherever possible Sunday school teachers be urged to take a particular Book of the Bible and study it in the class for a period of months.

In connection with this we will find that especially among the young people there is a desire to study the Bible systematically. This can be very conveniently arranged for in week night classes. Young people, when properly approached will desire to study the Bible intensely. They are even willing to give a night a week to this work. I therefore suggest that every pastor in this district make an effort to secure a week night Bible class of young people for the instructing of the young people in the "faith once for all delivered."

The more of these classes that can be held, the better the church of tomorrow will be grounded in the faith and the more able to combat such heresies as Seventh Day Adventism, Russellism, Christian Science, Theosophy and Modernism. These special classes give the pastor an excellent opportunity to talk frankly about what the Bible says concerning false teachers, and the apostasy, to say nothing of the real opportunity to show the true purpose of the church, the meaning of Grace, the meaning of repentance, the meaning of conversion and the doctrines of the church in general including the ordinances.

Third, let us place renewed emphasis on the selection of church music and literature. It is my firm conviction that we lose a powerful force when we lose the great hymns of the church. We are sometimes carried away in the whirl of lively music, and in our effort to make it "peppy" the stately hymns of the Spirit are left out. Education in Christian truth will cause believers to be satisfied with nothing short of the best and most worshipful hymns.

The matter of church literature is an important subject. We should be loyal to our own church publications. However, let us ask at all times for sound biblical literature. We will get what we ask for. The matter of adequate Christian Endeavor literature is no small problem. Here it seems quite necessary to supplement some publications in connection with our own. If the "Christian Endeavor World" does not quite meet the need, others may be secured.

Fourth, let us place renewed emphasis on Bible homes. I am not going to set up the slogan "A family altar in every Brethren home in the Illiokota district in 1928." I wish it could be done. But I would rather suggest that every pastor honestly strive to have established one dozen new family altars in his church this year. I wish someone could offer a suggestion as to how the conversation of the home could be made to center around the Bible, our Lord and his church just as naturally as the work of the family is discussed. Probably in this the altar will aid some.

Fifth, let us place renewed emphasis upon Bible activities. We must remember that the purpose of a Christian is to glorify God, exalt his Son, be led by the Spirit and spread the gospel to the ends of the earth. We must be careful therefore that all the activities of the church tend toward that ultimate goal. It is my conviction that we should rapidly increase our contributions to home and foreign missions. These matters are a fine thermometer to test the spiritual heat of the churches. As a rule little interest in missions means low spirituality in a church. It is therefore suggested that this year each pastor place especial emphasis on informing his church of the work of our missions in Africa, South America and in the homeland. We could place pictures in the churches of these fields and talk about them frequently as sermon illustrations, without solicitation in every case for money but merely to inform our people of the work of the missionaries. Each church should know the names of as many missionaries as is convenient and keep in touch with their writings through the Brethren Missionary and the Brethren Evangelist. It might be suggested that no one give less than five dollars at the Easter offering so that all may have access to the Brethren Missionary, a monthly magazine printed by the Foreign Missionary Society. In the meantime let us talk of the home work in the various districts and especially the Kentucky fields that when the Thanksgiving Offering is received all the members of all the churches will know something in detail as to what our mission stations are doing. Then let every man and woman, boy and girls in the Sunday school have a separate envelope in which he is to place his own contribution for spreading the Gospel in other places. It would be a step of great advancement if every individual in the Brethren churches of this district would give something freely and willingly to the extension work celebrated at the Thanksgiving season. Let it be suggested that no pastor ever preach a "missionary sermon." But instead let him continually preach the whole Gospel showing the position of believers in Christ Jesus. Let him show then the privileges accorded in Grace, and the Bible teaching on how much of God's money man is supposed to keep. When church members are truly Christian and consecrated the money matters will take care of themselves. Then church missions will not be a matter of the preachers harping on the money proposition.

In the case of other Bible activities shall we not aim to have an active Christian Endeavor and midweek service for Bible study and prayer in every church? It is suggested that every Christian Endeavor endeavor to make young folks Christian and come to know the salvation that is in Christ Jesus. The best social conditions always exist where each individual knows the Lord. It is further suggested that every pastor lead his Christian Endeavor to see the meaning of a full rounded life which we receive from him who said, "I am the Life." As a means to this end, the Bible must be the basis of everything and literature chosen which will harmonize with the Bible and not lead young folks to give talks and read clippings which were written by some person who does not hold the high and exalted opinions of the Bible as we do.

In the matter of mid-week services, let us say they can never be stressed too much. The person who attends regularly is bound to grow in Grace. He cannot help it. Could we not increase our attendance 25% in the next year? We can at least keep this in mind.

Sixth, I believe that the Illiokota district can assist in helping to solve our preacher problem. We are told that there are too few young men studying for the ministry today. Surely, this is not because capable young men cannot be found. It seems rather because they as young men, have not seen how important the spreading of the Gospel is. It is therefore suggested that each church under the direction of the pastor take cognizance of their young men, how they grow in grace, their capabilities and set around them an environment so that when the Lord calls them to the ministry they will be able to hear the call. As much as we appreciate the efficiency of a few men of our church boards and a few others in furnishing preachers for our church and missionaries for our fields, still we should not leave this very important work to a few. We have just as fine and capable young men in this district as they have in California, Pennsylvania, or Ohio. May God help us to put the challenge of the work of the Lord Jesus Christ before our churches that young men and women will dedicate themselves to the Lord's special service. I would like to see a half dozen young preachers from this district in the next five years. Fellow ministers, let us proclaim our joy publicly as being co-laborers together with him. Let us make our young men want to become heralds of his cross. I was told not so long ago of a boy ten years old in one of our churches in this district, who said to his father, "I sure never want to be a preacher." When asked by his father the reason why, he said, "Because our preacher is always talking about not having any money, and when I get big, I want to have some money." That pastor, now gone from our district, never realized how his words took root in the heart of that boy. I may be a little short of money sometimes, but I tell you, I've got multitudes of things more important to talk about. Brethren, I wonder what our young men think of us anyway when they see the estimate we place on our call to the Lord's work. I tell you, Brethren, it gives us something to think about.

Now as I close, let me say that I have tried to emphasize Bible preaching, and Bible conferences, Bible classes, Bible music and literature, Bible homes, Bible activities, and an effort to secure more young Bible preachers. It is my prayer that these things may be remembered and accomplished all to the glory of God.

MY CONCEPTION OF AN EVANGELISTIC MEETING W. H. Book

First, the gospel should be preached in love. God's word, rather than man's opinion, should be stressed. Certainly there should be a strong desire to make additions, but the evangelist should be sure he has instructed them in the first and second principles. Those added should know why they have accepted Christ and the meaning of church membership. Too many, when they have been baptized, go their way, and the minister sees their faces no more forever.

They should be converted to Christ, rather than to the evangelist. They should join Christ, rather than the "meeting." Better have one addition who is informed and who has been thoroughly converted, than one thousand who have been attracted by the claptrap methods and high-pressure pulls of the evangelist. The evangelist should teach the converts "all things."

The dollar mark should not be the main goal. The evangelist should preach and emphasize the grace of giving, but it should be to the cause in general, rather than to the evangelist. When the evangelist takes from a weak church $1,000 for a month's work and leaves the poor minister to struggle for his small salary, he has sinned.

It is all right to have the children join, provided they are old enough to believe and come of their own accord, but to "pull" them in by special efforts is a mistake.

When the meeting ends, the minister and people should be in better condition to work together. The evangelist should labor to strengthen the cords of love. It matters little if he be forgotten a week after the meeting has ended, if the minister still has the confidence and the love of his people.—Christian Standard.

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

The Soul's Opportunity

By Rev. Ernest Burner Allen, Vice President of International Society of Christian Endeavor

TEXT: Behold, now is the accepted time; behold, now is the day of salvation." II Cor. 6:2.

"On the great clock of time there is but one word, NOW." Some years ago a conference was held at Greenwich, England, when British and French astronomers met together to find if possible a difference of sixteen-one-hundredths of a second, which had crept into computations of meridians at Greenwich and Paris! They were prepared to spend two years to find this infinitesimal fragment of time, because when it was projected in various distant places, it caused a good deal of trouble. There are a great many men today who are looking for lost time! The tragedy of their lives is that they will never find it!

"They are slipping away—these sweet, swift years,
Like a leaf on the current cast;
With never a break in the rapid flow,
We watch them as one by one they go
Into the beautiful past.

There are only a few years left to love;
Shall we waste then in idle strife?
Shall we trample under our ruthless feet,
Those beautiful blossoms, rare and sweet,
By the dusty ways of life?"

There are two vain and dangerous conceits of life. One is, to spend all of the time regretting yesterday. A man took his wife out rowing, and as she sat in the boat, she trailed her left hand idly in the water. In an unguarded moment the precious rings on her finger slipped off into the water, though she tried to clutch them as they dropped away! And always after that, when they passed near the same spot in the water, she was eagerly gazing into the depths and ever ready to bare her arm to grasp what she wished was there again. Grasping of past things! That is the tragedy in many lives.

The other vain conceit of life is to spend all the time upon hopes for tomorrow. Dr. Fosdick says that the highest in us all and "Some time", each man declares, "I will attend to these deepest and finest relationships. Meanwhile he picks up his life as a football runner does the ball and speeds across the field. He has no present; he has only a future. ... 'Some time', he says, but it never comes." Men must remember the old Roman axiom, "Carpe diem—Seize the day." We must seize the day of youth, the day of life, the day of opportunity. It is said that on the outer walls on one of the towers of Beverley Minister there is a quaint old tile with this pregnant legend, "Now or When?" A modern business man has translated his life purpose in the same words, "Do it now."

Illustrations from life are always challenging. Here is a card from an old friend, who for many years has been laid aside. In the midst of her physical weakness and her inability to serve as heretofore, there is this tremendously significant comment upon the past years: "In these last days of illness and being shut in, I am glad I worked when I could."

What sort of memories are you today preparing for the other days ahead, in which you will measure and weigh the habit of your life? A well-known editorial writer offers an interesting confession in an article entitled, "Say it with Flowers, NOW." He tells of his plan to visit two old friends with whom he long had fellowship in service. The months passed by! In each instance he came too late to the home to see the old friend, and now has his "harvest of barren regrets" because he waited too long. Many times during years of happy association in service with Mr. Marion Lawrence, well-known and beloved in the Sunday school world, I have heard him repeat this little verse:

"It is better to buy a cheap bouquet
And give to your friend this very day,
Than a bushel of roses, white and red,
To lay on his casket when he is dead!"

There are some things we may single out, which are worth-while doing now. Let us give prayer, time and money to the cause of Jesus Christ. Each one of us has an opportunity to pray! One may be bed-ridden and poor, but he can pray. He may be unable to speak well or even to write effectively, but he can pray. Prayer may lift a church, a soul, a community, Godward. If we have all things else and have not prayer, God will say to us: "One thing thou lackest." Most of us can give time to the Lord's work. "Time," as Benjamin Franklin said, "is the stuff that life is made of." A little each day given to service, such time as might be necessary to make a call or use the 'phone, and much may be accomplished. The church exists and the Kingdom moves on because many people are giving time. Money also we must give. I have put it last in the list, but it is important. It is good that a multitude of people are investing their money in the stable securities of the Kingdom of God. It makes possible a beautiful ministry. It brings returns which nothing else can equal. Regular habits of giving, established in youth, and enlarged when we come to the making of our own home—these are worth while.

Let us give real heed today to the call of Jesus Christ. There are many good purposes asking for our attention and awaiting our action. The call of Christ through this printed page may come to some who have heard it often. He has said, "Come follow me", and we should do it now. He has said, "Come, learn of me", and we should enroll as pupils in his school now. When are you going to begin to practice a Christian life? How can you be sure of any opportunity to do so unless you do it now?

Over thirty-three years ago, at the World's Fair, Mr. Moody told of a time when he preached in the old Farwell Hall, Chicago. It was October 8, 1871, just before the great fire. He had preached earnestly for six nights, and on the last night his text was this: "What shall I do with Jesus, that is called Christ?" He asked the people to take that question home with them and think it over, then come the following week with their decision. But the fire intervened. He never saw the people of that audience again. So in 1893 he acknowledged his mistake, expressed his regrets, and said that he had many times asked God to forgive him.

I sat in the new Farwell Hall that night and heard his story. I resolved to do each day the vital things. Many times I have failed. I confess it with sadness, but I will today again purpose to do what God leads me to do. I call you to serve him and to do it NOW. "Today is the tomorrow you talked about yesterday."

You said: "Tomorrow I will confess Christ." Do it now.

You said, "Tomorrow I will join the church." Do it now!

You said, "Tomorrow I will begin teaching that Sunday school class." Do it now!

You said, "Tomorrow I will call on those neighbors of mine, make that gift or send that letter to a friend, make my father and mother happy by a personal message, speak a word of encouragement and cheer, tell the man I have wronged I am sorry!"

A student in high school, you said you would master your work; a man in college, you declared you would grip the realities of life and not be mastered by the frivolities; a business man in the clutch of business, of fraternal relationships, of high-pressure activities, you said you would find time for your boy and your God. If ever these and the highest claims are recognized, you must do it now!

When the great bridge over the river at St. Louis was completed, it is said that the two sections did not come together in the center. An engineer was sent to New York to consult with the experts, so that any error might be located if possible. While he was there, a telegram came saying that the expansion of the metal caused by the rays of the sun had made the two halves meet in the center as planned. Promptly came the telegram: "Clamp them."

In the warmth of a religious atmosphere in your home, or in a church service, or as you read these lines, certain purposes may emerge in your soul. The two great ends of life—the earthly and the heavenly—come close together. "Clamp them!" Act! Put your purpose into life and service. Take your stand with those who are seeking to obey God and bring in his Kingdom." Do it now!—Christian Herald.

THE BREAD OF LIFE

When Jesus called himself the Bread of life he meant that he was the God of satisfaction. All searching finds its end in him. Every desire discovers in him its fulfillment. We exult in our longings, if we know Christ, for we know that he is coming to meet them with ecstasy in his hands.

Yet we have not yet reached the crowning meaning of this glorious name of Jesus. Not until the Lord's Supper was it disclosed, not until the Redeemer took bread, broke it before his disciples in the upper room, and said, "This is my body, broken for you." In that feast we discover Jesus to be indeed the Bread of life.

The bread of the communion table tells us that this supreme satisfaction of all our desires and completion of all our needs is not without cost, not without gift. It is without money and without price to us, but paid for by the Giver, paid for at infinite charges.

Christ, the Bread of Life, is a broken loaf—broken as the rock is broken to release its hidden wealth; broken as the soil is broken, the harvest pushing through; broken as the alabaster cruse was broken, that the fragrance of the ointment might fill the house. An unmarred loaf is a fine thing, but there is no perfection like the broken loaf of the communion table and of Calvary.

Let us eat the Bread of Life—all of us. Most daring, most blessed of similies. Flesh of our flesh and blood of our blood it shall become.—Amos R. Wells.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE LAW OF KINDNESS—Eph. 4:29-32. "Be ye kind one to another." It is a simple and universal requirement, and something that every one can do. Not every one can preach; not every one can sing; not every one can give large sums of money, but every one can be kind, and the obligation rests upon all. Not every one may find it easy, and especially to some people. But Christian standards were never meant to be easy. It is characteristic of them that they challenge and strain and seem unreasonably high to the mind of the world. That is an evidence of their divine source, and it is in bringing our lives up to that standard, rather than seeking to bring the standard down to our easy reach that we show ourselves sons of God.

TUESDAY

GOD'S WAYS NOT OURS—Eccl. 8:8-10. "Say not thou, what is the cause that the former days were better than these." But that is just what we are tempted to do. It is the sins of our own age that we are tremendously conscious of and are rightly troubled about. But let us not think that the prophets of God were not thus troubled in every age. Moreover let us not think that the hand of God is less powerful than it ever was, or that he is unable to accomplish that which he undertook.

WEDNESDAY

FAITHFUL WITNESSES—Isa. 43:1-13. "Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord and my servant whom I have chosen." Israel was called to be a witness of God among the other nations, and not even exile could relieve the people of that responsibility. A man may be in the midst of trouble which he cannot explain, but let him not lose a sense of responsibility for witnessing to the goodness and wisdom and power. Such circumstances may require greater faith than when one is well and strong, but his witness will also be correspondingly more effective. Such a heart, uncomplaining and full of praise is a glory of God.

THURSDAY

SACRIFICIAL FELLOWSHIP—Gen. 22:5-12. "And Abraham said unto the young man, abide ye here with the ass, and I and the lad will go yonder and worship." When Abraham and his son Isaac went apart to their solitary place of worship we get "a foregleam of the atonement and the cross of Christ, the father and son in sacrificial fellowship." This giving of a son reminds us of divine redemption.

FRIDAY

THE PREACHING OF THE CROSS—1 Cor. 1:18-24. "For the preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God." God has ordained to win the world unto himself through the instrumentality of preaching, and, foolish as it may seem to some, it will never be superseded. Nothing is so effective as the ringing voice and the flashing eye of the heart that is burning with a message from God.

SATURDAY

OUR BIG TASK—Matt. 5:13-16. "Ye are the salt of the earth." The world is to be brought to the acknowledgment of the Lordship of Christ through the influence of those who already call him Lord. To accomplish that we have been called to a high standard of living and service, where men may see our good works and glorify God. We cannot shine if we sink to a common level with the world; we lose our influence when we become identified with the spirit of the world.

SUNDAY

COME AND SEE—John 1:45-49. "Can there any good thing come out of Nazareth? Philip saith unto him, Come and see." Some have thought Philip did not show any great brilliancy by his answer, but who could suggest one of greater wisdom? We would do well to learn from Philip in our efforts to meet the objections of the doubtful and unyielded. Historical and philosophical arguments will not impress them, but Jesus will, if they can be persuaded to look upon him. Invite them to come and see.—G. S. B.

Review: The Early Prophets of Israel

Golden Text: God, having of old time spoken unto the fathers in the prophets by divers portions and in divers manners, hath at the end of these days spoken unto us in his Son.—Heb. 1:1, 2.

Daily Readings—December: M., 1 Kings 18:30-39; T., Amos 5:1-15; W., Hosea 11:1-9; T., Micah 6:1-13; F., Isaiah 6:1-8; S., Isaiah 1:10-20; S., Psalm 67.

The Divided Kingdom. Judah and Israel side by side, a double experiment in the progress of the kingdom of God.

This period extended from 982-722, about 260 years.

Judah's territory contained about 3400 square miles; Israel's 9400.

Judah's capital was Jerusalem with its temple; Israel's was Samaria.

Judah was more sheltered than Israel from close contact with the heathen, both politically and religiously.

Judah had one dynasty of 11 kings and one queen, all of the house of David; and Israel, 19 kings of 9 dynasties.

Judah had several very good kings, and great revivals of religion and reforms of morals; while in Israel from the first was a deterioration of varying degrees, with great help from Elijah and Elisha. Amos and Hosea also tried to stem the tide of evil in Israel.

Principles. In order to understand the meaning of God's dealings with Judah, and of the various events in its history, it is necessary to keep before our minds certain principles and facts.

1. In Palestine at this time was the only nation in the world which had the full revelation of one true God. All the rest of the world were idolaters, with gleams of truth and light.

2. This nation was under training in the truth and worship and morals of the one true religion, that they might preserve it in the world and teach it to all the world.

3. Therefore they must keep pure the knowledge of God, must obey his laws, and live his life at all hazards. The world would be lost, true religion would become extinct, unless the Jews preserved it.

If Israel Had Been Faithful. There is no reason for thinking that Israel would have been conquered in time. "In the days of David, of Uzziah, of Jeroboam II., Judah and Israel had shown what they could achieve. Had they been strong in faithfulness to Jehovah, and in the righteousness which that faith required, they would have shown an invincible strength amid the moral enervation of the surrounding people. They might have held their own by welding into one strong kingdom the whole surrounding people. They might have held their own by welding into one strong kingdom the whole of Palestine. They might have consolidated the sway which they at various times attained southwards, as far as the Red Sea port of Elath, northwards over Aram and Damascus, as far as the Hamath on the Orontes; eastwards to Thapsacus on the Euphrates; westward to the Isles of the Gentiles. Such a monarchy, held together by warrior statesmen, strong and righteous, and above all secure in the blessing of God, would have been a thoroughly adequate counterpoise, not only to dilatory and distracted Egypt, which had long ceased to be aggressive, but even to brutal Assyria, which prevailed in no small measure because of the isolation and mutual dissension of these southern principalities."—Farrar.

The Message for Today.—It is good for every person to review his own past life and the past year. We look at our failures that we may learn the lesson we teach, and then forget them as God forgives and blots out forever. We look at what we have gained, in order that we may stand upon that past and do better. Every good, as well as every mistake corrected, may be a stepping-stone to better things.

It is well therefore to see

1. What lessons we can learn for ourselves from the history we have been studying.

2. What the history has to teach our nation.

3. Let us see visions of better things, and keep the divine ideals always before us.

4. There are great evils to be driven out of our country. The whole land is waking up to realize the need of civic righteousness.

5. There is always need of awakening new reforming zeal. For every step we gain give us views of new needs, and new ideals.

6. Every Christian land ought to be a perfect example of the kingdom of God, and of the blessings that abound in it.

OUR DUTY

*The great world's heart is aching, aching fiercely in the night,
And God alone can heal it, and God alone give light;*

*And the men who bear that message, and to speak the living Word,
Are you and I my brothers, and the millions that have heard.*

Can we close our eyes to duty? Can we fold our hands at ease?

While the gates of night stand open to the pathway of the seas?

Can we shut up our compassions? Can we leave our prayers unsaid?

Till the lands which sin has blasted have been quickened from the dead?

*We grovel among trifles, and our spirits
fret and toss,*

While above us burns the vision of the Christ upon the cross;

And the blood of God is streaming from his broken hands and side,

And the lips of God are saying, "Tell my brothers I have died."

O voice of God, we hear thee above the shocks of time,

Thine echoes roll around us, and the message is sublime;

No power of man shall thwart us, no stronghold shall dismay,

When God commands obedience, and love has led the way

—Frederick George Scott.

7. Every failure to live that life lessens its influence over the heathen nations.

8. The principles we have been studying apply to our own times, but are to be worked out in ways adapted to modern life.

Six Prophets

We have studied this quarter about six of the greatest Hebrew prophets, so that the review may well take the form of six essays or talks concerning them. They are Elijah, Elisha, Amos, Hosea, Micah, and Isaiah. Divide the time evenly among the speakers, and close the hour with a little talk by the teacher on Hebrew prophecy, its nature and its significance, especially its bearing on Christianity, and the reasons why it should be studied earnestly today.

Prophetic Messages for Today

The lessons of this quarter have not begun to exhaust the teachings of the Hebrew prophets that bear on modern problems, and the review in the older classes may well be devoted to still more applications of prophetic truth, as well as new emphasis on themes already discussed. Here are some topics which may be divided among the members of the class, each to lead a discussion on the subject assigned to him.

1. What would the prophets say about the land question in the United States?

2. What advice would the prophets give us concerning our immigration problems?

3. What are the teachings of the prophets regarding poverty and the way to abolish it?

4. How would the prophets handle the relations between labor and capital?

5. What governmental difficulties of the present day could be solved by the wisdom of the prophets?

6. What is the bearing of prophecy on the theological discussions uppermost among us?

7. What message have the prophets for modern women?

8. How would the prohibition question fare at the hands of the prophets?

9. What teachings of the prophets apply to our present-day amusements?

10. How would the prophets regard the vast fortunes of modern times?

11. What would be the attitude of the prophets toward the League of Nations?

12. How would the church life of modern America please the prophets?

—Illustrated Quarterly.

THE GOSPEL ACCORDING TO YOU

Not "making a living", but making a life; What you are, but not what you gain in the strife.

Your life is a book, written red from your veins;

What you are, and not what you say remains.

What life of the Christ are you writing, my friend?

A Gospel to last till the centuries end! Your Gospel of Christ is already begun,

Then how shall the rest of the sweet story run?

The saddest of all of his questions will be, "Did your life show that fact that you lived in Me?"

Endeavor Society Formed at Vinco

A party of enthusiastic Christian Endeavorers motored to Vinco Sunday afternoon and assisted the young people of the Brethren church located in that community to organize a Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor. Members of the group represented societies of the Brethren churches of this city.

The Rev. Joseph Gingrich, of Morrellville, President of the C. E. Union of Brethren Endeavorers of Pennsylvania, presided at the meeting. A brief program of singing, talks and a Scripture lesson was conducted. Rev. Dyoll Belote, of Moxham, Pennsylvania, State Quiet Hour Secretary, gave a very helpful and explanatory talk on the officers and their duties. The various committees and their functions were discussed at length. This all prepared the young people for the selection of their officers for the society. The group of 14 young people of the Vinco church were unanimous in their motion to organize.

With Miss Evelyn Probst acting as Secretary pro-tem and Rev. Gingrich in the chair, the following persons were selected as officers: President, Dwight Singer; Vice-President, Freda Gillin; Secretary, Camille Kempher; Treasurer, Mrs. Walter Mackell; Pianist, Ora Mackell; Lookout Committee Chairman, Margaret Mackell; Special Committee Chairman, Glenn Mackell. The Vice-President will act in the capacity of Prayer Meeting Committee Chairman.

The newly-elected officers were formally installed in their respective offices in a most impressive installation service that was conducted by the Rev. Belote.

The Rev. J. L. Bowman, pastor of the Vinco church, gave a brief talk in which he thanked the young people for the assistance they had given in organizing and also pledged his co-operation and support in the new work his young people are undertaking.

The organization will be known as the Young People's Christian Endeavor Society of the Vinco Brethren church and will hold its first regular prayer meeting the coming Sunday at 6:30 o'clock.—The Johnstown Tribune of November 15th, 1927.

PICK OUT YOUR STORY AND STICK TO IT

It is perhaps worth while to record some of the recent arguments which we have heard against prohibition. Possibly some of those who do not share "The Outlook's" hope that the Eighteenth Amendment may be given a square deal may not care for the order in which these objections are ranged below. To us, however, they seemed logically to fall into certain definite groups.

I.

The prohibition law is a failure because there is just as much liquor drank in the country as before the passage of the Eighteenth Amendment.

Because of their inability to get anything to drink, thousands of people are taking to drugs.

II.

Prohibition has destroyed the legitimate liquor business, and yet has allowed the country to become deluged to an extent never known before with poisonous alcoholic drink. The Government is slowly killing the people.

Prohibition is so ineffective that the manufacturers of illicit liquors are producing liquor which averages as good as that which Americans ever drank.

III.

Under prohibition young people see drinking wherever they go, and are therefore enticed into becoming addicts in ever-increasing numbers.

In the old days liquor was served in the home, and young people being accustomed to it, did not drink to excess.

IV.

Prohibition is a gross violation of personal liberty, and should be destroyed on that account if for no other reason.

The evils of prohibition can be eliminated by permitting the Government to sell alcoholic liquors, restricting their sale, of course to suitable quantities and to people who will not abuse them.

It would seem as though at least fifty per cent of these objections to prohibition must be invalid.—From the Outlook.

Being Willing to Forgive. Eph 4:31, 32

The Story of Billy and His Friends
(In Four Parts. Part III)

When Billy and his gang found Sammy, he was out in his front yard looking about, just as though he could not think of anything that he wanted to do. Billy was usually the spokesman for the gang but he did not know what to say to this little colored boy. When Billy failed to speak, one of the others said, "We felt sorry for you so we came to see you." Now that was not just the right thing to say. Sammy did not want them to come just because they were sorry for him. Sammy wanted friends but he did not like to have people feel sorry for him.

Sammy's mother looked out the door just as Sammy was trying to find something to say to this gang. Sammy's mother did not understand that these boys had come to be kind to her boy. She thought that they had come to tease him. You see that had really happened sometimes and Sammy's mother didn't want it to happen again. So, she said, "If you boys have come to tease Sammy, it is time for you to leave, I don't want you to hurt the feelings of my little boy."

Billy still did not know what to say and some of the boys started leaving, so he did too. When they were down the street a little way they stopped to talk things over.

"Now we are in a worse mess than ever, aren't we?" said one.

"I know I said the wrong thing," said the little boy who had spoken to Sammy. "I wouldn't want you fellows to come to me and say that you feel sorry for me. When we want another of our gang to come out and play, we don't say we feel sorry for that person. It just wouldn't work."

"Well what will we do?" said Billy. "Let's go home and ask our folks what we ought to say."

The next day, the gang met together and started for Sammy's house as they had done the day before. When they reached the yard Billy called out, "Sammy, will you forgive us for being unkind to you? We want you to come and play with us."

Sammy looked up as though he hardly believed his ears. And someone else said, "We really do want you to play with us. Please do and you will forgive us for not being kind, won't you?"

Then Sammy smiled. He was perfectly willing to forgive these boys and he was quite happy to be asked to play in such a kind manner. It really sounded as though they really wanted him to play with them. So he said, "Of course I forgive you, and I have been awfully anxious to play the games that I see you playing each day."

Right then and there Billy and all of the gang began to feel better. It made them so much happier to have Sammy as their friend and to realize that Sammy was really willing to forgive them for being so unkind to him. Being willing to forgive made Sammy happier, too. So they were a very happy gang of boys.

Soon all of them were so busy playing that they forgot all about Sammy being of a different color. They taught Sammy all of their games and soon Sammy was teaching them new games, too, the games he had played before he came to Woodville.

"Do you know that it isn't long until Christmas?" said one of the gang.

"That's right," said another, "and we always have a good time at Christmas. I wish that it was tomorrow."

"Let's have a Christmas celebration together," said Billy. "What do you say, gang?"

"This is my work—my blessing, not my doom—

Of all who live I am the one by whom This work can best be done in my own way."

Then shall I see it, not too great or small To suit my spirit and to arouse my powers. Then shall I cheerfully greet the laboring hours,

And cheerfully turn, when the long shadows fall

At eventide, to play and love and rest— Because I know for me my work is best.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Ashland Opens Endowment Campaign in Ohio

We have now moved the Endowment Campaign from Indiana to Ohio. It seemed strange to come to Ashland and talk to the people about the College that is in their midst. Ashland has been in this campaign ever since it started and about everybody before I came had been approached and given, either through the Faculty and School canvas, or in the city-wide campaign.

Everybody in Ashland is "Sold" on the College, whether they are Brethren or not. The day I came in town our football team played North Manchester College team and every business place had the purple and gold (College banner) on a flag pole in front of their place. This was homecoming day and I enjoyed the occasion, meeting several out of town friends who came for the occasion. The two teams were more evenly matched than the score of 22 to 6 in favor of Ashland shows, it was only in the last period through brilliant playing that Ashland's big gain was made.

I enjoyed the hospitality of Brother Bame who is the pastor of the Ashland church. It is needless to say that he is a booster for the college. He granted me every courtesy and gave every aid, even to driving his own machine to give my "Lizzie" a rest.

The people of Ashland have done a big thing in erecting a magnificent church building costing more than $60,000.00 with a limited membership. They have assumed a debt of $30,000.00, a staggering load for no larger constituency. I want to congratulate the pastor and all who had the planning and building of the church, for its beauty and arrangement.

Did the Ashland Members Dodge the Campaign?

If there ever were a people who had the right to, in the light of the heavy debt on their church, they did.

Their reply was—While we have obligations to our local church, we must stand back of the College, and they did. Our teachers have not large salaries, but a number of these men have given $500.00, one of our trustees gave $1,000.00, and all did a big thing. The total gift of Ashland to the College was $7,420.00. Come on, churches of Ohio, show your colors.

W. S. BELL.

P. S.—There had been previously reported most of this amount, except $295.00 which is to be added to the dial figures.

W. S. B.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

The special meeting at Fort Scott closed on November 15, with one of the largest crowds of the entire campaign. The Lord blessed in a way beyond the fondest hopes of the membership. The meeting is counted a victory in every way. The pastor will report the results of the effort.

Brother and Sister Wood are doing a fine piece of work. The Mission Boards have made no mistake in calling these people to this field. The Boards have been wise in keeping them in the field. No minister in the entire brotherhood is so well fitted for this work as Brother Wood. He has known the field for years and, therefore, knows the problems that are to be faced and overcome. Brother Wood has the unbounded confidence of the people of Fort Scott, both in the church and out. He is, at present, president of the Ministerial Union of the city. This gives a prestige to our work that means much. The fact that he was placed in this position shows his standing with the ministers. There is a future for the Brethren church of Fort Scott. It will require still much time to bring the work to the place it should occupy, but if the Boards and the W. M. S. will continue their support and keep Brother and Sister Wood in the field, success must come. The special meeting brought the church in touch with a large number of people. Those who have already identified themselves with the church will add real strength. The months ahead should mean much in the way of an ingathering and a strengthening of the work.

While in Fort Scott my home was with Brother and Sister Wood. Everything possible was done for my comfort. Other homes of the membership were open to me. For all these kindnesses I am indeed thankful. I formed acquaintances that will mean much to me. The joy of leading individuals to Christ repays for the effort. May the Lord continue to richly bless and lead in this work. I am looking forward to the time when the Brethren church of Fort Scott will come into her own. Pray for the work.

My next meeting will be in Dallas Center, Iowa, with Brother A. D. Cashman and his good people. I am anticipating a blessed fellowship. I covet your prayers for the work in which I am engaged.

J. C. BEAL.

FORT SCOTT, KANSAS

Our revival campaign, which was announced some weeks ago in our good church paper, the Evangelist, has now passed into history and we are certainly glad that we can report success, up to our fondest expectations.

Our esteemed Brother J. C. Beal came to us as arranged, from Carleton, Nebraska, arriving on November 1, and at once threw himself into the difficult task, and labored earnestly and efficiently for fifteen days. During this time he delivered fifteen sermons and gave seven Bible lessons, taught a Sunday school class, gave his stereopticon lecture on: "The Law of the Octave" and made calls with the pastor, too numerous to mention.

The fellowship we had with Brother Beal could not have been better and we, and also all who attended the services, were sad when we had to let him go. The attendance was not as large as the character of the work demanded, but in consideration of our small membership, and to us who know the field, the attendance was very fine and the beauty of it is, it increased until the last, and the last service was the largest. On the last Sunday that Brother Beal was with us, I baptized seven, four heads of families, and three young people, and these represented three new families to the church.

On the following Sunday I baptized a man

65 years old, also relating a new family to the church, and on the evening of the same day received the confession of a mother, which relates another new family to the church.

Through visitation with Brother Beal we found another husband and wife who decided to unite with us, as soon as the husband is able to be baptized, and doubtless their two oldest boys will come at the same time. These people are coming into the Brethren church because they believe the Bible to be the Word of God and desire a Whole Gospel to live by.

It is impossible to describe all the influences that went out from this campaign, but I am quite sure that the outlook is the best it has been since we have been here this time.

We are now in a "follow up" campaign and hope to reach others and keep the good work going. Last Sunday the church school attendance was about double the average attendance, before the campaign, and we hope to keep it going so.

During his short stay here Brother Beal made many friends by his Whole Gospel messages and pleasant fellowship, and all will be glad to have him return some time.

This work still needs much prayer, patience and perseverance, therefore we crave an interest in the prayers of the entire Evangelist family.

In behalf of this mission church, I desire to express our most sincere thanks to the Evangelistic Bible Study League, for its assistance which made this campaign possible.

We also express our deepest appreciation to each of the mission boards and the National W. M. S. for their liberal support of the work here.

L. G. WOOD.

PORTIS, KANSAS TO WEST ALEXANDRIA, OHIO

August closed our five year pastorate at the former place and we are now in our native state once more. Those five years were some of the most important in our ministry—busy, useful and pleasant ones for the Lord. We formed many friendships both in and out of the church which the coming years will not soon erase. Portis is a good field and many good Brethren are loyal to the Kingdom. Before our departure the Brethren showed their good will and appreciation in many, many ways, which we shall not soon forget. One event was a "Community Farewell Reception" at which over 300 people of all churches and non-church folks gathered at the First Brethren Church along with the city band, the band sponsored the outdoor program and the church the indoor one. We would like to mention all the good things, but we refrain, lest some may think we "boast". However, a gift from the S. M. M. to Mrs. Deeter was a hand purse with "real money" in it; a Gladstone bag for the family, from the church and which cost $17; and a real sure enough gold watch, 21 Jewel Bunn Special—a special gift from the business men of the town. Engraved on the back lid are these words: "A token of good will to Rev. W. R. Deeter from Portis business men. August, 1927." This we are proud of indeed, because we don't feel worthy of it, but there must have been some reason for it all. There were class picnics, ice cream socials, dinners and suppers in homes, "n everything." It was a real test for us to leave these people who in a general way were so kind and helpful to us all. Some marks of progress and accomplishments of the church which shall not soon be forgotten are: a remodeled church building, almost modern, and worth $15,000; a remodeled parsonage, almost modern; increased membership and activities in all the auxiliaries.

Through the generosity of the church we were able to have a part of August for vacation, making a few days' visit in Norton County, then over night stops with relatives in Lincoln, Nebraska, Winston Missouri, and Kansas City, Missouri. Then a straight journey to Oakville, Indiana—our one-time pastorate before moving west. Here we spent a few days, but most of the remaining days of the month were spent in Winona, where we took in the great World Congress Against Alcoholism. We would like to write some of our impressions of this conference, but space forbids. However, we heard men and women who have been and are connected with "history making" events in the world. Prohibition is steadily gaining ground and impetus throughout the world, for which we can rightfully and justly rejoice.

On September first we landed in old Buckeye State,—West Alexandria, and found our goods had arrived and were being unpacked and installed in the place we call the parsonage. We had good audiences at both our churches on Sunday the fourth of September (Clayton and West Alexandria). We found these people easy to get acquainted with and it was not long till they showed their kindness, hospitality and good wishes in several ways. At West Alexandria they came in on us one evening before we got straightened up with ice cream and eats. A move always dwindles the family larder, so this "call" replenished our scant one to the amount of about $17 worth—flour, sugar, potatoes, cabbage, fruit, etc. At Clayton a few weeks later they asked us over on a special mission but we found it to be a surprise for us. We gathered at the home of Brother Shank; here were more eats of flour, fruit, garden vegetables of many kinds—about $16 worth; then they asked us to "hold" a small basket while the assembly passed by and dropped in gifts of silver and bills, which totaled $30. Say! while we were embarrassed and sweat like a real laboring man, this came at a real opportune time, for we only had a couple of "Iron Men" in the house. The Lord always provides. Lord bless these good givers.

We observed Rally Day at both churches with record crowds and offerings. We are cooperating with the town churches in a Union Thanksgiving service on Thursday morning in West Alexandria and on Wednesday evening at Clayton.

The West Alexandria field seems to be quite ripe for a harvest; already we have baptized three, and taken in six by letter. Our Mid-Holiday Revival begins November 27 and lasts till December 11. Our hopes are that others will line up with the kingdom workers. Brother L. V. King will lead the singing for us. We are working and praying for a great time for the Lord. We will report later. We are planning a Christmas program also.

Revival services at Clayton will be held in January.

If you are interested in us and our work, we covet your prayers.

W. R. DEETER.

West Alexandria, Ohio.

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

I attended a meeting of the scientific men of the state at Wooster, Ohio, last Monday, held in honor of Dr. Arthur Compton, an alumnus of that school, who had just been awarded the Nobel prize in Physics. It was a brilliant affair, highly scientific and inspiring.

Mrs. Strack of Lost Creek, Kentucky, has been a guest at the College for several weeks past. It is a pleasure to have her with us. She expects to work out of Ashland to nearby churches.

Dr. Bell has been in and out of Ashland frequently of late as he is working northern Ohio now.

Due to a very substantial gift from a friend, the College was enabled recently to purchase a Sousaphone (bass E flat) for the College Band. This organization is one of which the College is very proud. The horn is silver with a gold bell.

Due to the absence of the regular pastor at our church here, the various professors and others have been filling the pulpit. We are expecting Brother Ora DeLauter, of the Church of the Brethren, to preach this coming Sunday. Brother DeLauter is a graduate of Ashland.

The Men's Glee Club has had several dates and with good success.

The usual College activities are going on. The College will close for the holidays, Thursday, December 22 and re-open Tuesday, January 10. EDWIN E. JACOBS.

DAYTON NEWS

While no great amount of noise is emanating from the Dayton camp, yet we would hardly consent that any great number of us are slumbering in our tents. Our program of activities here at Dayton embodies both fullness and variety. But even at that, we are not getting accomplished all that a big congregation in a big city should and ought to accomplish. However, it is our ardent hope that we may not only increase in efficiency as a congregation, but that our scope of service and usefulness may widen. Truly there is much that needs to be done.

We have been on the Dayton field about sixteen months. If the simple truth is told I suspect that the most notable development in that time has been our very heavy losses. Surely the grim reaper has laid his hands on those whom we could least spare. In addition to other stalwart members, we have lost three deacons. One of those three deacons was Brother O. E. Bowman, superintendent of our church school and vice-moderator of the church. And yet, amid these losses we are trying to press forward with brave hearts and to see in it all the challenge to readjust our forces and work harder than ever. Our leaders have manifested a very fine Christian loyalty and courage under sad and difficult circumstances.

Since Anniversary Sunday and Homecoming we have had a number of splendid events, including a great Harvest Home day, a strong laymen's service, an excellent Father and Son banquet, and a hallowed and uplifting communion service.

The attendance in our church school is not as large as it has been at times in the past history of this congregation, but we believe we are doing solid, constructive work in the church school, in the several departments. We have inaugurated the monthly meeting for our teachers and officers; and from this we expect to reap large, practical benefit. We are sure too that the various angles of our young people's work in the church is taking on new and gratifying impetus. We have a splendid Junior Christian Endeavor which meets during the morning church hour. We have also marshalled together and held with a quite satisfactory measure of success an Intermediate Y. P. S. C. E.. And before the new year is born we will have in operation a Senior Y. P. S. C. E. For this we are very glad. And in addition to our regular adult choir, we have a choir of high school age members which gives much promise, and is a source of joy and inspiration to the church. Later we will get the Junior choir lined up too. And what is more, we have an orchestra which is a decided credit to their leader, and a big factor in the church school.

From now on until the new year we will have many different activities. Christmas is a big event in the Dayton church. Much is made of it and properly so.

Our morning audiences for the preaching service are always good. But confidentially, they would be much better if many remained after church school for the morning worship, who somehow have picked up the erroneous and damaging notion that if a Christian goes to church school on Sunday morning, that is enough. If it were man or devil who let loose that notion in the world, I do not know. But I do know that the notion has gained a wide acceptance, to the detriment of the work of the Kingdom. The attendance at our evening services is gaining steadily too.

There has been no startling ingathering of souls during our stay here. For this I make no explanation or apologies whatever. I am candid when I say that as a new man on a big job I think I would have been sunk sure enough if I had had a big influx of new people to cope with, in addition to what were already here. The Lord knows I have been busy enough trying to find a lot that are on the list already. I speak purely from my own view point when I say that as I observe it there are times in the life of a congregation when other things are needed just as greatly as ingatherings. I maintain and have maintained for a long time that it is a very much bigger task to develop in a congregation that necessary strength and spirit which is so vital in holding and cultivating the results of an ingathering—a very much bigger task I say, than to stage the ingathering itself. I contend that periods of careful sowing are essential to the most satisfactory harvests. And of necessity the sowing periods are not as spectacular or sensational as the harvest. Sometimes we sow in tears: whereas it is quite natural to rejoice with the reaping. Our special meetings this year will be two weeks preceding Easter. We are going to make a careful preparation, and we will try to do our very best. But, as to whether or not we shall be able to flash abroad the news of a great landslide, is for the Lord to say. I am not worrying about it at all. All I know is, the bigger the harvest, the bigger is my job to take care of the results. That's why, if I have my way in the matter, it will be, not how many, but is it all wheat?

Like Dr. Gnagey, I apologize for the length of this letter. But I feel constrained to add just this: Whether you hear any noise or not from Dayton, you will be fairly safe to assume that we are trying to keep fuel on the fire.

WM. H. BEACHLER.

ALLENTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

Allentown First Brethren church is again having a full-time pastor. Brother S. E. Christiansen has been with us since the first Sunday in September. We are certainly fortunate in securing such a conscientious and spiritual leader. With the help of his family who have already made a place for themselves in the hearts of the members we expect to gain great things for the Lord.

Pray for us, brethren, that we may be ever mindful of the Spirit's guiding, otherwise our work is vain.

We had our fall communion last Sunday with an attendance of fifty. It was truly a meeting of Spiritual uplift and Christian fellowship. We are praying daily that we may be cleansed of self so as to be used of the Lord in the winning of souls.

MRS. JAMES KAMOIE,
Corresponding Secretary.

MANUEL AND NAPFOR, KENTUCKY

On September first we organized a Sunday school at Manuel, Kentucky, known as Grapevine Sunday school. It is the first Brethren Sunday school in this locality and has been very prosperous since established. We had fifty-six enrolled to start with and have since increased the number to eighty-five. The work is going very successfully and lovely in every way.

I have been very much handicapped in many ways. As to support, I have borne practically all the expense. But I have found it to be a place that needs the help. There are lots of people that we are beginning to bring out of sin through the Sunday school and into the light of God. Heretofore no one has been able to reach the people, but they are beginning to respond, the field is ripe.

Our officers and teachers are: E. M. Davidson, superintendent; E. W. Davidson, assistant superintendent; Mrs. Nora Eversole, teacher and secretary-treasurer; W. E. Davidson, teacher.

This is a splendid locality to start a mission work—a run of about nine miles in length, with about 1500 inhabitants and only one Sunday school. I am glad to say that this has been the most successful and most enjoyed work of my life since I have seen the Light and have known the great love of the dear Master, who has come into my humble life and has found a place for me in this great harvest field where reapers are so much needed.

On November 6th I organized a Sunday school at Napfor, Kentucky, where I now reside. In this work I am assisted by my dear companion and two little girls, and the work is very successful so far. We had twenty-six to start with. I am acting as superintendent, and am assisted in the teaching and secretarial work by Mrs. Boyd Baker, Mrs. Mann and Mr. L. Johnson. Our average attendance has been forty-eight. Mr. Johnson says our work here looks more prosperous than any the community has ever had. This Sunday school meets at two o'clock in the afternoon and the one at Manuel at 9:30 in the morning. Pray for us in the work of the Master.

E. M. DAVIDSON.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Waynesboro, Pennsylvania

This report will cover the activities of the last eight months. The last Sunday in March marked the close of a ministry of six and one-half years in Berlin. A brief summary of the work here might be of interest. The thing perhaps most outstanding is material, that of the building of the new church. We have here one of the best buildings in the brotherhood. Our people here are not wealthy but liberal. Some eighty thousand dollars passed through the hands of the various treasurers. But thing spiritual were not overlooked, the need of Christ as Savior and Lord was emphasized and 155 were added to the membership. The closing services will ever be remembered. The morning service was well attended by members and close friends of the church. For the evening service the ministers of the town were present with their people. Each of the ministers present gave a short talk which talks were encouraging. We had a capacity house, approximately eight hundred in attendance. The experiences in Berlin were those passed through in every pastorate. Some experiences were not just so pleasant, but these are forgotten in meditation upon the blessings which came during hours of Christian fellowship. May the Lord bless you, Berlin.

Beginning the first Sunday in April served for four months as supply pastor in Armstrong county, Pennsylvania. We have here two well organized churches, West Kittanning and Brush Valley. The charge here has been without a regular pastor now for over a year. I found on this circuit a spiritually minded people, they are much devoted to the work of the church. A two weeks' revival meeting at West Kittanning early in May closed with communion. Three made the good confession, one of whom united with the church. The last week in July I held a few nights' service in Brush Valley, closing with communion. The writer was ably assisted in this service by Brethren Alton Witter and Sherman Johnson.

During the last half of May I assisted our brethren at Prosperity, West Virginia in a series of meetings. This is one place where attendance is conditioned on the weather. Rain makes roads impassable. When weather permitted we had large crowds. While there were no visible results, there was evidence of blessing on the church, and many unsaved were made to think. Brother H. B. Showalter is the faithful and efficient pastor here. He has served this people many years, and is much loved and respected by all who know him. Entertainment during this meeting was in the home of the pastor. I was treated most kindly and will ever remember the kinship and sweet Christian fellowship.

The month of August was unique in my experience as it was the first time in more than eighteen years that I have not been a pastor. Interest, however, was continued in the Lord's work. The first Sunday I attended the morning service at the Third church, Johnstown and heard an able sermon by the pastor, Brother J. L. Gingrick. The next two Sunday mornings, in the absence of the pastor, I preached at the First church, Johnstown. Taking an evening train, of the second Sunday here, I sojourned to National Conference.

On August the 18th, we moved from the parsonage in Berlin, where the family had continued during the summer through the kindness of the brethren there, to our present home in Waynesboro, Pennsylvania. Beginning activities the first of September the time has been spent in getting acquainted and established in the work. A reception sponsored by the church served as an opportunity to meet the people and wa-an expression of the cordiality which is found here. This reception was attended by a number of the pastors of the city, each of which expressed in a few well chosen words a warm welcome.

Much could be said in praise of the former pastors, Brethren Witter and Horlack, who have served here. Under the former, the congregation was organized and the church built. Under the latter, the work continued to grow; an addition was built at a cost of $21,000 to the church and dedicated free of debt. Our fall communion was well attended, and blessed of the Lord. One was added to the church by baptism at this time.

The time from October 31 to November 22 was spent with our good people at Canton, Ohio, in a special series of meetings. This meeting will be reported by the pastor, Brother Vanator; space permits me but a few remarks. Great progress has been made by our people in this city. The new church is a model. But what is more, we found here a substantial Christian people. This people are great in their leadership. Brother and Sister Vanator are fundamental in their faith, efficient and consecrated and through much prayer have led this people to victory. The laity here are true to the Word; we have here a Whole Gospel people. To preach Christ in this atmosphere of prayer and faith was not difficult. Having served as pastor near here years ago, there was renewing of old friendships. Entertainment was in the home of the pastor. The kind hospitality of this and other homes, the Christian fellowship together will not be forgotten. But this is becoming too lengthy. I promise to report more frequently. May the Lord continue to bless his believing children. W. C. BENSHOFF.

TOBACCO "SMOKE HOUSES" OR HOMES?

Will H. Brown

Users of tobacco who make "smoke-houses" of their homes, or other people's homes, seldom realize the injury they are causing others. Dr. W. N. Boldyreff, M. D., in an article in the Good Health magazine, October, 1924, tells how slow he was in reaching a conclusion along this line. It was brought forcibly to his mind in the case of an army officer who stopped, for several days at a time, in the home of a brother. In the family were the wife and four children, ranging in age from 9 to 15 years, all in good health and normal in every way—BEFORE the uncle came to live with them for a time.

He was a smoker and smoked in their home. Soon after he came, the two younger children began to complain of severe pain in the eyes. An oculist ascribed the trouble to over-strain of the eyes. Soon thereafter the two older children had the same trouble. A little later the father and mother began to suffer from headaches, at times very severe. Added to this, the mother was troubled with insomnia.

The army officer's duties called him away at intervals, and this was what brought about the discovery. Every time he was away every member of the family improved. When he returned, the troubles all came back on them. This condition was so clearly marked, as the man came and went, that Dr. Boldyreff says he was forced to the conclusion that the smoking of the army officer in the home was THE CAUSE OF ALL THE TROUBLE.

The doctor adds: "For seven years thereafter I observed this family, and after the man finally left the home permanently, all members of the family were ENTIRELY FREE from the discomforts above described."

Many a babe has died in homes that have been turned into smokehouses by some member of the family who uses tobacco, because the frail system of the child could not overcome the effect of the nicotine-poisoned air in its lungs.

MRS LEAH KATHERINE BELL

(Explanatory Note—It was due to the inability to get the copy returned sooner from the Editor of the paper of the town in New York where the burial took place that this publication appears so late, and not to any negligence on the part of Dr. Beachler, so he informs us—Editor).

* * *

Sister Leah Katherine Bell, daughter of Joseph and Katherine Sprinkle, was born in the state of Iowa, May 10th, 1873, and departed this life Saturday night, September 24th, at the age of 54 years, 4 months and 14 days. Very early in her childhood, Sterling, Illinois became the place of residence of Sister Bell and her people, at which place she remained until the time of her marriage. It was here that she completed her work in the grade schools and later graduated from the high school.

Sister Bell was an accomplished musician, having taken her musical training in the Chicago Musical College. It was also in the Moody Institute of Chicago that she completed a Bible course.

A number of years of Sister Bell's life were devoted to the teaching of music both in Chicago and Sterling. She was also for a time organist at the Auditorium in Chicago, and also served the Episcopal and Presbyterian churches of Sterling as organist for a period of 8 or 9 years.

During part of these busy years of her life she was Secretary of the King's Daughters of Illinois, and gave much time and service to that organization in county and state activities.

As a girl, Sister Bell and her people became members of the Brethren church at Milledgeville, Illinois, under the ministry of Stephen H. Bashor.

On June 10th, 1903 she was united in marriage to Rev. W. S. Bell. Being a woman of pronounced religious character and inclination, she cheerfully and seriously assumed the responsibilities that belong to a pastor's wife. The years of married life that Sister Bell was privileged to enjoy with her husband were in congregations at Waterloo, Iowa, Johnstown, Pennsylvania, Sunnyside, Washington, and Dayton, Ohio. It is needless to say that in these various churches, and all through the years, Sister Bell was active and faithful in the work of her Lord and Master, willing always to do her part and even more than her part as a pastor's wife. A woman who has served faithfully and well as a pastor's wife for 24 years, has won unto herself a noble record. The average church member may find it more or less difficult to realize that if a pastor is to be at his best and is to render the best service of which he is capable, he must have back of him a peaceable and well ordered home, and a wife in fullest sympathy with his work. And because this is true, it is sometimes possible that the large, vital part a pastor's wife contributes to the success of her husband is not fully recognized or appreciated. Sister Bell acquitted herself nobly and well as a pastor's wife. She will be long and favorably remembered by this congregation.

To Brother and Sister Bell were born four children, Alice, William Jr., Louise and Katherine, all surviving, and sharing with their father the deep sense of loss of a Godly and faithful wife and mother. Of Sister Bell's people, there is only one remaining—Mr. Lloyd Sprinkle of Sterling, Illinois.

The first break in Sister Bell's health came in 1918, which necessitated a different climate, hence the change from Dayton to Sunnyside, Washington. A year ago last June there occurred the final break from which she could not rally. The members of this congregation, and many friends in the city know what a long, heroic struggle has gone on in the effort to bring Sister Bell back to health. Public mention is due Dr. J. M. Wine for the large, loyal, sacrificing, untiring part he has had in this battle for health. In addition to this, everything has been done that could be done by Brother Bell and his children to restore our sister, and to make her comfortable. But disease has won in this terrible conflict. After all that has been done, and after all the prayers that have gone up in her behalf, and after the wonderful part Sister Bell played through it all, we are only left to conclude that it was not to be so. Certainly the family physician, and the family have a right to feel that nothing has been omitted or neglected to keep a noble woman among us.

I became Sister Bell's pastor a year ago. During the year, I saw her at various times. Upon my visits to her sick room I was always impressed with her remarkable fortitude, and courage, amid the great testing of her long illness. She never quarreled with the Almighty over her condition. She trusted him and was resigned to his will. She spent much time with her Bible and in prayer. Sister Bell knew her Lord and loved him. She was possessed of a remarkable faith, and a rich, genuine Christian experience. With her, the promises of God were not a theory or a sentiment, but a great, precious reality. She walked with God and talked with God. And I have every reason to believe that again and again she committed to God's grace and keeping her children and her husband. She truly loved her family, and she thought much of the future of her loved ones in connection with her going from them. I shall always remember her as a true, trustful woman of God, who has left to her children a very rich legacy, and who, I firmly believe, has gone home to a glorious reward.

I speak for Dr. Bell and his family when I express again their profound gratitude to very dear friends in the church and out of the church who have helped greatly in so many ways during the long struggle to bring happiness and comfort to the one who has gone, and to give renewed courage to those who remain.

The funeral services were conducted by the pastor in the church, in the presence of a very large concourse of sympathizing friends. There were many beautiful floral tributes. Text used, Zech. 14:7.

WM. H. BEACHLER, Pastor.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

CLUM-TASKER—On the evening of June twenty-fifth Mr. Carl Clum was united in marriage to Miss Hildred Tasker at the home of the bride's parents. The bride was attended by Miss Dorothea Darby as maid of honor and Mr. Victor Clum acted as best man. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Everett Clum. Both bride and groom are members of the Brethren church at this place, thus fulfilling the scripture "Be ye not unequally yoked together with unbelievers." May the Lord mightily bless this union and when the Roll is Called Up Yonder may their home circle not be broken.
R. I. HUMBERD.

IN THE SHADOW

BILLMAN—Again the Dayton church has sustained a keen loss in the death of Brother Jacob Henry Billman. Brother Billman passed away Friday morning, November 4th, at the age of 73 years, 11 months, and 3 days. His passing came as a shock to his family and friends. We knew that Brother Billman was not in good health for some months, but none of us were prepared for what has taken place. It was my privilege to serve Brother Billman as pastor in two congregations—first at Bear Creek in my early ministry, and later here at Dayton. He had been a deacon for many years, first at Bear Creek and later here in the Dayton church. I knew him intimately and well for many years. In his death I have lost a true, loyal friend. Four children survive him: Luke Florence, Mary Maud, Harry Carl, and Robert Beeghly Billman. He is also survived by his aged father, more than 95 years of age and in remarkable health, also a brother and two sisters, all residing in Florida. We have had a loss in Brother Billman's death, and shall remember with inspiration his quiet, gentle, hopeful manner and life. The funeral was conducted in the Dayton church on Sunday afternoon, November 6th, by the pastor in the presence of a large audience. Our profoundest sympathy goes out to the children who mourn the departure of their father.
WM. H. BEACHLER, Pastor.

LIMBERT—After a very long long and testing illness, Sister Amanda Limbert departed this life, Tuesday night, October 4th, at the age of 70 years, 6 months, and 6 days. Sister Limbert was a splendid Christian woman of fine poise, strong character, and stalwart faith. Amid long and almost unbearable suffering her trust in God never forsook her. She is survived by a daughter who was tireless in her ministrations to her mother, also three sons, and a devoted sister residing in Kansas. Sister Limbert was a faithful member of the Home Builders' class and a consistent member of the Dayton church. Another loss has come to us. The funeral service was conducted in the church by the pastor. May God comfort the family.
WM. H. BEACHLER, Pastor.

ZEISERT—Christian Zeisert, son of Christian (Senior) and Elizabeth Zeisert, was born near Clayton, Ohio, December 12, 1861, and departed this life at his home in Clayton, Ohio, October 31, 1927, aged 65 years, 10 months and 10 days.

He was united in marriage to Minnetta Ullery August 3, 1888, and to this union was born one daughter, Edna, who with the mother and wife survive. He had been a member of the Brethren church for fifteen years and most of that time served as one of the trustees. He was a man well thought of by all who knew him. His place in life will be hard to fill and he will be missed.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer at the First Brethren church in Clayton, and burial made in the cemetery near by.
W. R. DEETER.

Robins—Charles R. Robins, son of Randolph and Mary Robins was born in Lewisburg, Ohio, April 9th, 1881, and departed this life October 24th, 1927, at his home in West Alexandria, Ohio, aged 46 years, 6 months and 15 days.

He lived most of his life in Preble and Montgomery Counties. He was a purveyor of fresh fish in his home town and other towns and country round about. Through fair treatment and honest dealing he built up a heavy trade.

On Wednesday, October the 19th he, with his wife, made the good confession, accepting Christ as their Savior. Thus after twenty-six years from the day when they were united as husband and wife, they were united with the Lord. Who knows but what this anniversary was one of the real happy ones of his life, though sorely afflicted and upon his bed of pain. Who knows but what he realized some of the blessings which God has in store for them that love him.

Funeral services were conducted from the Brethren church, by the writer, and burial in the Sugar Grove Cemetery, north of West Alexandria.
W. R. DEETER.

SCHOLZ—Mrs. Rose C. Scholz was born near Louisville, Kansas, November 7th, 1858 and departed this life at her home at Chambers, Nebraska, Monday the 21st of November, 1927, being 69 years and 14 days of age at the time of her death. She spent much of her life on the farm near Fort Scott, Kansas, but moved to Nebraska with two of her sons about seven years ago.

Her husband preceded her in death over 16 years and the writer conducted his funeral at that time.

She leaves three sons and two daughters to mourn their loss. They are: Otto J., Ellis L., of Chambers, Nebraska; August J., of Neligh, Nebraska; Katherine Ingerham, and Elsie Lowe, both of Fort Scott, Kansas.

The funeral was conducted from the undertaking parlors, November 26, 1927 by the writer. The body was laid to rest in the family lot in Evergreen Cemetery.
L. G. WOOD.

SIPE—Paul Edward Sipe, infant son of Mr. and Mrs. Clark Sipe, was born November 20, 1927. The babe died at birth.

He leaves father, mother and many other relatives to mourn their loss. We weep not as those who have no hope of meeting again, for Jesus said, "Suffer little children to come unto me and forbid them not, for of such is the Kingdom of Heaven."

Short funeral services were held at the home by the pastor.

CONFERENCE MINUTES

Not much has been said recently about the completing of the publication of the minutes of our last General Conference and of the Church Year Book, but after many delays incident to its publication, caused by the tardy receipt of various reports from various district conferences, the publication is off the press and will be in the mails in a few days, and perhaps in the hands of most of our pastors before this column is read.

How Handle These Reports

For a couple of years the secretary of the General Conference has had the task of disposing of these reports or minutes, which proved a monumental task to him, and not altogether satisfactory in its results at that. Consequently the Conference requested that the mailing be taken care of again from the Publishing House, and we are endeavoring to follow these instructions.

As we have printed less than one-half the number of copies this year than we printed a few years ago the pastors will have only a very few to dispose of in each congregation.

A Test of Loyalty

The primary object in publishing these Annuals is to preserve a permanent record of the proceedings of our General Conference and also to preserve for future generations the main addresses and sermons that have been delivered at these conferences.

To aid in meeting the expense of preserving these records the pastors of the various churches are asked to dispose of a very few copies in each congregation at twenty-five cents per copy.

It will be an act of loyalty on the part of the pastor and also on the part of the few of his members that buy these reports.

With the limited number that have been published this year there should not be left a single copy in the office, except the few we will want to place in our own permanent files.

A few years ago there was some rivalry among a few of our pastors in their endeavors to see who would be the FIRST one to send in the remittance for the Annuals sold.

It has been many years since enough copies of the Annual have been sold to meet the cost of publication, so we are going to ask the pastors to remit the full amount received for their sale as a mark of their whole-hearted cooperation in disposing of these Reports.

Should You be Missed

We would not miss any of our pastors for the world in giving them an opportunity to join in this distribution, but you know mistakes occur in all well regulated families, and the Publishing Family is just as human as you are; so, anticipating a few mistakes, we will hold a certain number of copies in reserve to enable us to supply any one whom we have inadvertently overlooked. Just drop us a card and the Reports will be sent as fast as Uncle Sam will carry them in the mails.

Christmas is Coming

Many magazines and household publications are urging their subscribers to not only renew their own subscriptions to their papers, but they are urging them to subscribe for a friend also and to make it a Christmas present that will last for a whole year.

Why not do that with the Brethren Evangelist? There are numbers of old people in most every congregation whose means are limited and who feel since their earning days are practically over they can no longer pay for the church paper that they have loved many years. Almost every week we receive letters from such old people expressing their regret that they can no longer take the Evangelist. Are there not those who are more favorably situated that will do this much for a neighbor, a brother or a sister, maybe some shut-in that has many weary hours to while away?

We will gladly make a special rate of $1.50 for a year's subscription that any one wants to send to another.

Special Campaign

On October first we began sending a large number of copies of the Evangelist to many of our churches for a period of three months to be distributed among the families that were not subscribers to the paper, hoping that at the end of the allotted time they would have fallen so much in love with the paper that they would become regular subscribers. Also five thousand extra copies were mailed out just before Thanksgiving for distribution.

Surely there should be some visible fruit as the result of these efforts, but it is like a fishing trip or an evangelistic meeting. Somebody must "draw the net." Who will it be? Ordinarily it should be the pastor, or some one he has designated to draw it for him.

Pastors, will you not please see that the work is done? Maybe you will have to "cast on the other side", but surely there should be some results from these appeals.

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE TO PASTORS OF PENNSYLVANIA

We have a growing mission point in the suburbs of Akron and desire to get in touch with members of the Brethren church who have moved to Akron from other states. Brother Henry Holsinger came to us recently and informed us that there were a number of Pennsylvania Brethren in Akron but could not give their addresses. I am asking that the pastors of Pennsylvania churches and any others having members who are located in Akron, Ohio, send their names and addresses to me so I may locate them. Thanking you in advance for your cooperation in the Master's work, I am,

Fraternally,

The Church Paper in Every Home

This is a hope and not a statement of fact; it is an ideal and not a reality. But the ideal must be kept before us, else we shall not make progress, and the hope must be kept burning, or we shall sink in despair. We must immediately qualify what we have said by saying this is the situation with regard to the church as a whole, but not with certain individual units of it. For some it is no longer an ideal but an actuality, for they have already placed their church paper in every home. There are not a few of these churches which have in the years immediately past achieved this goal for a shorter or longer period, and a goodly number of them have held it to the present. They are the inspiration to other churches to attempt the ideal and the proof that it is neither too high to be reached nor too straining to be maintained. And it is because of their success in continuing the church paper in every home for a decade that we have the courage to persist in pressing it before the brotherhood as the goal of achievement for every church. What has been done by some of our churches, and by some of the largest of them, can be done by all our churches if they will only determine to undertake it, and what has been kept up for ten years by small and large churches, is possible for all of them all the time, if they can only be persuaded to believe it and brought to desire it and to feel the urge of it. There is really to be found the seat of difficulty—we do not realize the importance of putting the church paper in every home and of keeping it there.

There are numerous reasons why the church paper should be in every home of the denomination, but no one of them that is valid is for the sake of the church paper itself. It is merely an instrument invented to perform a particular task and not a financial institution created for profit. The publishing business would be no proper concern of the church, if it were engaged in merely as a commercial enterprise, if there were no great and necessary task it was set to accomplish. And when we urge the importance of a wider distribution of The Evangelist, it is not merely that a large and financially profitable subscription list may be built up, but that it may the more effectively fulfill its mission, and accomplish the great service for the church that is set before it.

The church paper is the great informing medium of the church, its task is to carry the news of the brotherhood to the homes of its membership. It is possibly needless to go into detail: as to the importance of such a service. Every pastor knows that the members who keep in touch with what is going on in the church world, and especially the plans, methods and achievements of their own denomination are the ones who are to be counted on for loyalty and service. They have the vision and breadth of sympathy so essential to progress. They have the optimism and courage necessary for the undertaking of challenging tasks. They are the ones who are most useful and adaptable by reason of their keeping abreast with the living experience of the church. They are the ones who are strongest in faith, richest in ideals and noblest in life (other things being equal), because they have most to feed on. It is the man or the woman who keeps informed whom pastors find a delight and a joy in the great task of Kingdom building, and in whom the most ready and intelligent cooperation is usually to be found.

Now the fact that the church paper is the one supreme agency for the building up of an informed membership is what makes its distribution so important. It is not only the supreme agency, but about the only agency that is feasible and that men depend on today. It is the only means at the service of the church capable of the dissemination of news and plans and programs on such wide scale as to make possible the carrying out of a great program in united, simultaneous fashion. And, as suggested, reading is the one means on which men have come to depend for the news of the world, religious news as well as secular. We have lost the art of conversation. We have largely ceased the exchange of news by word of mouth. We ride side by side on the train with our faces buried in the daily paper or a magazine, or a book. We have no time to visit and exchange news items. We go to church just in time to hear the opening hymn announced and leave as soon as the benediction is said and do not tarry for the old-time social intercourses. We do not get the news when we are together, we get it when we are separated in our various places of abode, by reading our papers. We depend very little comparatively even upon the pulpit for our information concerning the things pertaining to the Kingdom; we depend on our reading. Our interpretation of life in practically all its phases is gained through reading. How important then that we be concerned about the kind of reading our members pursue! How vital is it for the church's sake and the people's that we place at the disposal of the members of every Christian home the church paper that carries the news of our own denominational life and promotes the ideals to which we are attached!

EDITORIAL REVIEW

The National School Association has sent out several thousand White Gift offering envelopes to the various schools of the brotherhood. Any who may be missed or who receives an insufficient number may be adequately supplied by writing to Prof. M. A. Stuckey, Ashland, Ohio. Send your offering to Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, at Ashland.

One of our very splendid preachers, but one who is comparatively little known, but who has had a long and rich experience in the Dunker fraternity, is Elder George Swihart, whose home is Roann, Indiana. He recently assisted in special services at Bryan, Ohio, as reported by the pastor, Brother O. C. Lemert, and his work was greatly appreciated.

We are favored this week with an interesting report from the pen of Sister Hattie Cope Sheldon concerning the progress of the work and other conditions related thereto. She states in a note accompanying the letter that the Lord has wonderfully blessed Brother Sheldon and herself and their little son with health, the latter at the age of three and one-half months not having been sick a day and weighing sixteen and one-half pounds.

Sister Grace P. Srack reports both her work and her plans for the winter. She has accepted the task of visiting the churches in the interest of our Kentucky mission work and stewardship instruction and where she has gone, she has been very favorably received and has given a blessing. She has decided, on account of her health conditions, to visit the Coast churches during the winter and return to the Central states in the spring.

Brother G. E. Drushal reports the work going forward at Lost Creek, Kentucky, in a very satisfactory manner, the Sunday school showing a commendable increase over the preceding year. Everybody seems to have his work and to be working at it. While some care for the children and young people at Riverside, others are going to nearby places and conducting Sunday schools on Sunday afternoons. Former appeals for clothing have met with good response, but not enough has been received to meet the demands.

Dr. J. C. Beal and Elder A. D. Cashman both tell of the happy experiences of their campaign together at Dallas Center, Iowa, where the latter is pastor. Brother Cashman has the cooperation of his people and he is leading them forward in a splendid manner. Twenty souls have by this time, he says, been received into the church since he took charge, nine of whom are the result of the meetings conducted by Brother Beal, who proved to be a great blessing to pastor and people. The future of this church would seem to be bright, as is suggested, with such a splendid group of capable and consecrated young people.

Our good correspondent from the North Manchester, Indiana, congregation let us in just a little on the busy and advancing life of that splendid church, that is so efficiently shepherded by Prof. J. Raymond Schutz. The Sunday preceding Thanksgiving is mentioned as a very unusual day. One of the most significant features of the day was the graduation of five persons from the three year course in Teacher Training. These graduates, as well as their teacher, are deserving of congratulations on having maintained interest in such an undertaking long enough to complete a three year course. Such training is widely needed in our Sunday schools and we might well place more emphasis upon it.

Our readers will enjoy the good letter by Brother A. L. Lynn, now located at Roanoke, Virginia, as pastor of the First Brethren church there. He mentions briefly his leave-taking of Pittsburgh, where he accomplished a fine piece of work during his five-year pastorate. At Roanoke he is throwing himself with faith into the big task that is on his hands. He has been used of God to bring splendid victories to two of the nearby churches. At the Garden City church forty decisions were counted and fifteen of these had received baptism at the time of writing. At the Hollins church forty were received into the church, thirty-six by baptism and four by letter.

Brother Lester V. King, pastor of the church at New Lebanon, Ohio, tells of the success of their community Daily Vacation Bible School held last July, much of the success of which, it is evident, was due to the Brethren workers. The pastor is wisely sowing the seeds from which he may expect to reap a harvest of Gospel giving in the future, by distributing tithing literature. We are glad to note that he hopes to put the EVANGELIST in every home of his congregation. He finds the presence of two resident preachers not a hindrance to his work but a help. And we would expect two such fine spirited men as Brethren Hoover and Kinzie to give just such cooperation as they are reported to give.

Brother Freeman Ankrum writes that the work at Oak Hill, West Virginia, continues to make commendable progress, the various lines of activity being maintained with growing interest. The building program is going forward and with such sacrifice and zeal as is manifest it would seem that they are certain to have their coveted dreams realized in the not far distant future. A remarkable example of healing following earnest and united prayer is reported. It is reassuring to learn of this. Why is it that such answers to prayer seem so unusual, so infrequent and strange? Do they really occur so infrequently, or is it that they are so seldom reported?

Dr. Martin Shively, bursar of Ashland College fears he is reporting the final on the Educational Day offering, and gives the names of all churches that responded to the call. If your church is conspicuous by its absence from this list, it is hoped that there will be experienced a sense of loss of blessing to such an extent that next year it may be counted among the responding group, and if possible, amends may be made for failure thus far this year. The final figures are not what they really ought to be, but we must also bear in mind that the canvass for Endowment has been going on among the churches, which accounts to a considerable extent for the poor showing.

Dr. W. S. Bell's report on the College Endowment campaign this week is a little different from usual, and the gifts he reports came about in a different way. Instead of going after them and talking long to get them, they came to him and without a word of solicitation. It would be a glorious thing if a goodly number of God's children possessed that same desire to give. Of course, if any large number of our church folks were disposed to give to college endowment after that fashion, Brother Bell might find himself without a job, but we dare say he would be glad to be relieved and to get back into the pastorate again. To tramp from place to place, to be constantly on the go, and to be compelled to face one continuous round of hard-luck stories just to get people to do their duty toward the college is not a pleasant task such as one might covet, but one to be accepted merely from a sense of duty. Wouldn't it be glorious if Christian people gave to the Lord's work cheerfully, freely and voluntarily, if it were not necessary to be constantly coaxing and begging them to do what is their plain duty to do? But people are not that way. Paul had experience with a few, but for the most part when the funds must be had for meeting some emergency in the Lord's work, there must needs be much "gathering", much going from house to house to entreat reluctant givers to relinquish the necessary amount. It is therefore like a refreshing breeze on a hot day, or perhaps it would be more seasonable to say, like a breath of the warm south wind in zero weather, to learn of such willing, voluntary givers as are the occasion of this report. It may be, however, that such instances would be greatly multiplied if we who are the ministers of the word of God were more diligent in teaching the Gospel truths about stewardship and tithing. From these two gifts the Endowment Fund is set forward to the amount of $1,500.00, which gives us a total of $127,026.54.

King Boris is Dry

It is reported that Bulgaria has the only teetotaler-king in all Europe. King Boris is young and still unmarried, but he never touches a drop of alcohol, so we are told by the World League Against Alcoholism. His attitude toward the drink evil grew out an experience which came into his life when but a small child and not yet heir to the throne. He witnessed a death brawl between two soldiers under the influence of liquor and was greatly affected by it, so much so, that he resolved at that moment never to drink and has kept his word. He hopes that his royal example will in time influence his people, and especially bring about a dry army in Bulgaria.

About Prohibition

No topic is more widely discussed today than Prohibition, and about no enactment has there been so much confusion as about the Eighteenth Amendment. It is refreshing to come in touch with some one who can think clearly and positively on the subject, as illustrated by the following printed statements gleaned from a recent address by Dr. Ernest H. Cherrington:

"Personal liberty is the least where there is no law and no government, while personal liberty reaches its highest degree where the strongest enforced restrictions and prohibitions are placed on anti-social acts.

"The first necessary step in the securing of any reform against a great evil is to deprive that evil of the sanction of the law and government.

"A great social reform such as the one in which we are engaged today is not a revolution, it is an evolution. It cannot be obtained by legislation alone, but primarily by education.

"The final decision will not rest with the next general election, but with the next generation."

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Blessings of Religious Education

By O. C. Starn, General Secretary, National Sunday School Association

The term "Religious Education" may immediately become odious to some. Such have the privilege to call it anything else they choose. It is the great principle of Religious Education that we are after. The principle of educating especially our children and young people in all things pertaining to the Christian religion. The value of this principle was recognized by Israel of old because Jehovah himself spoke it. "Thou shalt teach them to thy children." Teach what? God's laws. His laws had to do with all relationships of life. Today we are making a strenuous effort in the field of Religious Education to diligently teach our young the principles of Christian living.

The "gift time" of the year 1927 is rapidly approaching. Our children are beginning to plan what they want Santa Claus to bring them, yes and even those older, are peculiarly imbued with the same spirit. It is the happy time of the year. We would not think of refusing to give our children a single gift or our loved ones. It means friendship and love and affection. Great appeals are being made in our cities for community chest gifts, the sum of which will amount to millions of dollars. The gifts thus offered will be used to help make the poor and needy happy on Christmas Day. This is a commendably charitable and fraternal piece of work. People welcome this season—both those who give and those who receive. Why should they not?

The thing upon our heart that prompts this article is the annual White Gift offering. We wonder if this event is as gladly received as the giving of other gifts. Or does it appear as an imposition on our happiness? It should not thus appear if the import is distinctly understood. To some it may merely be the asking for money with no thought of the good it will do, hence it may be a drudgery. Let us think only of the good it will do.

The White Gift is distinctly a Sunday school offering and will be used by the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren church for forwarding the work of Religious Education. The greater amount will go for the support of the chair of Religious Education in Ashland College. The remainder of the sum will be used by the Association for its general work.

The far reaching influences of this department of Religious Education of our college cannot be estimated. This Collegiate department has come to stay and will increase in importance and scope of influence as the years come and go. We will not allow our College to slump behind in this great work. I feel as our people come to understand the true meaning of Religious Education more fully they will give more and more toward the support of this department. Not only in paying the salary of the professor who occupies the chair but also in supplying an adequate sum for the promotion of field work. We are lacking in this at the present time which fact we believe will impede our work to a certain extent.

The department of Religious Education deals with all phases of the work. It deals with Sunday school and Vacation Bible school work; with Week Day School of Religion, Training schools, etc. Think of the thousands who are being benefitted by this effort to give our young all the religious training possible. This is being prompted by those who have received training in our department of Religious Education. We need not be ashamed of what we have already accomplished in this work and we do not expect to be ashamed of it in the future.

To the young and old, of what value has the Sunday school been to you? You would not know as much about the Bible nor as many of Jesus' teachings would you? Would you want to be without them in life? Are they of great value to you? Then how much are you willing to give that the work of the Sunday school might progress? You cannot value the good you have received in terms of dollars and cents. You can only show your appreciation by contributing to the White Gift that others might receive its benefits and that you might receive still greater benefits. The Sunday school wakens inert forces within the individual that go to help the person find his or her place in life and insures the building of a Christian character.

Young people, what benefits have you received in Vacation Bible school? What a joyous time you have had during the summer periods associating together and learning more of the Word of God. Some of you might have thus received an inspiration to become a Christian or even enter into some form of Christian work. God speaks to us through his word and thus the more we learn of it the more likely we are to hear his call to Christian living and service.

What help have you received from the study of the Bible in the public school? Has it not come to mean more to you as you thus co-relate it to other studies in the educational process? Does not its dignity and revelation of the deepest secrets of life appeal to you? Does not the study of the Book which makes God the creator of all things help you to appreciate the study of the different sciences of nature and vice versa? It is a wonderful privilege and one that must be promoted. Will you not help it along?

Many of you have likely enjoyed several summer weeks in a Young People's Training Camp. Is it not wonderful? You can measure its value even better than any one else can tell you. This work needs further promotion among Brethren young people. It will train for leadership service, of which the world is greatly in need of today. Help promote it.

There are so many blessings we may receive from Religious Education, that we know you are enthused about it to the extent that you will contribute all you can to the White Gift offering that this great work might continue. Give willingly, give prayerfully, and as you give have a vision of the far-reaching influence of your gift. Visualize that great army of young people wending their way to the Sunday school, the Vacation Bible school, the Week Day school of Religion, Young People's Training camps and then going out in life to fill some worthy place where they may teach others to become acquainted with the Greatest Gift ever given—Jesus our Savior.

Young people, you may be among this great group who find a worthy place in life because of Religious Education. You will therefore want to help promote it. Parents, it may be your boy or girl who will be saved from a life of ruin and will be found among this group taking their place in the work of the Kingdom. You will not be ashamed of them then will you? You will be doubly thankful for the work of Religious Education. This will be of more value and happiness to you than millions. You will be glad to help, then, push the work of Religious Education.

Yes, there are many blessings accruing from the principles of Religious Education. We will all want to contribute to its support and boost it along. Let us make it a great White Gift offering in the name of him who gave his only begotten Son that we might some day enjoy the blessings of eternal life.

White Giving

By E. L. Miller, Vice President

There are many ways in which one might give to the causes which present themselves to him. Sometimes the gift is made so as to rid oneself of the solicitor. Again it might be to keep in with the folks who are supporting the cause presented. It might also be that gifts are made for political or other baser purposes. All these, like the one giving alms to be seen of men, have their reward with them, and it is not much of a reward at that. But the Gift that God made us in his Son was not made in that way. There was no ulterior motive in the giving.

He gave so that others might be blessed and that without measure. Whatever might be the color or shade of color in all other kinds of giving surely this was White Giving. The very purity of motive and Gift denote complete absence of anything low or mean. And how at this Christmas season we should praise the name of the perfect Giver and also that of the perfect Gift!

As we again celebrate the occasion of the presentation of this perfect Gift to the world, it behooves us to take more than just passing note of it, or make only perfunctory mention of thanks. No true Christian but that will have his heart softened at the anniversary of Christ's advent into this world by way of Bethlehem's manger. We like to show this spirit of appreciation of God's kindness to us by being kind in turn to our loved ones and those who have been kind to us. But in his White Giving to the world God did not hunt out just those who were especially close to himself or those who had been kind to him. His gift was made to the most unlikely and the most needy of all. Those outside his circle of friends were especially thought of in the Gift. So friends, if we would emulate the example of Jehovah God and his dear Son we will also hunt out some of those who are needy at this season of gifts and giving. There is no law AGAINST remembering our own at such time, but there is both law and Gospel FOR our remembering others, those who are more needy and dependent. So let us be pure white in this season's giving. Let us be concerned that others do not perish but that they have everlasting life. That was God's concern when giving the Gift unmeasurable. Shall we try to further the great and good work commenced that first Christmas? Shall much of our giving be to the end that good will might be sown among the children of men so that peace may come to men of good will?

It is for the purpose of furthering God's work and making it possible for others to enjoy his Gift to the race that our Sunday schools are requested to lift a White Gift offering and forward same to the treasurer of the National Sunday School Association. Our efforts are along the lines of peace. We would teach others the way of life. We would prepare messengers of the Gospel for service to others. So your gift will be properly apportioned for service on the Home Mission field in Kentucky and the Seminary at Ashland where young men and women are prepared for Gospel service. Shall we make our gift the Whitest yet? God loves and blesses the cheerful giver, and surely a particular blessing will come to the one giving out of the fulness of his heart, and much or little of his pocket-book, to the causes supported by the National Association. It is the desire of the Association to reach out further each year, to do better work where they have reached, and it is altogether your privilege to show full appreciation of God's work for you, and trust imposed in you.

May we then give of the best and most precious that we have for the extension of the Kingdom? The wise men gave of the most precious and costly things, and none of it was too good for the Savior of mankind. You cannot give gold and frankincense and myrrh, perhaps, but you can separate to his glory of what you have. So long as the gift is made with pure motives back of it and with no spirit of withholding, it will be a White Gift, the kind that God can and will honor. Let us make our gift the best ever and thus return to God the finest kind of thanks for his unspeakable Gift to the children of men.

Our White Gifts

By Prof. M. P. Puterbaugh, National Treasurer

Every year about this time articles appear regarding White Gifts. It would seem that by this time the most of our people would know what it is all about and that the only thing needed would be a distribution of envelopes. Yet it has been demonstrated that more is needed so again we must tell the "why" and "wherefor" of this Christmas observance.

Many people know the history of the White Gift movement. Some years ago someone decided that Christmas was not made just for folks to give handkerchiefs, scarfs and gloves to their friends! The first Christmas brought forth some precious gifts for the little Jesus and now at

At Christmas, of all times, it should be remembered, "Freely ye have received", and therefore we should "freely give." The White Gift offering is our opportunity and challenge.

Christmas time we ought to think of Jesus too. Consequently, it was suggested that at Christmas time we should give Jesus (1) ourselves, (2) our service, and (3) our substance. These were called White Gifts for the King.

It happened, however, that as the service became better known there were parts of it that everyone did not care for but the National Sunday School Association of the Brethren church thought there were parts of it that were of great value. So we have made it a part of our National program. The giving of self and of service is taken care of by the pastors and local interests and the Sunday School Association undertakes chiefly the collection and distribution of funds that have been offered for the Master's work.

It seems fitting that the Sunday School Association should perform this service for the church. First, because it is as completely organized, as national in its scope, and as widely represented in the local congregations as any agency in the church, and second, because it seeks to minister to so many of the agencies and branches of the church work.

Last year the question was raised, "Is it more blessed to give than to receive?" We have heard that all our lives and yet on every hand there are people who neither have cared for this blessing or who act as if they have found the statement untrue. So the question was raised. And the response was proof enough that many found this blessing. In 1924 White Gifts of about $4,000 were received; in 1925, $4,657.08; and in 1926, $4,680.15. Always an increase, you see. But it seems that we are due for a real increase this year if all that have contributed will tell others of this blessing. Surely $5,000 is not too much to hope for this year. We sometimes talk of our church as a small organization and yet as Dr. Bell has recently said, "We are larger than we think." We can do more than we think, we can give more than we think. Remember, we are over twenty thousand strong and $5,000 would mean only twenty-five cents apiece. TWEN-TY-FIVE CENTS FOR JESUS!!! Think of it! What a gift for the Master compared with the Gold, Frankincense, and Myrrh!

For the sake of those who do not know the work aided by this Christmas offering the following budget is presented for this year:

Ashland College—Dept. of Religious Education ..	$1,500
Kentucky Missions	1,000
Book Fund for Ashland College Library	500
Brethren Young People's Camp at Shipshewana ..	300
Field Work for the Sunday School Association ...	200
Contribution to the International Association ...	100
Memorial Endowment Campaign—First Payment	500
Secretarial Help, Pamphlets and Miscellaneous ..	400
	<hr/> $4,500

How important all this work is! In spite of all it has done and is doing for the College, the Association gave Dr. Bell $1,000 for the Endowment, knowing full well that the College and the Association cannot exist without each other. The Shipshewana camp sounds a new note in our national program, and the Association puts itself on record as being ready to back the movement with the resources at its command. Our young people MUST be nurtured and trained. Finally, our work in the Kentucky mountains is more than a mission—it is a SCHOOL and as such the Association stands ready to help.

Daniel Webster, when asked what was the greatest thought that had ever entered his mind, replied, "My accountability to Almighty God." But you ask, "Why is money so necessary?" McConaughy in his book, "Money, the Acid Test," says: "Money is a Factor, Money is a Medium of Exchange, Money is a Measure of Value, Money Measures a Man, Money Makes a Man, Money Appraises Men, and Money Reveals Men."

Love will not buy books and pay teachers; it takes money. Money plays such an important part in all of our transactions that we all use it to measure values. It measures land, resources, goods, labor, and certainly, to some extent, our love and devotion to the cause of Jesus. Money certainly makes men—that is, in the way they use it; and it certainly reveals men—in the way they use it. How true what James wrote—"If a brother or sister be naked, and destitute of daily food, and one of you say unto them, 'Depart in peace, be ye warmed and filled', notwithstanding ye give them not those things which are needful to the body, what doth it profit?"

Envelopes to be used in taking up this offering will soon be sent to Sunday school officers. It is not too early to plan for this fine observance of the season. It is hoped that this year the offering will be taken promptly and that it will be reported and sent promptly to the treasurer. A glance at the directory of treasuries of various church enterprises found in the Evangelist will enable each church to send its offerings to the proper places.

Brethren, this year let us give the Christ on Christmas gifts of self, of service, and of substance.

The Interest of the International Sunday School Association In Christian Education

By Prof. M. A. Stuckey, Educational Superintendent

With each recurring year there goes forth from the National Sunday School Association an appeal at the Christmas season to the Brethren Sunday schools and churches of the land. For a goodly number of years this organization, representing the branch of the church's life and work known as Christian education, and, by the way, by far its most important task, has been among you "as one that serves."

No apology need be made for our interest in Ashland College and Seminary; no regret is to be recited relative to our yearly investments in the Kentucky mountain work; no sorrow clamors for expression over our promotional program of education and leadership training over our whole brotherhood.

Christian Education and Preaching

The chair of Christian Education at Ashland College, now held by the writer, was never more important than it is today. Not that it never has been of importance, but that a greater, bigger, better, and broader work now faces us than ever before. For instance, there is the happy task of preparing men to teach, which naturally fails in this department of the seminary's life. At the present time there are twenty-two in a Beginner's Homiletic class, which shall be followed by the regular larger course next year. The challenge of preparing students to preach the everlasting Gospel to dying multitudes is part of the task of an instructor here.

The Importance of Doctrinal Belief and Teaching

Again, there is also the further work of teaching our students in general and Brethren church history. To know the historic past of the church and the part our denomination has played in the life of that church is a romance interesting enough for the study and consideration of any lover of the Dunker movement. In fact, if a personal opinion may be expressed here without extra and added defense, it appears to me that the most important thing our Brethren people need to know right now, preachers and laity alike, is what the Brethren church believes doctrinally. A study of church history will show you why this consideration is primary in every respect and others are more or less secondary. May I hasten to add somewhat passionately that our beliefs need to be taught clearly, forcefully, and persistently wherever we go as a people. They may be set forth by Sunday school teachers and preachers—satisfactorily and in a dignified manner—only after proper instruction has been given in our Seminary and through the Sunday school and other literature of the church. Preparing young men and women to herald the saving grace and tenets of the whole Bible is the pleasant and God-given task of Christian Education. It must and shall be done.

If love prompt the giving the gift will be white.

The Practical Work of a Pastor

Aside from the foregoing there is, moreover, the work of teaching students in a practical life, or disciplines of the church's life. To know how to administer the affairs of a church, a Sunday school, a community, insofar as the pastor is concerned therein, and to win a sinful world back to the Lord Jesus Christ, is a problem facing all young Christian workers. Courses in the work of a pastor, personal evangelism, and church administration are offered to seminary students. An ever-growing Biblical emphasis is being stressed that our graduates may be amply and fitly prepared for their work. All of the elements of teaching of the ordinary Bible Institute and Seminary proper are included in such courses. Books by Erdman, Scarborough, Torrey, Thomas and others together with suitable lectures are used. In Christian education, the selection of scholarly, sane, and safe books is no small consideration. A well proven and usable bibliography is wondrously helpful to the pastor and his workers. The above constitutes in the main, the labors of the professor occupying the chair of Christian Education at Ashland.

The Mountain Work in Kentucky

Professor James Watt Raine, instructor of English at Berea College, Kentucky, has written an excellent book

A Legend of Cathay

THEY PRESENTED UNTO HIM GIFTS

"This strange country is called Cathay, and the ruler thereof is one Kublah Khan, a mighty warrior, who by reason of his strong will and trusty sword has made himself lord of the whole land. His government is both wise and just, and is administered to rich and poor alike, without fear or favor. On the king's birthday the people observe what is called the White Feast. Then are the king and his court assembled in a great room of the palace, which is all white, the floor of marble and the walls hung with curtains of white silk. All are in white apparel and they offer unto the king white gifts, to show that their love and loyalty are without stain. The rich bring to their lord pearls, carvings of ivory, white chargers, and costly brodered garments. The poor present white pigeons and hand-fuls of rice. Nor doth the great king regard one gift above another so long as all are white. And so they keep the king's birthday.

And so do we, for we come together in honor of the birth of King Jesus who is King of Kings and Lord of Lords. As the wise men came bringing their gifts of gold, frankincense and myrrh and laid them at the feet of him who was to become the Savior of the world, so we bring our gifts to him tonight. Ours are gifts of self, of service and of substance. No gift does he prize more highly than the gift of self and so may we give to him our very selves and say with the Apostle Paul—"We are not our own, for we are bought with a price, the price of his own precious blood." Then may we pledge him our service, a gift in which he is well pleased. He said—"I am among you as he that serveth, and he that would become greatest must become servant of all. And lastly, we should bring unto him our substance, gifts of money for the support of our beloved Ashland College, for the carrying on of the great work of our National Sunday School Association and for the extension of his kingdom in the mountains of Kentucky. And we pray especially that the Christmas joy which we know may be brought to many hearts through the consecration of our substance. And as we bring our gifts, may we remember that the great king of kings doth not regard one gift above another so long as all are white. And it is the spirit of the gift that makes it white.—Copyrighted, Meigs Publishing Company.

entitled "The Land of Saddle-bags," which characterizes properly the life of the mountaineer.

Contrary to impressions radiated throughout the country relative to the weaknesses of the mountain people, Professor Raine, in refuting many magazine writers who are directly responsible for the situation, sets forth the elements of strength in the life of those living in the regions of Appalachia.

This professor finds that the mountain people are generous, independent, resourceful and pioneer-like in their living. Isolated as they have been and marooned as it were on a land island, bound in by mountain confines and well-nigh impassable roads, has kept these good people from making the type of progress assigned to their neighbors, but not too superior a type of progress at that.

In point of fact, seclusion has developed in them sturdy character, personal freedom, a love of mother nature, and a spirit of helpfulness to their fellow men. For generosity and hospitality, can this incident be excelled? Quoting from Raine, "Nor is this hospitality merely occasional, when a chance traveler comes along. Stopping at another home, I saw the old grandmother cowering over the fire in a shawl, as she sat in a low hickory splint chair, smoking her pipe. 'How are you, Mrs. Browning?'"

"Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable Gift"—this is your opportunity to show your gratitude.

'I ain't no 'count much. But I hain't no right to complain. I've had my health fer nigh onto sixty years, but now I'm foolish and kind o' drinlin.' But all I want in this world's a chance to git to a better.'

When Mrs. Browning was a young woman, with only five or six children, word came that a neighbor woman up the next creek was very sick. Mrs. Browning went to her at once. "Miz Browning, I'm a dying woman, and I bin wantin' mightily to see ye. I bin a-watchin' ye and I've noted that your perfession and your practice hits, so I'm goin' to give ye my six children." As soon as the mother died, Mrs. Browning brought the children home. It was not even necessary to consult her husband. Eighteen months later another woman died and left her six more orphans, as another tribute to her real Christian character. Her husband's only remark was, "Where ye goin' to put 'em all, Bettie?" "Oh, there's allus room for a few more, and the big 'uns can help wait on the least ones." She reared them all with her own children, and I do not suppose she ever saw a hundred dollars. Now she is modestly hoping for a chance to get to a better world!"

These people are poor and happy; not rich and miserin them because such institutions as Riverside and Krypton exist. Two trips to these fascinating hills has convinced me of that point.

When Brethren people are asked to support our Kentucky mountain work, is it not plain and certain that we are investing where the returns shall be in garnered souls for the Master's use? Assuredly, and that is just why our National Sunday School Association is desirous of aiding Brother and Sister Drushal, and their staff of talented help in the Christian education of the mountain youth. As I write I have before me the name of a goodly number of college graduates who have taught during the by-gone decade at Riverside Institute, representing institutions all over the United States, and a worthy group they are. The graduates of Riverside too are making good as home builders, school teachers, college students, and missionaries. The students entering the institution are usually ninety-eight to ninety-nine per cent unchristian; before they complete their courses and graduate, I am definitely informed, they are ninety-eight to one hundred per cent Christian. Surely this is a work of Christian education that merits our best White Gifts.

Added Interests

Add to the above interests the work of our Association together with the conducting of the Young People's Training Camp at Shipshewana Lake, Indiana, another Brethren project with an assured future, and you have a good picture of our interests.

A final interest is our endowment pledge given to Dr. Bell at Winona Lake, Indiana, in August. It amounts to one thousand dollars and is to be paid in two installments, five hundred dollars in this year and the remainder during ing the next. With all others we are sharing in the endowment campaign.

At this oncoming Christmas season may you feel kindly disposed toward our efforts and aid us with your substantial White Gifts.

Things By the Way---III

By A. D. Gnag y, D.D.

A Motherly Mother

She lived many years ago, hundreds of years before Jesus was born, in a quiet, quaint, queer little village nestled among the hills in God's country. Her name? It is not known; but, because she lived in Shunem, we know her as the Shunamite woman. She was the wife of a well-to-do farmer, and a woman of character and force who took the lead in the home. She became famous for a very early and conspicuous instance of large-hearted and timely hospitality,—she built a little "chamber in the wall" for "the man of God." It was a great day for that home when hospitality was extended to the best that the times afforded, a representative of true religion in his need, and of service thus to the development of God's kingdom, a humble service that made her name fragrant down through the corridors of time. Yet we do not know this "great woman" by name. Was it Mary, I wonder? or Martha, cumbered by many things? Probably more like Mary with her ointment and what Jesus said of her, Matthew 26:13. Her public spirit, religious zeal, originative mind and executive force, her fine foresight, made her the prototype of the best class of godly women and mothers whose name today is legion. No good mothers today? More of them than ever before, real, good, devoted, loyal women who play the part of mothers in royal fashion, even though some do have "bobbed hair." Such there are in my congregation, God bless them. They are doing the biggest work in the world. The church could not get along without such women.

The husband? He was wrapped up in his farm; he had no eye for public affairs; he missed his opportunity—but for the initiative of his large-minded wife. Her devout spirit and wide intelligence were sharpened to useful ends by notable common sense. From first to last her husband deferred to her—had already learned to do this, and to confide unreservedly in her sound judgment. In this lies his highest distinction, and proof of her greatness. Proverbs 31:10-12, 23-31 might well be her epitaph. This Shunamite woman was in herself the first missionary society. The prophet Elisha for whom she had spread a bed "in the chamber in the wall", and for whom she placed the chair at her board,—he felt the lofty significance of her deeds, and could not pass them by with small notice. Are we, today, who claim to be "men of God" as keen to recognize the real worth of such women? There are multitudes of them, home-builders, church-builders, and kingdom-builders, but they are modest, as also this woman was, and we men are too proud to acknowledge their real worth, lest, perchance, it might detract from our popularity. Modest, did I say? Yes. She refused what would have been a conspicuous honor. She was a loyal wife and a faithful housekeeper, and modestly declined the prophet's offer of an introduction at court—where she could have shone had she cared to do so. And yet she did accept the glory of becoming a mother! She declined honorable mention at the king's court, but modestly assumed the responsibility of promised motherhood! May her tribe increase!

Later: It was a common sorrow that came to this house in Shunem. The little boy whom the prophet had promised had made his arrival on schedule time and had already lived in that home several years when the sorrow came also. It always does. It has come to millions and it will come to millions more. The child fell sick, and after a few agonizing hours had died. His mother, with true motherly instinct ran to the man who could open the resources of God to her. She knew where to go in that hour,—do you? "The chamber in the wall", reminded her of "the man of God" and forthwith she will,—not SEND for him, but GO herself. "He who wants not, sends; he who wants goes." Christ wanted,—and he came; God wanted,—and he came in the person of Jesus. The mother must see the "man of God", and she did see him. It is a great blessing to a boy, whether he lives or dies, to have a mother of that kind, a mother with the God-impulse in her. On the other hand it is a great loss to a boy to grow up in an atmosphere where the thought of his mother does not link his mind immediately with the thought of God. If a boy is blest with a real mother, a mother whose life every time he thinks of it reminds him of God the battle for his soul is more than half won. It is a rare thing for such a boy to go wrong. The nearest likeness to the love of God there is on earth is the love of a mother for her child, and blessed is the child who has a mother adorned with the spiritual fineness that makes him feel that God is real because she is near. Yes, and twice happy the man, to have such a wife, and to know her worth. Truly, she was "a great woman."

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

THE BLESSED PEOPLE—Psalm 33:8-15. "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord; and the people whom he hath chosen for his own inheritance." It is the recognition of Jehovah God as the Lord of a people that brings blessedness. They are the chosen of God, who also have themselves proven God, and seek his will and way in life. There is no better nor more certain road to national security than godliness, and no surer way to peace than righteousness.

TUESDAY

LIFE'S TRUE PURPOSE—Luke 16:19-26. "There was a certain rich man, which was clothed in purple and fine linen, and fared sumptuously every day." He thought the aim of life was the securing of things with which to bedeck his body and satisfy his appetite. There are people today who have no higher conception of the purpose of life than that. To have what they want to eat and wear, to be amused and entertained, to have every whim satisfied,—that is all they seek, that is life to them. But man is more than stomach, or he might better be a pig, and more than clothing, or he might better be a peacock. Life to man is more than mere satisfying of the desires, or it were better to be a beast. Man has capacities for self-control, for love and service, for God-likeness, and it is as he exercises himself in these lines that he realizes life's true purpose.

WEDNESDAY

RELIGIOUS HONOR—1 Chron. 21:24-27. "I will not ... offer burnt offerings without cost." But that is just what vast numbers of people are desirous of doing today. They want to get the church's ministries free. They want to enjoy the house of God without helping to pay for its upkeep. They want to profit by the services of the preacher, but let others see to his salary. They want the peace of forgiveness, but none of the demands of sacrifice. David had sinned a grievous sin, but he had enough manhood left to refuse to offer the sacrifice of repentance at the expense of another. It was a matter of honor with him. We need more of that same high sense of honor in religious matters today.

THURSDAY

VALUE OF DIVINE WORSHIP—Isa. 48:16-18. "O that thou hadst hearkened unto my commandments! then had thy peace been as a river, and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea." Whether one engages in divine worship is not a matter of indifference, nor that one often hears the preached word a matter of little moment. Such exercises are vital to one's mental, moral and spiritual growth. Vincent G. Burns says: "When minds are stirred with worthy thoughts, when lives are surrounded by sacred influences, when souls are sustained by heavenly powers, then come the fruits of the Spirit, then come 'peace like a river', joy like a flood and righteousness like the waves of the sea."

FRIDAY

UNFEIGNED FAITH—2 Tim. 1:5-7. "When I call to remembrance the unfeigned faith that is in thee, which dwelt first in thy grandmother Lois, and thy mother Eunice." In a very true sense, and far more often than we customarily realize, is a strong, satisfying, steady faith, a heritage of godly parents, and especially of a saintly mother, who taught by lip and life the great realities of the Christian religion. This is a challenge to the appreciation of thoughtless sons and daughters and to the responsibility of careless fathers and mothers.

SATURDAY

CONCERN FOR YOUTH—2 Sam. 18:29-33. "And the king said, Is the young man Absalom safe?" One of the great concerns of the present day is for the young men and young women—"Are they safe?" It largely depends on the habits they have formed under parental roof. Most of the Absaloms of our day get started in much the same manner as did David's wayward boy—through lack of real home life.

SUNDAY

A LONG VIEW OF LIFE—Mark 10:13-22. "One thing thou lackest." And that one thing with hosts of people, is a long view of life. The things that are near at hand hold the center of vision. There is no need to look away into the eternities. Only so can one rightly appraise the appeal of the material.—G. S. B.

LESSON LIGHTS

The Supreme Need

"Luke has summed up in one sentence the supreme needs of the present hour: granting God the highest glory by guiding our lives in accord with spiritual principles regarded as fundamental and supreme; peace over the entire earth; and good will among all men. If we do not soon pluck the nectar of essential truth from these few great messages, we shall see the defeat of our best institutions, the ill-omened abandonment of the ideals of world peace and brotherhood, and the resounding crash of civilization itself. We cannot well pass judgment upon a world whose supreme heights we still scorn to reach and whose greatest powers we scorn to know and use.

"Christmas is a time of blessed joy—sweet children's carols, fondly cherished hopes of greater things in life, the retelling of that wonderful story of old which grows each year the dearer. Christmas is the time when we think with deeper earnestness of God's great love for man and of the life and message of his Son. The Jews awaited a magnificent king who should come with pomp and circumstance; they found, instead, a Child lying in a humble manger at Bethlehem. We still may find today, in that supreme story of our Savior's birth, love transcending and faith abundant.

"Christmas is a time when good news is spread abroad to be the healing of the nations. Who is so far away from life that he would not know of the birth of his Savior, and who so calloused by its buffetings that he would not know its supreme Leadership? He most fully lives who carries the story of the Savior deep down in his heart and radiates love and kindness wherever he may go."

Christmas Universal

"Christmas cheer is universal. Christmas radiance lights Christendom and casts its brightness on all lands. No talent escapes its contagion of peace and good will. Angels themselves have heralded it; poets have sung it; great preachers proclaimed it; great saints exemplified it.

"Unlike Thanksgiving, Yuletide is not a national, but a worldwide festival. It began in Heaven, descended to earth, hovered over Bethlehem, centered in the stable. There the glad tidings were fulfilled in the mother and her Son. From that little town in the Judean hills they have winged their flight around the globe. The choristers of Paradise, the shepherds of the plain, the Wise Men of the East, lead a vast procession winding through twenty centuries, gathering countless recruits on each recurrent Christmas Day.

"Because the Child of Mary sanctioned and ennobled those instincts of love and affection—of the heart, they have shed fresh luster on every household, and kindled a new joy in every domestic circle, Jew and Gentile, Roman Catholic and Protestant, black, and brown, yellow and white may differ in creed, color and formal opinions, but they agree that self-forgetting mother love and filial devotion are the center and circumference of the best that mankind can be—the challenge to its divinest qualities. So Christmas brings the opportune day to get rid of love's fatal foes. Malice, prejudice, envy, anger, hatred, cower before the advent of celestial affection. It shows up and shames the malice that poisons inter-

Come, My Heart!

*"Come my heart, canst thou not hear it,
'Mid the tumult of thy days?
Catch the old sweet song of angels,
Join thy voice to swell their praise.
Hast thou never shared the blessing,
Never known kind Heaven's gift?
Bethlehem thy Savior cradled!
Heart of mine, a song uplift.*

*"First to hear were drowsing shepherds,
Sore afraid that winter's night;
Soon to Bethlehem they hurried—
Lo, the song they heard was right!
Ever since, all they who heard it
Find a Savior where they dwell;
Sing it, heart! Who knows what toilers
Thou the Christward way shalt tell?*

*"Long ago the angels vanished.
Oh, their song is sounding still!
Millions now with hope are singing,
"Peace on earth to men good will."
Sing, my heart! Though peace may tarry,
Sing good will amid the strife!
Join the old sweet song whose music
Will attune to Heav'n thy life."*

—William Allen Knight.

course: the prejudice which is often more detrimental to truth than a naked lie. It rakes out the nest of unclean birds which lurk in darkness, deceit, spite, and false witness.

"If Yuletide's merriment did no more than give generous sentiments and humane deeds one big inning, it would be worth while. To check the moral insanities that bewilder and defile society at large is an achievement to be hailed. But it does infinitely more, in that it recreates withered souls, harmonizes disputing factions, silences quarrelsome people, revitalizes friendships that have begun to fade, and makes myriads of every rank and condition truly happy....

"Of course the sorry fact remains that unclean birds return to roost in malevolent breasts. Selfishness and greed resume their sway over corrupted minds. Invocations to battle echo the heralding of peace with justice. Yet no Christmas has passed since Christ was born that did not leave strife and violence the weaker. Once well-nigh omnipotent, war is now on the defensive. To insist that God's tidal wave of love and mercy can sweep over the world once a year and leave behind no deposit of his purpose, is sheer stupidity."—From S. Parkes Cadman.

THE AUTHORITY OF BIBLICAL TRUTH

(Rev. S. D. Chown, D.D., LL.D., in The Biblical Review)

The truth Christ taught contained everything essential to a complete body of divinity for his church. If peace is to possess the denominations, the time has come when the voice of God should ring over every collegiate classroom, "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased; hear ye him."

We are aware of the critical objection that the sayings of Jesus may not be truly reported in the Gospels, and therefore the Scripture record may bring us only a diminished authority. But it does not appear that this objection carries much weight. The supreme spirituality of Christ's sayings must have come from himself. It could not have been the invention of his admirers. We may need a better manifestation of the religion he taught, but we cannot conceive of a better religion than he gave us. As Strauss said, "He is the highest model of religion within the reach of our thought."

David Lloyd George delights to tell this story. It is of an old Welsh minister who, on a very stormy night, preached in an out-of-the-way neighborhood, which had been somewhat disturbed by higher criticism. At the close of the meeting a farmer's wife stepped to the front and said: "You will stay with us tonight? Our farmstead is some distance away, the road is rough and the night is dark, but we have a lantern that will light us home." As they walked along the minister noticed that the lantern was an old-fashioned one and that it had horn sides, also that these were badly dented. The good woman read the thought of the minister, and said: "Never mind the dints. It will light thee home."

Criticisms may have made some dints in our views of the moral elevation and literal authenticity of certain portions of the old Book, but is it worth while to have controversy between people who believe that the light in the lantern of divine revelation is sufficient to guide them all every step of the way home?

WORTH MORE THAN MONEY

There is something in life far more satisfactory than the making of money. A business man who had retired from business to engage in a branch of Christian work told of a temptation he had to re-enter the world of money-making. This was a rare opportunity for gain, and he had the capital and the talent to make the most of it. But he felt that he could not give up his Christian service. The man who accepted the chance made two hundred thousand dollars in two years. "But," said the business man, "I have no regrets. The satisfaction I have gained in serving Christ is worth far more to me than the money." Christ's service pays better dividends than the world can pay. —Editorial in The Westminster Adult Bible Class.

Christmas Greetings

Good Tidings! "And there were shepherds in the same country abiding in the field, and keeping watch by night over their flocks. And an angel of the Lord stood by them, and the glory of the Lord shone round about them: and they were sore afraid. And the angel said unto them, Be not afraid; for behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy which shall be to all people: for there is born to you this day in the city of David a Savior, who is Christ the Lord."

This gracious and wonderful season, Christmas, is again approaching. Endeavorers, we do well to reflect upon the significance of Christ's birth. May we not be totally absorbed in receiving or giving as an exchange of gifts, but may we learn that "it is more blessed to give than to receive" when we have done it in Jesus' name.

We are taking this measure to broadcast our kindly greetings and heartiest good wishes to all Endeavorers. May the Christmas tide for each be one of happiness, peace and health. And may you honor it in your heart, and try to keep it all year.

E. M. RIDDLE, President.

The miracles of old are still occurring. Jesus is still causing the lame to walk in the pathway of his will. He is still turning the palsy of fear into the self-control of jubilant faith. He is still opening blind eyes, and flashing before them the vision ineffable. He is still opening graves, and leading men into the fields of abounding life. We know that,

The Meaning of Christmas
Matt. 2:1, 2, 9, 10.

The Story of Billy and His Friends
(In Four Parts. Part IV)

The editor is sorry to have to announce to his young friends of the Evangelist family that Miss Virginia Haun who has written us such entertaining and inspiring stories for two years, has asked to be relieved of the work. This is her last story. That is not pleasant news, not the kind we would like to tell you at this Christmas season. However, we cannot insist on her continuing, when it would be an imposition on her to do so. We will miss her interesting stories, but we will hold a very pleasant memory of her faithfulness and helpfulness through these many years that she has served us. We are all greatly indebted to her for what she has done so freely and kindly. All the young readers thank you, Miss Haun, and we shall all hope to hear from you occasionally in other ways. We all join in wishing you "A Merry Christmas."

The editor will reserve his Christmas greetings to his young readers for next week's paper, when we will also announce Miss Haun's successor.—Editor.

Christmas is always slow about arriving, at least that is what little boys and girls are apt to think, and that is just what Billy and his gang thought about it. When it was still a week until Christmas day, Billy and his gang had an important meeting. They were trying to plan some celebration. Now all of Billy's life, Christmas had meant a time when he would receive so many gifts of all kinds that he hardly knew what to do with them all. It was a time when he displayed his gifts and other boys displayed theirs and they all tried to see how many things they could get.

As Billy and his friends talked things over on that day, a week before Christmas, Billy began to realize that none of those other boys were going to receive a houseful of gifts. They talked about the things that they liked to do. They planned to go "bell snickling" and to visit each other's homes to play games and eat popcorn and candy. All of that sounded interesting to Billy but he was surprised that so little was being said about gifts.

"Tomorrow at Junior Christian Endeavor we will plan to take baskets to some of the poor people", said one of the boys.

"I like to run up to a house and put the basket on the porch and then hide so that scampering off in every direction carrying the big, brightly covered baskets. They had a glorious time. Then as soon as they had distributed the baskets, they all gathered at Billy's house. They were led into one of the biggest rooms in the house. There they found the most beautiful Christmas tree that they had ever seen. It was so big and tall and covered with the prettiest lights, tinsel, and other decorations!

When all were in the room and had had their fill of looking and looking at the beautiful tree, suddenly Santa Claus appeared and distributed the nicest gifts to all of the gang, just like Billy had said that he was to do. My, but those boys were surprised and happy. Some of them got the best presents that they had ever received in all of their lives. And Billy was the happiest boy of all, for had he not helped to give happiness to all the rest instead of having all of those gifts himself? And then the rest of the boys, including Sammy, had just finished taking lovely things to the people of the neighborhood so they were happy in being able to give to others, too.

Billy's mother said to Billy's father, "I feel that Billy and his friends here in Woodville have become the nicest pals that anyone could wish to see. They have learned to work together and to play together and now they have learned that the real spirit of Christmas is in giving to others even as God gave his Son to us on the first blessed Christmas day."

CITIZENSHIP COMMITTEE

Every Christian Endeavor society should have a citizenship committee, says the "Christian Endeavor World." This is doubly necessary now that all the members, girls as well as boys, are prospective citizens.

The citizenship committee may get some well-informed person to conduct a class in civics, using some good text-book, or simply taking up one after the other the different branches of the local government, getting the heads of those branches to come and talk to the Endeavorers.

The citizenship committee will try to acquaint the Endeavorers with the characters of the various candidates for office, and may even get up a public meeting at which they will speak, in which case you will invite the whole town to hear them.

The work of the citizenship committee will not be done, of course, in any partisan spirit. The committee will stand for Christianity in politics, however, and it may well have as its advisers some well-known Christian from each of the parties represented in the church.

VIRGINIA HAUN

no one knows who brought it", said another.

"Do we all bring things to put in the baskets?" asked Billy.

"Sure we do", said another.

That evening when Billy went home, he talked things over with his parents. He said to them, "If the other boys are not going to receive Christmas presents like I always have, I won't feel very good about getting more than anyone else. I want to ask you something. Couldn't I give gifts to the other boys instead of receiving so many myself? I think that would be nicer."

Of course Billy's mother and father were very much pleased. His mother said, "I'll tell you what we'll do, Billy. We'll buy the gifts for the other boys at the same time that we are doing the rest of our Christmas shopping. Then we will have them all in here on Christmas eve and have a tree and a big party."

"Oh, that will be wonderful", said Billy.

So all was planned.

On the day before Christmas Billy and the gang each brought as many contributions as they could for the Christmas baskets. My, but they enjoyed giving. Some did not have much but they were so glad if they could help some of the poorer people of the country.

From the Bossangoa Mission in Africa

Bossangoa par Bangui,
 September 24, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

It has been some time since you have heard from Bossangoa station and many changes have taken place. We are now enjoying our nice new house after several months of living in the village rest house, and later in a little house built by a chief. It seems so quiet and peaceful to be on the hill "far from the maddening crowd."

We rejoice in the fact that Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy of Bassai have been appointed to work at this station. Just now Mr. Kennedy is here building a house. As soon as it is completed Mrs. Kennedy and the baby will come.

Work has been done, clearing off the concession. An orchard of mangoes, pineapples, bananas and paw paws has been planted. A road has been marked out but not yet made. Classes have been started for those who wish to be evangelists. Six have enrolled.

Last Sunday 175 were present at the church service. Quite a few women and children are accepting the Gospel. Hitherto most of our converts have been men. Last Sunday 12 were baptized, and there are several to be baptized this Sunday.

There is quite a leopard scare around here just now. The natives won't go out at night unaccompanied or without a fire. Every night they take about three or four people, in the nearby villages. In the next village a soldier was attacked by one or it got his dog which was sleeping by him. While the leopard was devouring the dog the soldier got his spear and scared him away. So many women and children are taken by the leopards and some have been reported as taken by lions. At Bassai they take goats and other animals but here they seem to prefer human flesh! Night before last a leopard came quite close to Mr. Kennedy's house. He fired his revolver and scared it away.

Our workmen have quite a time finding food since the most of them are away from their own villages. One old chief promised Mr. Kennedy to bring in some food. We didn't think much about this as the black man's word isn't always sure. Last Saturday evening to our surprise we looked out and saw the old chief with his caravan coming. He brought 20 baskets of manioc flour and a goat. He said, "Now for my nose there are two holes, but for my mouth there is only one, therefore I can't change the affair of my mouth."

Our hearts are filled with praise that the Gospel has found entrance into another of Africa's Christless tribes. Pray that we may be faithful. Yours in him, HATTIE C. SHELDON.

Riverside Institute

The attendance at Sunday services is holding up very well. From the records of the Sunday school we have copied the following: Attendance today, 87; one year ago, 72. This is the Thanksgiving vacation Sunday, when the pupils are gone. Last Sunday 126, one year ago 95.

The enamel and brushes are now on hand for the enameling of the chapel, where our Sunday services are held. We believe that this will add much to the worship on Sundays.

The teachers here are now keeping two other places of worship going. Brother and Sister McDonald go to Clayhole each Sunday afternoon, the Misses Hooks and Hall, with some students, go to Haddix at the same time. Clayhole is about 6 miles out. The horses must be used on this trip.

Haddix is the little growing village near our depot, two miles away. Miss Hooks and Miss Hall had been working in the Senior Christian Endeavor, but felt the call for this service, and are walking the four miles each Sunday afternoon.

We now have three Christian Endeavor societies going on Sunday afternoon: Senior, under the care of Miss Austin; Intermediate under the care of Mrs. Drushal; Junior under the care of Miss Hadden, and Miss Barnett having charge of the walk after Christian Endeavor. Thus the day is quite full. Our ideal is to make the morning services just as helpful as possible, and then in the afternoon go out just as much as we can to other points.

The attendance today was very good here, the chapel room being about full, and with good interest in the services.

The room for manual training is now fitted up, and we expect to begin that work very soon. This has been made possible by a number of gifts; Mrs. Homer Ball of Royal Center, Indiana, sending her tithe money from her rooming house at Winona Lake for the same. This work had not been taught for some years, and all are so thankful that it can be taken up again. All the boys want it, but our room is limited to only a few of them.

A Kentucky Missionary Among the Churches

Dear Ones of the Evangelist Family:

I have been shamefully lax about telling you of my visit among the churches in the interest of the Brethren work in the mountains of Kentucky. I hope you will forgive me.

The workers in Kentucky have been praying for some time that some one thoroughly acquainted with the work, might have the opportunity of visiting the brotherhood and giving first-hand information about the work it is supporting at Lost Creek and Krypton. After the Kentucky Committee visited the field last May, they asked me to go out among the churches that I could visit before time for National Conference and tell them the story.

I expected to start June 1st, but was delayed at Krypton by the flood of May 30th and could not start until the 9th. Between that day and August 22, I visited thirty Brethren churches (and two others) and spoke forty-eight times, on the mountain work and some Bible subjects. From the Miss Omeda Hadden and Miss Dove Barnett spent Thanksgiving vacation with Miss Hadden's sister at Krypton. Miss Thetis Hadden is helping the Kinzies in the work there.

There has been a pretty good response to the request for clothing. But the supply has not met the demand so far. We are trying to write to everyone who sent in the clothing and other articles, but sometimes we find a bag with no marks on it to tell us where it is from. Already we have received some such packages. Of course we cannot acknowledge the receipt of these. We wish so much that every package could be marked, so that we could know where it is from.

We have thus far had a very mild fall. There has been no snow yet, only a couple flurries. We usually have quite a good deal of snow ere this time. The signs in this section point to a warm winter.

The scriptural basis for the sermon today was James 5:14, 15. Theme, "Can God Heal the Body Today?" Some questions were first raised: Which is easier, to move things in the spiritual or the physical? Which is the easier, to open the blind eyes or the blind soul? Which is the easier, to heal the withered hand or to heal and change the sin-cursed, sin-blackened stubborn soul? Answer, Matthew 9:5ff, and John 14:12. The material is the easiest in which to work. It was also agreed that we are still in the days of the supernatural, that our God is still doing things beyond the reach of the rational, because he is God. Then can our God heal the body today? Are there any scriptural limitations for it? Is James 5th chapter valid scripture? Will God heal every time we ask him? Not always as we expect. Who should command our God? It is ours to obey, and trust. He may heal us directly, or he may take some other way or time, but do it he will, if we believe. Practice this scripture, believe it all, and God will work. Pray for us that we may just be empty vessels for his filling according to his will.

G. E. DRUSHAL.

free-will offerings received, I paid all of my traveling expenses and sent Brother Gearhart a little over 200 dollars for flood relief.

At National Conference, the Home Mission Board asked me to continue the itinerating work throughout the entire brotherhood, which I consented to do, after prayerful consideration. After Conference I went to Lost Creek and stayed until the new Bible teacher, Brother Grant McDonald, and his wife could come. I spent Sunday, September 18 with the Kinzies at Krypton and then again launched out on this educational program. I visited most of the churches near Dayton and then attended the Ohio Conference at Canton.

I spoke in the Ashland church December 2, which was the fifteenth church I have visited. Including my address at the Ohio conference and my different talks here in the college, I shall have spoken thirty-seven times by the time I leave Ashland on December 17th. My illness has hindered me about five weeks; but it was in the foreknowledge of God and comes under Romans 8:28.

I want to thank the pastors for their kindness and cooperation, and the Brethren people whom I have had the privilege of addressing, for their real interest in our mountain work, for their sincere thanks for the information I gave, and for their earnest assurance of more definite and better support for the work. I also thank all of you dear sisters who were so kind and cordial in your hospitality, and made my stay in your homes a real pleasure and blessing. God will reward you for it some day in answer to my prayers.

After much prayer I have decided to follow the advice of my physician, and of friends who are familiar with winter weather and roads in the East, and go to the Pacific Coast for itinerating work during the winter months. Then I will come back and continue the work in the central states during the spring and summer (D. V.).

I appreciate very much the prayers of all who have remembered me in my recent illness and have sustained me by their prayers while I have been out in his service. Please continue to pray that I may have a living message whether I speak from God's word or of his work.

I leave Ashland the 18th and my next address will be with friends at 431 Highland Street, Grand Rapids, Michigan. I expect to arrive in Long Beach, California about the middle of January.

Yours in his faithfulness for his service,
GRACE P. SRACK.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Special Endowment News

May God Increase the Number of Willing Givers

I just received a letter from a sister of Hamlin, Kansas which we have not yet canvassed for Ashland Endowment, enclosed was a check for five hundred dollars with these words, "We do not know just when you will get here, and life being uncertain, thought we would send it at this time, as a Christmas present."

It occurs to me, that in making gifts at this season of gift making, why not remember the cause of him who gave all for our sakes, that we in him might possess all things. What a difference we find in givers and gifts—some seeking to get by with as little as they can do—others excusing themselves too often because they have no special interest and do not want to give—While others give gladly and freely and receive freely in return.

Another sister in Falls City, Nebraska, who knows and loves the Lord and his cause, recently sent the College a gift of one thousand dollars for the endowment. This is another place not yet canvassed. It is this kind of a spirit of loyalty, devotion and consecration that means a bigger and better Brethren church. If we want a bigger church, we must do bigger things. It is not a question, "Can I give?" the question is, "Do I want to give?" Why not at this season of the year join in with these and make Ashland College a worth while gift? This is the only institution the church has to train her future leadership. The Brethren church has a great future, if her people will give their best in service, life and money. Do not wait for the other fellow to start, let it begin with you.

Yours for a bigger and better Brethren church.

DALLAS CENTER, IOWA

One of the most enjoyable of all the meetings held since National Conference came to a close in Dallas Center on Sunday evening, November 27. It was a real joy to work with the good people of Dallas Center. Although I had met the pastor, Rev. A. D. Cashman, but once before, we had the very finest fellowship. Brother Cashman and his devoted wife are doing a fine piece of work. They have the confidence of the membership and there is a spirit of cooperation that is not always found. This church has the finest bunch of young people I have seen in many a day, young people who can be counted on for any task to which they are called.

I count the meeting a success. The pastor will report the results. It is my happy privilege to report that the Dallas Center people reached the high point in several ways. Not only was the attendance at the regular services fine, but the attendance at the afternoon Bible studies was bigger than at any other place so far in my work. If I remember correctly, the average for the afternoon meetings was around twenty-eight with the high mark in attendance standing at sixty-one. Then, too, these people gave me the finest offering, when the length of the meeting is considered, that I have received in this work. This fine gift was made in spite of the fact that they made a gift of one hundred and fourteen dollars to Home Missions, the largest gift in their history, on the first Sunday of the meeting. The number of League memberships also tops the list. The number of new memberships stands at an even twenty with others likely to come.

My home during the meeting was in the home of the pastor. It was a real home. Everything possible was done for my comfort. Both Brother and Sister Cashman are hungry for the Word and many a minute was taken from the busy hours to talk on the things of the Lord.

The pastor is giving the people the real meat of the word and the congregation is thriving on what they are receiving. The attendance at the mid-week service numbers from thirty-five to forty-five, a most excellent attendance for a church whose membership lives largely in the country. I shall be disappointed if the attendance does not go beyond the present mark so soon as the "corn picking" is out of the way.

I offer my sincere thanks to the Dallas

Center members for the very fine cooperation shown. This made success possible. I want to thank all those whose homes were opened to me and I want to thank, too, Brother Robinson for taking me to the train after the evening service and thus make possible my reaching Mansfield, Ohio, without the loss of a single day.

I am now in a meeting with Brother Barnard and his good people in Mansfield, Ohio. The meeting is starting off well. Pray for the success of the work here.

J. C. BEAL.

BRYAN, OHIO

Elder George Swihart of Roann, Indiana, accepted an invitation to come to Bryan, Ohio for a week of special services. He came to us on Monday evening and stayed until Saturday morning. Brother Swihart's messages were convincing and inspiring. The services without any previous announcement were well attended, and greatly appreciated. Surely it was a week of feasting on God's Word. We regret very much that our brother was not able to tarry longer as there was such a splendid interest taken in these meetings. Our brethren enjoyed Elder Swihart's visit here and hope that it may be possible for him to come to us for a longer stay some time in the future.

NEW LEBANON NEWS

Some time has elapsed since a report was sent into the Evangelist from this field. As we begin our third year with these people we can look back realizing that at least some of our goals have been carried out with success. Among these should especially be mentioned the Daily Vacation Bible School held during the last weeks of July at the Community High school building. The school board willingly loaned eight of their school trucks and the pupils were brought to the school. Five Sunday schools cooperated. The budget of $225, was equally divided among the five schools. Our record attendance was 285. Our own school furnished 12 teachers and helpers. The school not only proved a great blessing to the pupils but also to the teachers, giving them new suggestions for their own local schools. Miss Landis of the Church of the Brethren conducted the school.

During the new year we are making an effort to increase the number of tithers in the local church. Tithing literature has been secured from the Layman's Organization and 100 copies are being distributed the first Sunday of each month throughout the year. Taking advantage of the special offer of the Publication Board we are distributing free 50 copies of the Evangelist every Sunday for the three months. We trust this will help us in placing the Evangelist in every home in the near future.

Through the special efforts of Brother Hoover and the music committee of the church we are enjoying a real treat. A Mrs. McNeil, music teacher of Dayton, has been hired by the church to direct the choir and lead us in the congregational singing for the months of November and December. Her work thus far has been splendid and we have no doubt but that the church will see fit to have her continue her work throughout the year. Already our attendance at the evening service has increased and we believe it will continue to do so.

On the first Sunday of this month three new Christian Endeavor Societies were organized in place of the one. An adult, young peoples' and junior societies. The enthusiasm already shown lead us to believe this will mean much to the church. This too will be an added interest to increase our evening attendance.

At the time of this writing we are assisting Brother Deeter at West Alexandria in a two weeks' revival campaign, leading the congregational singing and he doing the preaching. We have worked together before in this same capacity and are enjoying the work as then.

Our own revival campaign will be held during the month of March with Brother Coleman as evangelist. Knowing Brother Coleman's ability as a Gospel preacher and the opportunities of this field we are looking forward with keen anticipation to a great spiritual feast together. Pray for this meeting, brethren.

The two years of work here have been busy and profitable years. The people have treated us kindly in every way. Several weeks ago one of the Sunday school classes surprised us with a splendid donation. As a result of their kindness we not only enjoyed a thankful Thanksgiving day but we will be able to have Thanksgiving day for some time to come. Thanks, again Brethren. Rev. Kinzie, the former pastor, and Rev. Hoover, who recently moved in a property beside the church, are giving every possible assistance. We should be ungrateful if we did not show our appreciation in this public way. It shows to me that resident elders can be of great help to the pastor when they cooperate rather than criticize.

L. V. KING.

NORTH MANCHESTER, INDIANA

The church at North Manchester, Indiana, is alive and busy, and thankful for the efficient leadership of the pastor, Rev. J. Raymond Schutz. All departments are moving along in the right direction. Our Sunday school has a very able superintendent, Mr. George Harshman, who is ever alert for the advancement of the school. The Sunday before Thanksgiving we had a record breaking day and one long to be thankful for. It was in the nature of a homecoming day and thanksgiving combined. At the morning service, the graduation services were held for a class of five who had completed the three year's course of Teacher training work as outlined by the National Sunday School Association. The address was given by the pastor and diplomas were presented by him, also we had some special music appropriate to the occasion. Then followed a social hour in the basement where the contents of well filled baskets were greatly appreciated by all. The afternoon was given to a special Thanksgiving service, and an address by the pastor. In the evening was a wonderful love feast and the tables were surrounded by seventy per cent of the membership and a fine spirit prevailed throughout.

The church expects to begin a special evangelistic campaign here on January 15th. Pray that a real spirit of service may be given and that many souls may be born into the kingdom.

MRS. J. L. WARVEL,
Corresponding Secretary.

REPORT OF DALLAS CENTER DOINGS

Because we neglected to send in the news of our work here three months ago, and since the more recent events loom up greater, many things will necessarily be omitted in this report. Suffice it to say, we are enjoying our work in this part of the Lord's vineyard immensely. Those who have been in Dallas Center understand the reason in part. I refer to the fine group of people who make up the church here. They are loyal, faithful, appreciative, responsive and for the most part consecrated. You expected me to say hospitable and generous, I am sure, but such traits deserve special emphasis. You remember our mentioning how generous the Fairhaven people were, don't you? Well, there are twice as many of that kind of folks here, the membership being greater. They have discovered that their pastor likes chicken and they have tried every means to appease his appetite, but that is a difficult task.

The outstanding reason for the joy we have experienced in our work here is the fact of learning to rightly divide the Word of Truth. Some surprising truths have been revealed by associating with, and reading after, the Fundamentalists school of theology. We are just beginning to realize that it means more than just saying "the Bible, the whole Bible and nothing but the Bible." I for one am glad for Dr. White's suggestion that all Scripture is "for us" but it is not all "to us", and I am confident that others than myself have been guilty of taking a text out of its context and making out of it a pretext."

The church was greatly benefited, and the pastor's testimony strengthened, by the teaching of Dr. J. C. Beal in a short Bible conference from November 17 to 27. We consider ourselves fortunate indeed to have had the privilege of having Dr. Beal with us and he is welcome to come back any time. His afternoon studies and evening lectures were instructional, illuminating, inspirational and wholly scriptural. While the campaign was not meant to be evangelistic in nature, the Holy Spirit honored his Word to the extent that ten people accepted Christ as their Savior. Nine of these have signified their desire to unite with our church and one man signified his desire to go with the Church of the Brethren. In addition to this, carnal Christians were urged to get back into fellowship and be disciples as well as believers. A finer spirit, than was manifested in all the meetings, is seldom witnessed.

Concerning the general work of the church many favorable comments have been, and could be, made. Since we take no credit to ourselves, we might make a few observations. Previous to Dr. Beal's meetings eight souls were received into the church by baptism and three by letter. In all, twenty will have been received into the church before this is published.

The Sunday school has made fine progress. There were 110 on the roll when we arrived on the field, February 20th, and with the exception of one Sunday during vacation when only 65 were present, the average attendance has been 105. During the last twelve weeks with 127 on the roll, the average attendance has been 118.

Since we have a sermon for the Juniors in the morning worship hour, very few are lost to the church services upon dismissal from the Sunday school. Our evening audiences average around 70 souls.

We are maintaining two Endeavor societies with an average of 25 young people attending the Senior society and 15 attending the Junior society. The last Sunday nearly 50 young people and children were gathered in the two groups which speaks well for the future of the church.

The missionary societies make their reports in the Woman's Outlook from time to time. They are both very active and doing good work. We are happy to state the fact that benefit suppers and pastry sales are no longer necessary to meet the finances of the W. M. S. The Sisterhood girls were enabled to swell their treasury by selling Christmas cards and novelties.

The prayer meetings have been exceptionally well attended for a church of this size with an average attendance of no less than 35. Recently, however, a change has been made by having a half hour for devotions and prayer in the basement from 7 to 7:30 o'clock and a course in "Major Bible Themes", edited by Lewis Sperry Chafer, in the auditorium from 7:30 to 8:30. This procedure is proving to be a rich blessing to about 40 members and a real knowledge of the Word is being attained. Twenty-six books have been purchased, giving all interested a chance to study and enter into the discussions.

As for the offerings, the various reports as printed represent real progress. More than $700.00 have been raised, and paid out over and above local expenses since March 1. Considering repairs on the parsonage, the purchase of new Hymnals and the addition of a hot air furnace in the church (supplementing the present steam system) generous giving is evident. As the number of those who entertain the blessed hope increases, we may expect the work to abound more and more.

A. D. CASHMAN, Pastor.

ROANOKE, VIRGINIA

It was August 14th last, an unforgettable day for the writer and his wife, for this was the day that we had the painful experience of bidding adieu to a group of the finest people in the world. Five joyous years we spent with the dear people of Pittsburgh church. They were so sympathetic and lenient with our mistakes, which were many, so generous in their praise for our achievements which were few. Now you understand why it was so hard to pull away. We shall never forget the kindness, cooperation and generosity of these good people. May God richly bless the Pittsburgh church in all their undertakings. We left against their will but when they saw that we were determined to go because of the sense of duty, they gave their consent, sending us away with best wishes for success in our new field of labor. We express our sincere thanks for the unstinted kindness shown to us by the Pittsburgh people. We hope that it may be our privilege to serve them again.

From Pittsburgh to Roanoke

It was our good fortune to motor through to Roanoke with S. N. Wilcox, Mrs. S. N. Wilcox and their daughter, Betty. After riding twenty-three hundred miles, we are convinced that S. N. Wilcox is one of the finest automobile drivers it has been our privilege to ride with. Our trip took us through Ohio, Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina and Virginia, stopping a week at Virginia Beach, along the great Atlantic Ocean. Words fail us when we try to express our appreciation of this most interesting and pleasant trip; the choicest company and the finest trip that we ever enjoyed. Thanks to S. N. Wilcox and family for this unusual treat.

At Roanoke

A beautiful little city with plenty of opportunity to work. We are trying to ascertain the need of this field and to determine the best way to handle the job. We are already convinced that we have a great task ahead of us. The work here has been hurt through the loss of a great number of substantial members, most of whom have gone to the Second Church of the Brethren. This is very discouraging indeed. However, we find here a group who are determined to build up the work. This is the hopeful feature for we know that God can take a little group and accomplish great things.

We had a demonstration a few nights ago when a large crowd of the members gathered at the parsonage and burdened the kitchen table with a huge donation of good things to eat. We thank these good people for this fine expression of generosity.

Garden City Meeting

The Garden City Brethren church is about five miles from Roanoke. Therefore we could drive out and return home each night. We preached two weeks at Garden City, except Sundays, for we felt that the Roanoke work must not be neglected. There were some who said you are wasting time. Suffice it to say, God honored his work. There were forty decisions for Christ. I wish that I could waste more time—if this is wasting time. Fifteen of these converts have received Christian baptism. There will be others. A fine purse was given to the writer for his labor at Garden City. Brother George Donahoe is the pastor at Garden City. May God richly bless these good people.

Mountain View Church

This church is located near Hollins, Virginia. Brother John Patterson is the pastor of this church; a mighty fine man and loved and respected by all the people of the community. The meeting at this church was a ten-day campaign, reserving Sundays for our work at Roanoke. The proximity of this church to Roanoke made it possible for us to return home after the services every night. Again the folks who belong to the class of the "Ten Spies" emphasized the negative aspect. There were great crowds, great results. Immediate results—thirty-six received by baptism and four by letter. The church practically doubled in membership. Brother Patterson says it was the greatest meeting in the history of the church. Praise God for the victory. We give him the praise. Thanks for the fine dinners and splendid purse given to us by the Mountain View church. God bless Brother Patterson and his faithful people.

Jimmy Evans was the song leader in both of these campaigns. Jimmy is a fine Christian man and a capable song leader. It was a real pleasure to work with him. Much credit is due Jimmy.

We ask an interest in the prayers of the brotherhood for the work at Roanoke.

Sister M. O. Nininger, who suffered a stroke of paralysis early in the summer, is still confined to her bed. She has no use of her left side. However, her mind is bright and we are having some fine visits with her. Sister Nininger is greatly missed in the work at the Roanoke church. She and her husband have been very active workers here for many years. They love the church and their loyalty means much to all.

Sister Nininger asked me to express, through the Evangelist her sincere appreciation to the many friends who have written her letters of sympathy and best wishes for her recovery. Especially does she thank Brother S. E. Christiansen who is observing stated season in which he is praying for the recovery of Sister Nininger.

A. L. LYNN.

THE BIBLE'S SOLE REMEDY FOR SIN

The only remedy for sin that the Bible declares, and hence that the Church knows, is the Son of God, who was sent into the world at a definite point of time in its history, by the Father, in the likeness of sinful flesh and for sin; who was tempted in all points like as we are, yet without sin; who offered himself without spot to God as an atonement for the sin of the world in one sacrifice forever; who was raised from the dead by the glory of the Father and is now alive forever more at his right hand in heaven; and who communicates the power of his own endless life to all those who, in response to his claim, yield to him the government and guidance of their being, and thus "saves to the uttermost them that come unto God by him." This is a brief conspectus of the essential outline of the Christian gospel which is our entrustment, that God in Christ has done something adequate to reconcile the revolvers against his will to that against which they have revolted, to redeem them from the consequences to themselves of their alienation, and to re-create their lives around a new center under the imperative of a new and constant motive.—J. Stuart Holden, in The Biblical Review.

OAK HILL, WEST VIRGINIA

"The Switzerland of America"

A longer time than usual has elapsed since a report was sent in from here but as these times are the exception rather than the rule, perhaps this occasion will be overlooked. It is not that there has been a lack of events to report, but that in the busy rush the matter has been postponed.

The folks here gave us three weeks this summer that were spent in touring the South, visiting Florida and coming back through the Mississippi states. A stop over of several days was made in Sebring, Florida where it was my pleasure to visit Elder J. H. Moore of the Church of the Brethren, who has reached his four score but continues to write as he has done for years. I learned many things from him but especially that one of the pioneers of the Dunkard faith, Elder George Wolf, graces the seal of the State of Illinois. He is represented in the act of shaking hands with another person. Thus every time the seal is used the image of a Dunkard preacher is left upon the paper. We crossed the Mississippi at Memphis and stopped at Blytheville, Arkansas, where Mrs. Ankrum had the misfortune to very painfully scald herself. This meant the curtailing of our vacation so we came on through Missouri into Illinois and back to West Virginia. This was a splendid historical trip of 3,800 miles.

When we arrived home plans were made for General Conference. There were fifteen people there from here, which speaks well for the continued interest, especially when there were two families there with three each.

Since the last report from here two names have been added to the membership roll. There are others in prospect. The general attendance for the regular services and prayer meeting is encouraging. New people are becoming interested and the general out-look is good, not that the ideal has been reached but progress is being made. The attendance for Sunday school and preaching dropped off this summer at Salem but is coming back to normal at the present time.

We as a church were made conscious of the efficacy of prayer a few weeks ago when an accident happened to our Sunday School Superintendent, Brother J. A. McKinney. Some of the readers of the Evangelist will remember him as having been at Winona this fall with his wife and daughter. The Men's Bible class was just starting from the church at the close of a morning service for a little social and inspirational meeting with a picnic dinner, when he was thrown from the back of the truck in which he was standing to the street, and received a compound fracture at the base of the skull. He was rendered unconscious for a few minutes with severe hemorrhages through the ear. Two physicians were immediately called, he was taken to his home and then to the Oak Hill Hospital. Those in attendance would give practically no hope for his recovery, but the church as it did of old when Peter was in trouble, resorted to prayer and in three days the crises was passed, and in two weeks he left the hospital and went home. The X-ray showed a fracture larger than usually met with. The surgeons refer to his experience as a remarkable case. The Lord answered prayer and he was restored to his work which was as yet unfinished in the church. Just four weeks from the day of the accident he was back in his accustomed place in the Sunday school.

Thanksgiving night a social and business meeting was held in the basement of the parsonage, when important steps were taken toward the new building. The work of the plan committee being completed a building committee was elected, composed of the following, Dr. H. A. Duncan Chairman, George Simpson, Lyman Pegram, J. A. McKinney, Lawrence Smith, Miss Lydia Hutchison and Mrs. J. F. Claypool. The Finance committee is composed of J. A. Duncan chairman, C. B. Wright, Marion Johnson, Mrs. George Simpson and Mrs. J. A. Duncan. The plans of the building were reconstructed and drawn by George Simpson and Lyman Pegram. We have a splendid building in prospect and details will be given later. Bids are expected to be in by the January business meeting and the contract will likely be let soon afterwards. It is hoped to start the construction work when the weather opens up in the spring, in order that the building may be finished by fall. Subscriptions were received for the first time Thanksgiving night with a representative number of the members present and practically one-third of the goal set was subscribed. The sacrifices these people were willing to make that the new and much needed building might be secured certainly would cause a pastor to be proud of them. We also have the highest and fullest confidence of the city at large which will mean a very substantial help along financial lines toward the construction of the new building. Conditions are now subnormal in the coal fields but this is usually temporary and so the construction of the building will likely go forward as planned in the spring. We have a very high standing here as a church which is indeed complimentary to us as a Whole Gospel church. With the construction of the new building and adequate equipment for Sunday school and church services the future is very bright, in fact the parting of the ways has been reached when we must either build or stop growing, and the people here are not of the latter type.

The Lord has blessed the work in this section of his vineyard, but the opposition of the Adversary is manifest on every hand in these beautiful mountains. We feel that the progress that has been made here has been due in part to complete unity and working together in the fullest harmony. In fact it is difficult to realize that nearly one-third of our fifth year here as pastor has gone. We rejoice with the progress that is being made over the brotherhood not only along Spiritual lines but along the line of better buildings. We ask an interest in the prayers of the faithful that the great tasks in prospect there might be speedily and happily completed in his name.

FREEMAN ANKRUM, Pastor.

THE EDUCATIONAL OFFERING

With all the other special offerings claiming the attention of our people, I fear that I am now making my final report on the 1927 offering, though I hope that I am mistaken in the matter, because if I have foundation for my fears, it means that I shall be reporting the smallest offering of this kind that we have yet received. The chief reason for this lies in the fact that only 73 congregations have reported any offering at all, which is not as it ought to be, to say the least. When I last reported, I had received a total of $1,334.17.

Since that time, September 18, gifts have been received as follows:—

Morrill, Kansas,	$ 15.85
Tiosa, Indiana,	6.95
Fremont, Ohio,	7.43
Smithville-Sterling,	7.75
A total of	$1,372.15

Following, the reader will find the list of contributing congregations, which will set at rest any question as to whether your church has done its duty in the matter. Here is the list of congregations which have responded to the wish of the General Conference: Ashland, Ardmore, Bryan, Buckeye City, Beaver City, Brush Valley, College Corner, Carleton (Neb.), Campbell, Calvary, Conemaugh, Clay City, Clayton, Canton, Denver, Dallas Center, Elkhart, Ft. Scott, Flora, Fairhaven, Fostoria, Fairview (Ohio), Falls City, Fremont, Garwin, Gretna, Gatewood (W. Va.), Gratis, Harrisonburg (Va.), Hamlin, Homerville, Highland (Pa.), Hagerstown, Jones Mills, Johnstown (2nd), Johnstown (3rd), Leon, Louisville, LaVerne, Lathrop, Middlebranch, Mt. Zion, Mulvane, Mexico, Milledgeville, Miamisburg, Myersdale, Masontown, Mt. Pleasant, Martinsburg, Maple Grove (Ind.), Morrill, New Lebanon, New Enterprise (Ind.), Nappanee, New Enterprise (Pa.), Oak Hill, Oakville, Portis, Pittsburgh, Pleasant Grove (Iowa), Pleasant Hill, Raystown, Roanoke (Ind.), Sidney, Sergeantsville, St. Luke, Smithville-Sterling, Tiosa, Vandergrift, Waterloo, Williamstown, and W. Alexandria.

It is not too late to make corrections in the matter of sending in offerings.

MARTIN SHIVELY,
Bursar Ashland College.

CONFERENCE MINUTES

As announced last week the copies of the minutes of General Conference have been mailed to the churches. We hope the pastors will dispose of the few that have been sent them quickly and send in the amount they receive for them so this item may be closed up promptly and not drag along through the year to our inconvenience.

As announced last week, should any one be missed, we still have a few copies on hand with which to supply their needs. So do not hesitate to call on us, as we are at your service; but we would beg of all pastors to feel personally responsible to the Conference for the copies that were sent them.

The Brethren Evangelist

Only a few more weeks and the three months during which we have been sending hundreds of copies of the Evangelist to a number of our churches will have expired. What is to be the result? The object was to get more Brethren acquainted with their church paper, and to induce them to become regular readers, if at all possible.

This week we aim to mail subscription blanks to all to whom these papers have been sent, and we trust that every pastor may feel his obligation to do all that he can reasonably be expected to do to persuade his members to subscribe for the paper.

Why can not we have FIVE HUNDRED new subscriptions to the Evangelist with which to start 1928? There are some churches that were formerly on the Honor Roll that in some manner lost their place. Can not they win that place back again? Other churches have never been on the Evangelist Honor Roll. We would like to welcome a number on the Roll by the New Year. Remember the conditions—the paper going into every Brethren family in good standing with the congregation and paid for out of the regular budget, or the paper going into seventy-five per cent of the homes of the congregation through personal canvass, or 100 subscriptions from one congregation.

Any one of the three methods wins a place on the Honor Roll and gives the special rate of $1.50 per year.

Brethren, What can you do for your paper before the close of the year?

R. R. TEETER,
Business Manager.

God never empties except to fill. He never makes poor except to enrich. He never humbles except to exalt.—Exchange.

ANNOUNCEMENTS

NOTICE

Over this week end the National Sunday School Association is sending out to Brethren pastors and Sunday school superintendents from coast to coast White Gift envelopes which, it is hoped, will aid our people in gathering in the coming White Gift offering effectively. Pastors who have more than one church in their charge will do well to divide the number of envelopes they receive among the respective churches to which they minister. If any pastor feels that he has not received enough envelopes to meet the needs of his congregation, he may send for more by writing me at Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio. Also, it is of importance that you send your offering to Professor M. P. Puterbaugh, our treasurer, at Ashland, Ohio at your earliest convenience.

The Wonderful Babe of Bethlehem

Nothing in the world is so fascinating as a little babe. It grips the interest and captures the imagination. It is the center of the home, the joy of the parents, the admiration of friends and the hope and speculation of the community. But no babe has been the subject of so much interest as the Babe of Bethlehem. He is the center of the thoughts of the civilized world, and is rapidly becoming the object of contemplation by all mankind. This is not only so at the Christmas season, but in a large way throughout the year. And each recurring Christmas serves to intensify the universal interest in him and to strengthen the power of his influence over men. We never tire of retelling the story. With unabated enthusiasm we are repeating again that charming story of the birth of the Christ-child in a humble stable of Bethlehem and wrapped in swaddling clothes by his virgin mother and laid in a manger; of the appearance of the angels to the shepherds and the latter's hurried trip to see that which had come to pass, of the coming of the wise men and their bringing of gifts to place at the feet of him who was "born King of the Jews", and all the other incidents connected with this, the most wonderful event in the world's history. Why is it that there is no waning of interest? Why does the story of the Babe of Bethlehem continue so vivid and vital in our minds?

There are several reasons, but first, it is because he was no ordinary Babe, but rather an extraordinary one; he was unique; he was wonderful; the earth never saw his like before, nor has it since. His coming was foretold and was looked forward to with great expectancy. Isaiah saw him with prophetic ken and said he should be called "Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace." He was a "Shoot out of the stock of Jesse", the Messiah on whom the Spirit of Jehovah rested. Yea, he was the Son come to reveal the Father, God incarnate. It is not, therefore, to be thought strange that the world should have been so stirred at his birth and should continue to be so moved at the contemplation of that event when we consider who he is.

Toward the end of Napoleon's reign all France was moved at the birth of one who might well have been called "The Desire" of the nation. It had been announced that if the infant should be a princess twenty-one guns would be fired, but if a prince, one hundred. At the first report the whole population of Paris awakened and the discharges were eagerly counted, till, when the twenty-first gun had gone off, the anxiety of the people became almost unbearable. The gunners delayed an instant and a hundred thousand persons held their breath; but when the twenty-second was fired, the whole city was full of joy. The news was carried to distant cities by balloons, and soon the whole nation was rejoicing. But how short-lived was that rejoicing! It was not long until the haughty emperor was banished to a lonely island and the child was carried to an early grave. But this Child who was born in Bethlehem was without beginning of days or end of life.

Another reason why the Babe of Bethlehem continues after two thousand years to occupy the center of the world's affections is because of what he came to do, and his mission was indicated by the name he was given. "Thou shalt call his name Jesus, for he shall save his people from their sins", was heaven's instruction. He was to be the Savior of the world. His birth, therefore, was of the most vital interest to all mankind, and the knowledge of it has through all the centuries since inspired hope in all believing hearts. The very mention of the name of Jesus gives consolation to the distressed soul and rekindles hope in the heart of the lost, so fully and satisfactorily did he accomplish the mission which the angel ascribed to him. He intensified and enriched the significance of his name. He made it distinctively his own; he freighted it heavily with meaning; he made it a synonym for his saving work. As Abraham's name signifies faith, Stephen's martyrdom and John's love, so does Jesus' mean salvation. How blessed a name it is! How full of power! A brave cavalry officer, dying of his wounds, thought himself on the field of battle at the head of his gallant men, and that an enemy's gun was in front of them ready to be fired. He was greatly distressed. At the mention of the name of Jesus his agitation ceased and his delirium passed away; a smile lit up his pale face and he said in a low tone, "Jesus, Jesus! It is he who said: 'Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest.' I want rest; I am weary." The name of Jesus saved him from delirium and he was restful and happy until the spirit took its flight to God. Thank God, Jesus came to save men from their sins, and is fully able to save "to the uttermost", able to save us from both the penalty and the power of sin, able to keep us from committing sin, able to cleanse us from all unrighteousness and to keep us clean. To that end was he born—that he might die and rise again, and thereby become the Savior of the world.

Again the Babe of Bethlehem enjoys the love and devotion of great hosts of mankind because of what he came to be, that is, by virtue of his royal lineage as seed of the house of David. The wise men spoke correctly of his official position when they inquired, "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" The Gospel of Matthew is the record of Jesus as King. Its key word is "kingdom" and is used fifty times. Its key phrase, "kingdom of heaven" is found thirty-two times and nowhere else in the New Testament. Matthew is concerned about proving to the Jews that Jesus is their King, and so gives his legal genealogy, tracing him back to David, the source of Jewish rule. He was born to be King, but not to take Herod's throne. He was to be no petty king, but was to fulfill the larger, more spiritual Jewish expectation—he was to be King of kings and Lord of lords. And this King who was revealed through the Jews was to have a kingdom that was to be world-wide. Isaiah revealed that the house of Jesse was like a tree hewn to the ground, from which a Branch would spring forth bearing fruit and overshadowing the earth. It was to encompass all nations and to include all men. And in its realization it was to be spiritual, having its sway over the hearts of people, as the highest Messianic prophecies reveal. And the Lord Jesus himself confirmed that view by declaring that his kingdom was "not of this world." And his kingship is not merely a destiny to be achieved, but a present rule to be exercised. It was launched with the Christian dispensation but is not completely accomplished. And so we pray "Thy kingdom come, thy will be done", and we look forward to a time when God shall be universally recognized, when love shall have gained the victory over all forms of division and hate, when righteousness shall cover the earth as the waters cover the sea, and when Jesus shall indeed be King of kings and Lord of lords—the ideal King ruling over his completed kingdom. This is the promise that stimulates devotion to the wonderful Babe of Bethlehem.

The Week of Prayer

Some of our pastors are already planning to observe the Universal Week of Prayer, January 1 to 7. A special program has been prepared as a guide and to make possible a world-wide united prayer upon certain fundamental things and with the thought that the impact of the prayers of God's people will be greater when they agree together concerning certain things. This program may be had by writing the Federal Council of Churches, 105 East Twenty-second Street, New York. It is worth your while to get a copy even though you do not follow its suggestions. They may help you in planning a program that may more adequately meet the needs of your situation. Some will find it to their advantage to make the Week of Prayer fit in more definitely with their local program. For example, in one locality the Week of Prayer will be observed, but the objectives of prayer will be such as shall definitely prepare the people for a great simultaneous evangelistic campaign. In one church the entire body of praying people will be called together to pray along certain lines looking to an outpouring of a spirit of consecration and a passion for souls. In another the various nights will be assigned to different Adult Bible classes to gather together for prayer and to plan for well directed effort to win the unchurched members of the class and others of the community of similar age and interest who belong to no Sunday school class. In another church the pastor is planning to use the week for instructing a picked group of Christian workers in personal evangelism and in prayer preparatory to definite work in an approaching campaign. And in still other churches the program of prayer as outlined is found to be suitable and full of promise because of its balance and breadth of reach. Whatever your personal inclination or local situation, you will find the week of prayer full of possibilities for the advancement of the Kingdom.

EDITORIAL REVIEW

Brother E. M. Davidson says the mission Sunday schools at Manuel and Napfor, Kentucky, continue to receive the interested support of their communities.

Christian Endeavorers should not fail to read the message on their page this week by the Stewardship Superintendent, Brother Orville D. Ullom.

The revival at West Alexandria, Ohio, with the pastor, Brother W. R. Deeter, doing the preaching and Brother L. V. King leading the singing, closed on December 12, with "seven baptized and six on the waiting list."

Cheerfulness in giving is very necessary, but if you have never given anything, don't expect to be bubbling over with the giving spirit until you have practiced giving for a while and have come to know the thrill and joy of it.

Don't fail to read what the Business Manager has to say this week in his "Corner", and we hope the pastors of churches not on the Honor Roll will do their utmost to increase the number of subscriptions to THE EVANGELIST for your sake as for ours.

The good Brethren at Uniontown, Pennsylvania, are launching out upon their new church building campaign under the leadership of Brother E. F. Byers, their pastor. A permanent foundation is to be built at this time on which a temporary structure is to be erected for present needs.

We have an interesting Christmas message in this issue for "Our Little Readers" written by Mrs. Merle Hunter. We hope to have a message quite regularly for them, though usually it will be a selected story. You will find the Junior Lesson story in the ANGELUS from now on, as stated in our note on Christian Endeavor page.

Dr. F. N. Gribble tells of her experiences en route to Africa, some of which were rather severe and trying. She writes from the Belgian Congo from which she soon begins the last lap of her journey to Yaloke. Sister Gribble's implicit trust in God under all circumstances is an inspiration.

Our correspondent from Falls City, Nebraska, writes an interesting installment of news. The work in all its departments is making commendable progress under the efficient leadership of Brother and Sister H. H. Rowsey. And they seem to have the hearty cooperation of the local leadership, which is an important factor in successful church work.

From Brighton church in Indiana we learn that Brother J. W. Brower, the pastor, is still leading forward and our correspondent points to several events which indicate a sustained interest on the part of the people, among which were the splendidly attended Rally Day program, the W. M. S. activities and the spiritual communion service.

Plans are well under way for the 1928 Ashland College annual, called "Pine Whispers" and it is to be of more than ordinary interest because of its being made a "Golden Jubilee" number in honor of the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of the college. In addition to the regular features it is to contain some historical data which will add greatly to its value. Read the announcement in this issue.

Brother F. C. Vanator, the efficient pastor of the church at Canton, Ohio, writes of splendid attendance and it is splendid when the Sunday school is not allowed to get down to the 200 mark. During the recent campaign with Brother W. C. Benshoff as evangelist eighteen souls were added to the church roll, and the spiritual quickening of the membership was also an outstanding result.

We learn of a successful evangelistic campaign in the church at Columbus, Ohio, where Brother R. E. Gottschal is the energetic pastor. Brother George E. Swihart was the effective evangelist for two weeks and for the third week the pastor continued the preaching. Seventeen souls were converted and added to the church. This is most encouraging news from our Columbus mission church.

Dr. Charles A. Bame gives more "Travel Flashes" as a result of his trip to Winchester, Virginia, where he and the pastor, Brother Rohart, conducted a hard fought evangelistic campaign. This is one of our youngest churches, but it is making splendid advancement and the prospect is said to be very bright. The pastor has made a large place for himself in the hearts of the people of the church and community. Brother Bame was handicapped during one week by the absence of the pastor due to sickness, but a splendid work was done and, if we have been informed correctly, about thirteen in all made confession.

Dr. W. S. Bell reports his canvass of the Louisville, Ohio, congregation in the interest of College Endowment, and we are glad to note that there is no need to be ashamed of the result. Brother R. F. Porte, the pastor, is a most loyal friend of the college, as every graduate is; that fact together with the numerous other sources of attachment, some of which are referred to by Dr. Bell, make one expect just such a fine loyalty as was manifested by these people. And what they did, they did in the face of a very urgent need of enlargement of local equipment, which we hope they will press on to secure. Their gift of $2,401.00 makes the total $130,927.54.

OUR SLOGAN

A White Gift from Every Sunday School in the Brotherhood to the National Sunday School Association. Is what we suggested last week. It is not too late to encourage the giving spirit rather than the getting spirit and to give opportunity to every man, woman and child of the school for the practice of that spirit. No one is so poor that he should be denied the privilege of making such gift as his meagre ability may make possible to the honor of the King of kings, and no person of wealth and consecration will want to miss the opportunity, and those without consecration should be made to face their moral and spiritual duty in the matter. It is the leaders' duty to present the matter and make the appeal.

GENERAL ARTICLES

The Gift of Peace .

By Prof. J. Fred Andrew

In the life of every individual, that day which represents the anniversary of his birth is a day set apart from all other days of the year. Parents who are careful to develop the interests of their child plan to make his birthday a day of more than usual significance to him. Gifts are presented, surprise parties are arranged, a dinner with a big candle-lit cake is served, he is put under the bed, and he is spanked once for each year that he has lived and given "one to grow on." Every one of his acquaintance takes interest in the exercises that attend the celebration. But whether or not others contribute to the special features of the day, there is an innate longing in the heart of the child to be grown-up. Each birthday finds him a step nearer that goal. And so, year after year, during the formative period of his life, he develops the attitude of mind in which the importance of his birthday as well as the importance of the birthdays of others, is magnified above that of other days.

The birthday of an individual is commemorated in proportion to his influence and services have contributed to the lives of others. In the calendars of almost every nation, the birthdays of its greatest benefactors are proclaimed as holidays for national observance. England observes Empire Day on the anniversary of the birth of Queen Victoria. America has established the custom of keeping the birthdays of Washington and Lincoln as holidays. Other nations honor their illustrious citizens in like manner. But when we search the calendars of all nations of the earth to learn to whom the most widespread honor is given by special birthday remembrance, there is none to compare with Jesus of Nazareth, who is the Christ. Wherever his disciples have carried his word in obedience to his behest, Christmas is a day of special significance.

Many and various are the customs and traditions that different peoples have formed in commemoration of the birth of Jesus. But however different the Christmas exercises may be, a common note of joy sounds throughout the symphony of praise carried in melodious harmony to the throne of the Father to glorify the name of his adored Son. Wherein does the power of Christ's personality lie, that all nations are drawn unto him?

When a single personality appeals alike to men of different races, of different forms of government, of different methods of thought, that personality possesses one or the other of two things, namely, versatility or an avenue of contact that leads to the heart of all humanity. Certainly we cannot explain Christ's influence upon the nations of the world on the basis of versatility. For he is unchangeable, "Jesus Christ, the same yesterday, today, and forever." We must look, then, for that feature of his teachings by which he gains access to the heart of all nations.

There is no condition more generally desired among the peoples of the world than that of peace. Peace as an ideal was conceived in the heart of man even in his creation, for with his first transgression of God's word came the consciousness that peace of mind had been violated. Conflict entered his soul to lead him into controversy and open hostility with his fellowmen. In defense of his very life's blood and of those dear to him, he was compelled to take up the weapons of warfare and destruction. Despair took hold upon him, and in his misery he felt the stirring of the Peace-child in his bosom. The hope that out of his suffering might be born a beautiful, strong man-child took hold upon him, and he looked forward with intense longing to the day of birth of the Prince of Peace. For the Creator had heard his anguished cry and in compassion proclaimed that unto him a son should be given: "and the government shall be upon his shoulders; and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, the Prince of Peace."

"And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Thus with the coming of Jesus the Peace-child was born. His nature partook too much of the divine to be nurtured alone by the hands of man. But the Father of all provided that his own Son, Jesus, should accompany the Peace-child to the realm of man, that there under his instruction the infant might grow to lusty, mature manhood. Having given to the world the lessons whereby the Peace-child should be cared for, and having performed the mission for which the Father had sent him, Jesus returned to his throne in glory at the right hand of God. But he left the young Peace-child to be cared for by the world of men. Christ's teachings must prevail if the world is ever to be gladdened by the Peace-child grown to glorious manhood. And as surely as God's word is Truth, Christ's teachings will prevail.

Christmas Message

By C. F. Hodder, Ph.D.

*May yours be the Christmas blessing,
Sent down from Heaven above,
And yours be the joy of confessing,
The Savior, the Gift of God's love.
May yours be the joy of possessing
The love which is life indeed,
And yours be the joy of expressing
That love to a world in need.*

*May yours be the joy of receiving
A share in the fullness of Grace,
And yours be the joy of believing
That soon we shall look on his face.
May yours be the joy of achieving
The good you are longing to do,
And yours be the joy of perceiving
Christ's fellowship ever anew.
Rio Cuarto, Argentina.*

Peace is the cry of the world. The world looks forward to the time when in all the glory of complete maturity the Peace-child shall have made the earth a place fit for the abode of Christ himself. Then shall the Peace-child be recognized as the Spirit of Jesus. Then shall the hope manifested by the world in its remembrance of the birthday of our Lord be fulfilled. Then shall man be at peace in his own soul; then shall man be at peace with his fellows; and then shall all nations be at peace with one another.

"And the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, the mighty God, the everlasting Father, THE PRINCE OF PEACE."
Clay City, Indiana.

The Season's Greetings

By G. W. Rench, D.D.

My friends say, "Why don't you write often?" Yes, why? I should, I know. Because I do not, is full proof that I am human with average human weakness. The real answer is, there are so many other things I would rather do.

Christmas will soon be here. And—once more. What memories! What lessons! Lucy Larcom in "In Time's Swing" spreads before us the very familiar picture:

"Frosty-bearded Father Time,
Stop your footfall on the rime!
Hard you push, your hand is rough;
You have swung me long enough.
"Nay, no stopping", say you? Well,
Some of your best stories tell,
While you swing me—gently, do!—
From the Old Year to the New."

Yes, "Father Time" keeps swinging us, and Christmas is once more upon us. When I think of my many friends, and especially, when I think of their worth to me, I falter; for words fail me to say what I wish to say. Speech, to some of us, has been such a poor medium of communication anyhow. But I know of one who can say things,—O, so beautifully! Why not let him say what I would like to say; and say it in the manner I would like to have it said? You know, we Hoosiers are not so far behind other people, in that we are proud of Indiana products. We are proud of SOME of our governors. James Whitcomb Riley lived and died in "Ole Indiany" although he belonged to us all. Here is what I wished to say:—

"I had fed the fire and stirred it, till the sparkles in del-light
Snapped their saucy little fingers at the chill December night;
And in dressing gown and slippers, I had tilted back "my throne"—
The old split-bottomed rocker—and was musing all alone.

I could hear the hungry Winter prowling round the outer door,
And the tread of muffled footsteps on the white piazza floor;
But the sounds came to me only as the murmur of a stream
That mingled with the current of a lazy-flowing dream.

And in a vision, painted like a picture in the air,
I saw the elfish figure of a man with frosty hair—
A quaint old man that chuckled with a laugh as he appeared
And with ruddy cheeks like embers in the ashes of his beard.

And looking there, I marveled as I saw a mimic stage
Alive with little actors of a very tender age;
And some so very tiny that they tottered as they walked,

And lisped and purled and gurgled like the brooklets, when they talked.

They mixed and intermingled, weaving melody with joy,
Till the magic circle clustered round a blooming baby-boy;

And they threw aside their treasures in an ecstasy of glee,

And bent with dazzled faces, and with parted lips, to see.

'Twas a wondrous little fellow, with a dainty double chin,
And chubby cheeks, and dimples for the smiles to blossom in;

And he looked as ripe and rosy, on his bed of straw and reeds,

As a mellow little pippin that had tumbled in the weeds.

And I saw the happy mother, and a group surrounding her,

That knelt with costly presence of frankincense and myrrh;

And I thrilled with awe and wonder, as a murmur on the air

Came drifting o'er the hearing in a melody of prayer:—

By the splendor in the heavens, and the hush upon the sea,

And the majesty of silence reigning over Galilee, —

We feel thy Kingly presence, and we humbly bow the knee

And lift our hearts and voices in gratefulness to thee.

Thy messenger has spoken, and our doubts have fled and gone

As the dark and spectral shadows of the night before the dawn;

And in the kindly shelter of the light around us drawn,
We would nestle down forever in the breast we lean upon.

You have given us a shepherd—You have given us a guide,

And the light of heaven grew dimmer when you sent him from your side—

But he comes to lead thy children where the gates will open wide

To welcome his returning when his works are glorified.

Then the vision, slowly failing, with the words of the refrain,

Fell swooning in the moonlight through the frosty window-pane;

And I heard the clock proclaiming, like an eager sentinel Who brings the world good tidings,—“It is Christmas—all is well!”

And that is why the world is different. What more can be said?

Social Significance of the Birth of Christ

By Prof. Landis R. Bradfield

More than 4000 years B. C. the first recorded event of written history occurred,—the invention of a calendar.

The period between 3000 and 2500 B. C. is famous as the Pyramid Age of Egypt.

About 2100 B. C. Hammurabi of Babylon ruled the Mesopotamian world, and evolved the great system of laws known as the Code of Hammurabi.

Some time after the rule of Hammurabi the Hebrew nation had its genesis in the exodus of the tribal families, under Abraham, from Ur of the Chaldees into the land of Canaan.

About 1200 B. C. Moses led the Israelites from Egypt into the wilderness wanderings from which Joshua led them into Canaan. A nation evolved and was governed by Judges and Kings until about the end of the tenth century B. C. The kingdom then divided into northern and southern sections, each ruled independently of the other. In 722 B. C. Assyria swept down upon the Northern Kingdom and laid it waste. In 586 B. C. Babylon conquered the Southern Kingdom and carried away to Babylon thousands of the Hebrews.

In Greece 450-300 B. C. Socrates and Plato were giving to the world a philosophy the like of which has never been equaled.

In a single decade—333-323 B. C.—Alexander the Great subjected the then known world to himself.

The year 31 B. C. witnessed the advent of Caesar Augustus as Emperor of the Roman World.

In all this category of events of nations, individuals and societies, not one has had the significance of an event occurring 4 B. C. in an obscure village, among a subject people, which event was the birth of Christ.

This event socially overshadows every other event of history before or since. No other has had so nearly or completely a universal appeal. Little did Caesar Augustus know that he was setting the stage for the world's greatest drama, by issuing an edict commanding his subjects to go to their ancestral homes for purposes of enumeration.

In Bethlehem of Judea, the obscure village where Jesus was born, there was almost immediate rejoicing. Even angelic hosts made announcement to shepherds in the field, that an event of no little importance had taken place. Even, too, the angels declared the theme of the new social order in the words, "Peace on earth, good will among men."

Now to briefly note a few of the social effects of the Birth of Christ upon the world.

The birth of Christ gave rise to the Christ Mass or religious festival in honor of his birth. This term has been changed into our present word Christmas. Different conceptions have been and are held by different peoples as to the proper observance of Christmas. Christmas activities and celebrations are constantly changing. But despite these differences there have been wrought fundamental changes affecting society at large.

One such change is observable in the new attitude toward children. No longer do we allow the state to practice infanticide even though it claims such right in the interests of the state. Ancient Sparta considered her children valuable only in so far as they could contribute to the power of the state, largely military.

Jesus voiced a concern for children when he said, "Suffer little children to come unto me, and forbid them not." The problem of Child Labor has caused grave concern on the part of Christian men and women. They say our children must be protected from the human wolves who would prey upon them destroying their very lives, or else our social structure will be undermined.

Then too, our concern for welfare of children is manifesting itself through juvenile relief and reform agencies. Orphans' homes are established to care for the homeless child. All these efforts are but expressions of the new conception of womanhood. The Oriental harems are passing. Dual standards of social life are disappearing. Freedom and equality of women with men are harbingers of a new social era in which the message of Jesus will have more and more potency.

The value of human life has changed and continues to change as our conception of the angels' theme roots more deeply in our lives. No longer do we derisively ask, "Am I my brother's keeper?" The answer is obvious. We are or must become our brother's keeper. Jesus said, "He that would be greatest among you, let him become your servant." National and international relationships are changing. Men are advocating world peace because they are discovering it to be for the greatest good of mankind, and in harmony with the theme "Peace on earth, good will among men."

The true Christmas spirit only will bring good and well being to the world. Shall we foster it? Shall we encourage it? The modern commercial spirit of Christmas is adverse to the true spirit. In the rush and hustle of gift buying may not the Supreme Gift be forgotten? May we return to the simplicity of the greatest Event of the world's history?

Things By the Way---IV

By A. D. Gnagey, D.D.

The Busy World

It is a busy world; that is what God means it should be; always, from the beginning, it has been a busy world. It began that way. For six long periods called days God was busy; then came a lull, a quiet period and the record says God rested, but the world kept on going, trees were growing and the grass, birds were singing, flowers blooming, the world itself was flying through space at the rate of one thousand miles an hour, and so things have been going ever since, busier now than ever. But are we busy at the right things? Are we busy today helping God to make this world what he meant it should be? Are we busy cooperating with God in building the Kingdom? What, after all, is the biggest enterprise in the world today? The Ford Motor Company? General Electric? United States Steel Company? What then? The biggest enterprise in the world today is the building of the Kingdom of God. Like Nehemiah, are we too busy building the walls of Zion to leave our work and answer the call of the world's folly, and pleasure, and opposition?

As the disciples stood looking into heaven after the ascension they were asked, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye looking into heaven?" It was a gentle rebuke to their idleness and curiosity, and, probably, to their ignorance. There was all Jerusalem with its needs and just beyond it the whole world calling for them. It was no time to stand idly by and gaze into the heavens. The call to them was imperative. The contemplative life has a place, but what the world needs and what God demands of us all is that we use the power that is given us to attack the problems of the times and help in making every place a part of the Kingdom of God. In doing this we are aiding in the return of Jesus Christ in power and might, to rule over the hearts and control the institutions of men. Are we star-gazers? Even that may be profitable business at times,—to stand out in the open on a clear night and just to look up at the stars as they come out and string themselves like golden beads on the rosary of heaven. It will rest your eyes and give you a larger vision. It calms our minds and keeps us humble, and thoughtful, and reflective. Just a few moments snatched from our busy, hustling life, to look up from the fitful, fretful firelight of daily life, the feverish rush, the maddening turmoil, and rest the eyes, and rest the mind, and get a larger vision, a grander view, higher objects, wider purposes; to see beyond the works of our hands upon which our thoughts and minds are centered, to the works and purposes of God, that we may realize in the deepest center of our being that there are larger and wider visions to be attained, and higher objects to be sought for, greater purposes to be realized than all the earth with its fulness can bring to us. But these should be rare seasons, lest we make the contemplative an end rather than a means, a preparation for life's larger tasks. The Christian should remember that for him life is a struggle, a conflict, a warfare, a discipline, one long continued sacrifice and crucifixion.

Power Is Better

Along the same line of thought we are reminded that as Pentecost was drawing near the disciples asked Jesus, saying, "Lord, wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel?" We do not censure the disciples for asking such a question. That was uppermost in their minds. For centuries before Jesus was born, Jewish people had been speculating about just such a time as the disciples had in mind when they came to Jesus with their question. They had it all figured out just how it would be. But God took his own time and his own way, as he always does. So he answered the disciples. "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons which the Father hath put in his own power. But ye shall receive power after that the Holy Spirit is come upon you: and ye shall be witnesses unto me both in Jerusalem, and in all Judea, and in Samaria, and unto the uttermost part of the earth." Even so, to receive power for life's great task is better than speculation about the mysteries of God which are too deep for men. It is enough for us to know that God's purposes and promises will come to pass. Times and seasons are not for us to bother with. A good deal of valuable Christian energy is wasted today trying to calculate when Christ will return and bring the world to an end,—that is, the present world-order. Better let it alone. It is in the Father's hand, and he will keep it there. Your time and talent can do better service in other directions. Christ will come, and all prophecy will be fulfilled to the last jot and tittle, but how and when it is not revealed to us. Duty and service are present, but prophecy is with God and the future.

A Christmas Thought

What is the heart of Christmas? How should we prepare for the coming of the season which during the years has brought joy unspeakable to practically the whole world,—sometimes of very short duration! Christmas joys too often vanish with the passing of the season. It should not be so. The real Christmas joy is an abiding joy, or, it may be made so. Why not continue the Christmas joy throughout the whole year? "Behold, I bring you glad tidings of great joy which shall be to all people", and the angel might have added, for all time.

What should be our thought as the season draws nigh? Just two: a great FACT and a great MESSAGE. The fact,—"unto us a child is born." The Child! Remember the Child! Around that, as a center, should gather all the thoughts and the activities of the Christmas time. Jesus, the champion of children,—that is the preacher's theme. Preeminently, Jesus is the discoverer and lover of childhood. Contrast his attitude with that of the Romans and Greeks. Socrates sneered at the grief of a mother weeping for her babe. Plato suggested that every town or city should select some distant hilltop and there build a pen for the exposure of unwelcome children, and Aristotle urged laws that made the drowning of weak babes compulsory upon parents. On the edge of the city of Rome was the Lactarian column, at the foot of Mount Aventine, and here at night were brought the helpless babes to die from cold and exposure, or wild beasts; or, to be rescued and trained to a life worse than death. Yes, all this in the "seven-hilled city", the mistress of the world, where stoicism, the best of pagan philosophies, flourished. And conditions elsewhere were even worse. "One race of antiquity alone honored the child,—the Hebrew race, of which Jesus Christ was the consummate flower." The one outstanding race in a cold, cruel world, honored the child, welcomed it, and cared for it, that is, made provision for its physical, intellectual, and spiritual welfare,—do we make such provision? The religious education of the child was compulsory with the ancient Hebrews. The child of proper age today must attend public school,—but the church and Bible school, only when convenient, when the weather is fair, one day in the week, and one hour of that day! Dare we call that adequate provision for the religious development of the child?

In a time when Rome was supreme, and Roman indifference to child-life prevailed, Jesus more than literally "set a little child in the midst", and ever since the kingdom of childhood has been extending. In a time when children were regarded as nuisances, Jesus commanded his disciples to "forbid them not", from coming unto him; when they were looked upon as insignificant, Jesus pronounced a blessing upon him who gave to one of these little ones a cup of cold water; when they were ignored, he made the little child an example to those entering the kingdom, and declared that only as we become as little children shall we enter his kingdom at all; when their lives counted as of little value, Jesus denounced the man who offended them. What a tribute to childhood, and what a lesson for parents! Shall we learn it anew at this Christmas time? The hope of the world lies with the child. The world will be Christian only when the child is trained and taught in the Jesus way of living.

Here then is the FACT: "unto us a child is born." Now for the MESSAGE. It is very simple. It was a critical moment in the life of the Judean shepherds on the first Christmas morning when the angel's song had died away in the solemn silence and left them alone in their fields. They had had a vision. The heavens were aglow with light and in the stillness of the night the shepherds heard the voice of the angels heralding the glad tidings of a Savior born. And this shall be the sign: "Ye shall find the Babe wrapped in swaddling clothes lying in a manger." Will the shepherds transmute the vision into spirit and service, or will they let it pass into oblivion and themselves into the same old uninspired routine of their lives? No, those shepherds can never again be the same as they were before, after seeing the vision and hearing the angelic message. They said, "Let us now go even unto Bethlehem, and see this thing which is come to pass. No doubt in their minds. They made haste and came to Bethlehem and behold, they found it even as the angel had said. It is so always when we obey the VISION. The shepherds translated the song into service and the vision into victory. Once more we shall hear the divine message; once more we shall listen to the Bethlehem song; once more we shall see the vision. Shall we, too, transmute the song into service and the vision into victory? Had those shepherds tarried thirty days, or even until the next morning, the vision would have been to them nothing more than an idle dream or tale. Paul would have utterly forgotten the Damascus experience if he had not been obedient to that heavenly vision. First of all, and supremely above all, let Christian men and women take home this message to their hearts, exhibit it in their own spirit and speech, character and conduct. During these festal days pulpits will ring out the Christmas message; Christmas day will be celebrated with heavenly music, and joy and gladness will stir the hearts of the people. But will the message of song and story be transmuted into spirit and service? And will the beautiful story be anything more than beautiful myth and sentiment? Will it?

God's Unspeakable Gift

By Samuel Kiehl

TEXT: Thanks be unto God for his unspeakable gift.—2 Corinthians 9:15.

The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ, our Lord (Rom. 6:23), who himself is the unspeakable gift. The motive that caused God to give his unspeakable gift was his infinite grace and mercy for sinful humanity. "The whole world lieth in wickedness; yet, God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life." A manifestation of his amazing grace, love, and mercy for the redemption of sinners. This wonderful grace of God hath appeared not to only a select few, but, it is written, the grace of God that bringeth salvation hath appeared to all men (Titus 2:11). A universal, unspeakable gift of God manifest in Jesus his only begotten Son, concerning whom Paul says, This is a faithful saying, and worthy of all acceptation, that Christ Jesus came into the world to save sinners (1 Tim. 1:15). God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved (John 3:17). This unspeakable gift of God in the person of Jesus Christ is the only hope for the salvation of the world; for there is none other name under heaven given among men, whereby we must be saved (Acts 4:12).

He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him (John 3:36). Sad indeed for the unbeliever, unless he repent, believe, and receive Christ as his Savior and Lord. He that hath the Son hath life; and he that hath not the Son of God hath not life (1 John 5:12). Christ dwells in the believer's heart by faith (Eph. 3:17). Is he dwelling in your heart and mine? Let us, today examine ourselves, whether we be in the faith (2 Cor. 13:5). Delay is extremely dangerous.

This wonderful, loving Savior whose grace in our behalf is unspeakable, died for our sins according to the scriptures (1 Cor. 15:3); was delivered for our offenses, and was raised again for our justification (Rom. 5:25); hath redeemed us from the curse of the law, being made a curse for us (Gal. 3:13); gave himself for our sins, that he might deliver us out of this present evil world (Gal. 1:4); his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree, that we, being dead to sins, should live unto righteousness (1 Pet. 2:24). The Lord enable us so to live. Christ also hath once suffered for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God (1 Pet. 3:18). God hath made him to be sin for us, who knew no sin; that we might be made the righteousness of God in him (2 Cor. 5:21). Christ of God is made unto us wisdom and righteousness (1 Cor. 1:30). Consequently, Christ is the end of the law for righteousness to every one that believeth (Rom. 10:4). "Let every thing that hath breath" praise his holy name.

This unspeakable gift of God the ascended Christ, is now at the right hand of God in heaven our priest and advocate. It is written, We have a great high priest, that is passed into the heavens, Jesus the Son of God (Heb. 4:14). He ever liveth to make intercession for them that come unto God by him (Heb. 7:25). He is also our advocate with the Father, and the propitiation for our sins (1 John 2:1, 2). As our advocate, pleader, counselor, attorney; he hath never lost a case, and never will for those who with heart and soul put their trust in him. Propitiation, the influence or effects of the death of Christ in appeasing the divine justice, and conciliating the divine favor.—Webster.

That which atones for and covers our guilt, as the mercy-seat covers the tables of the law.—Diaglot. b

This precious Savior will never permanently leave those who love and obey him (John 14:21). He hath gone to prepare a place for us. He will come again and receive us unto himself; that where he is there we may be also (John 14:1-3). In him we have redemption through his blood, the forgiveness of sins, according to the riches of his grace (Eph. 1:7). Therefore, unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood, and hath made us kings and priests unto God (and) his Father; to him be glory and dominion for ever and ever. Amen. (Rev. 1:5, 6).

Protestantism and Prayer—It cannot be maintained that Protestantism has had any great success in teaching people to pray. Too frequently its sanctuaries are really lecture halls in which the minister delivers two discourses; the one a sermon, called the pastoral prayer; and the other an address, called a sermon.—Reinhold Niebuhr.

A Christmas Meditation

By Mary Pence

The more we come to know Jesus Christ our Lord, and the better we know the Word, the deeper and greater is the meaning of Christmas with which we have come to associate the birth of Christ. When we are mere children it means little more than that Jesus was born in a manger and some beautiful facts and sentiment woven around that event. And it may mean a little giving and more getting.

But when we become more grown up in Jesus Christ the real issue grips our souls more and more that that same Jesus Christ is the Eternal Son of God "Who, being in the form of God, thought it not robbery to be equal with God: but made himself of no reputation, and took upon him the form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men: And being found in fashion as a man, he humbled himself, and became obedient unto death, even the death of the cross."

At the Christmas season we think back to the time when Christ took upon himself this form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of men. What a beautiful clear night it must have been in old Judea when the shepherds were abiding in the field, keeping watch over their flock. If ever the stars sang together and the spheres made music it surely was that night. And a very angel came down to the men of a sin cursed earth, saying unto them, "Fear not: for, behold, I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people. For unto you is born this day in the city of David a Savior, which is Christ the Lord . . . And suddenly there was with the angel a multitude of the heavenly host praising God, and saying, Glory to God in the highest, and on earth peace, good will toward men."

Then our minds run along the path of the sufferings and humility of Christ which seem to have had their beginnings with his very birth. Save for a remnant our Lord was rejected from the beginning. But he went about his Father's business, working his great miracles and giving forth his great teachings until finally we linger at the garden gate and at the foot of an old wooden cross. Here Christ performed his great work for which he was born. He was born that he might die in our stead. How we do linger at the garden and at the cross. What untold agony and suffering was that!! What inexpressible desire grips our hearts to better understand that suffering, yea, to enter into it, to know him, and the fellowship of his suffering, and be made conformable unto his death. That we might intensely realize that all he suffered was "for me."

"The thorns on his head were worn in my stead;
For me the Savior died;
For guilt of my sin the nails drove in
When him they crucified.
Though the crown that he wore
And the cross that he bore
Were his own
They rightly were mine."

So with a plea to enter into a better understanding of the atonement our thoughts move on to the empty tomb of Christ who says of himself, "I am he that liveth and was dead; and, behold, I am alive for evermore, Amen; and have the keys of hell and death." The empty tomb has never been accounted for save in the words, "He is risen." He was "raised again for our justification." All for us, for me. When we see how Christ conquered the

MONDAY

EXERCISING UNTO GODLINESS—1 Tim. 4:7-12. "Exercise thyself unto godliness." In other words, we are to grow in grace. We may be saved from the guilt of sin the instant we look to Jesus in faith and acceptance, but we are saved from the down-pull of sin and unto godliness day by day and by hard work. It is a matter of exercise, and must be kept up continuously. The trouble is that we soon grow weary of exercising. We wrestle with God in prayer when the waters of destruction whirl about our door or when the hand of disease rests upon the brow, but when "all is clear" and we don't feel the need of prayer so much we neglect it. Steady, persistent effort is necessary in life's common day if we are to be strong for the emergencies.

TUESDAY

HOW TO MEET THE TESTS—Psalm 40:1-4. "He brought me up . . . and set my feet upon a rock." Life is full of pits and quagmires and when we go down we are inclined to throw up our hands and give up in despair. Every "Slough of Despond" is a test of character, and straight through, trusting in God, is the only way to demonstrate one's worth and power, and to achieve the glory of stability. It is the hand of God that lifts us up, and his grace that makes us strong.

WEDNESDAY

THE SEAT OF RELIGIOUS INSTRUCTION—Deut. 6:6-9. "Thou shalt teach them diligently to thy children, and thou shalt talk of them when thou sittest in thy house." This Jewish law was not an arbitrary requirement, but moral and fundamental to the highest welfare of the individual, the home and the state. And being moral, it has not been and cannot be abrogated. Home religion is still the saving, sanctifying influence of the world's basic institution—the family, and the maintenance of the altar of prayer with its religious instruction and priestly functions continues the divinely imposed responsibility of fathers.

THURSDAY

HAZARDING LIFE—Acts 20:22-27. "Neither count I my life dear unto myself." There are plenty of people who are reckless and will risk their lives on a dare. But life is sacred and should not be hazarded save for something that is worth more than life. Paul had found something that was far more valuable than life, namely, the task to which he had been divinely commissioned—preaching "the gospel of the grace of God." And today, as then, any sacrifice a missionary may make for the spread of the Gospel is justified in the light of that truth.

FRIDAY

"HOW THEY GROW"—Matt. 6:28-34. "Consider the lilies, how they grow, they toil not, neither do they spin." In other words, they do not fret and fume about their condition in life. They are trustful as they grow, and it is because they are trustful that they can grow so vigorously. They make use of the means at hand, reaching down for the enrichment of the soil and up for the sunlight and the rain. And they grow steadily and patiently, not seeking to reach full fruitage with a single grasp, but content to add each day its allotted growth and so persevere unto the harvest.

SATURDAY

OUR TRUE CITIZENSHIP—Eph. 2:11-22. "Therefore we are no more strangers or foreigners, but fellow citizens with the saints." In Christ there is neither Jew nor Greek, but all nationalities are to be and are made one in the household of God. It is not becoming of the Christian to boast of his American citizenship (though he prize it highly) to the disparagement of the foreigner, but rather to rejoice that he is a fellow citizen with all races in the kingdom of our Lord.

SUNDAY

THE EVER-PRESENT POWER—Job 38:1-7. "Where wast thou when I laid the foundations of the earth." Do we sometimes question God's presence and power? Do clouds and darkness seem to hide him from our sight? Aye, we do not know all of God. He works in the rain as in the sunshine, in the storm as in the calm, in the darkness as in the light. Nothing is beyond the touch of his power.—G. S. B.

John the Baptist and Jesus

The Quarter's Lessons

This is the first of a six months' course in the study of the Life of Jesus as found in the Gospel of Mark. This is the shortest of the four Gospels and much of the story as recorded in Matthew and Luke is omitted. John Mark is generally accepted as the writer of this Gospel, but it is thought Peter supplied him with the material, and may even have dictated the writing. Mark was too young to have gotten much of the material first-handed, and especially the words of Jesus on occasions when only the three most intimate disciples are present could have been known only by a report of one of those present at the time.

Today's Lesson

Scripture Lesson—Mark 1:1-13.

Devotional Reading—Isaiah 40:1-11.

Golden Text—He must increase, but I must decrease. John 3:30.

Time and Place

John the Baptist, who was a cousin of Jesus, began his ministry of preaching and preparation of the way for the Christ in the summer of A. D. 26 and less than two years later it was brought to a close. The baptism of Jesus by John is said to have taken place in January, A. D. 26, and it occurred in the Jordan River, though the exact location is in dispute, but most likely it was east of Jericho. John's preaching was in the wilderness of Judea south of Jerusalem and west of the Dead Sea.

Characteristics of Mark's Gospel

"(1) This Gospel was evidently written for Gentiles. It explains Jewish customs with which Gentiles might not be familiar, translates Aramaic words which might not be understood by Gentiles, uses several Latin words put into a Greek form which are not found in the other Gospels, and quotes very little from the Old Testament, no doubt for the reason that the Old Testament scriptures would be unknown books to most of his readers. (2) The events recorded in this Gospel are arranged in the order in which they occurred. (3) The perfect human nature of our Lord is clearly indicated in this Gospel: he felt hunger, weariness, anger, pity, love. (4) This Gospel is full of minute details, seeming to show that St. Mark obtained his information from an eye-witness probably from St. Peter. (5) St. Mark notices the effect produced by our Lord's words and works."

Make His Paths Straight

Crooked, winding roads are picturesque in an artist's eye, but they are enormously wasteful of land and of time. A straight road between two towns may be only half as long as a twisting road. Whenever time is a valuable factor, as in military operations, straight roads are a necessity. Therefore the Romans, desiring to strike their enemies quickly with their troops, took great pains to build throughout their empire magnificent, solid, and straight roads radiating out from Rome in all directions. Many of these remain to this day. Such roads are typical of the substantial work the Christian church should do in preparing the way for the King of kings to reach the hearts of men.

All this was an illustration, or parable, of the spiritual preparations made for the coming of the Lord to individuals, to nations, and to the world, especially exemplified in the story of John the Baptist. (1) Fill up the valleys of neglected duties, the sins of omission, defects of prayer, of faith, of love, of work. (2) Bring down the

LIKENESS TO THEE

Help me, my Lord, to grow
More like to thee,
Thy wondrous love to know,
Thy face to see.
Lord, fill my soul with light,
Dispel the gloom of night,
And make me through thy might
More like to thee.

Though rough the road may be
Jagged and steep,
Lord, though I may not run,
Upward I'll creep.
When nightly shadows fall,
When doubts and fears appal,
Then may I rise from all,
More like to thee.

Or if my footsteps sink
In doubt's dark wave,
May I like Peter cry,
Lord Jesus, save!
So by my faith to prove
Thine all redeeming love;
Oh, make me, heavenly Dove,
More like to thee.

And when from Pisgah's height
Canaan I view;
When faith shall change to sight,
Old things to new;
Then in a nobler song,
Through all the ages long,
I'll stand amid the throng,
More like to thee.

mountains of pride, sin, selfishness, unbelief, worldliness, hypocrisy, wrongs against men. (3) Straighten out all crooked places, crooked dealings with others, crooked ways of sin, settle difficulties, confess sins. (4) Smooth the rough places, harshness of temper and manner, lack of courtesy, coldness, fault-finding, which are the little foxes that spoil the vines.

How He Prepared the Way

First, by urging the people to repent.

Second. John prepared the way by giving hope as well as warning. He proclaimed forgiveness, the remission of sins (v. 4) for all who would repent, and do works meet for repentance. So Jesus tells us that "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him" (that is, follows, obeys him as King, Leader, and Teacher) "should not perish, but have everlasting life" (John 3:16). There is no other possible way.

Third. John confirmed the people who repented by a public confession through baptism.

Fourth. The soul-mirror, which John held up before the people in order that they might see themselves as they really were.

Fifth. John prepared the way for Jesus by calling attention to the coming One.—Illustrated Quarterly.

The Baptism

John's baptism was different from that which Jesus taught his disciples to practice. It could hardly have been a three-fold form because the trinity was not yet revealed and the Christian commission not yet given. It was according to that commission (Matthew 28:19-20) that the early church went forth to baptize believers into the body of Christ. It was a triune immersion they practiced. John's baptism was very likely the single mode, patterned after the Jewish baptism, but differing from it in that it was a "baptism of repentance unto remission of sins." In this significance it was like Christian baptism.

National Convention in Australia

The first convention under the auspices of the National Sunday School Association of Australia was held in Sydney, March 28 to April 4 of this year. Large delegations were present from New South Wales, Victoria and Tasmania. The convention went on record to become a unit of the World's Sunday School Association with the oversight of Sunday School missionary work on Australian fields working through existing denominational organizations.

"Outback children" is a phrase found in the report of the convention which refers to the children of the sparsely settled country districts as follows: "Concerning the children in the wider spaces of the country, the Convention, convinced of the responsibility of the city schools to do something for the outback children, now commends that the various state councils pursue the work of reaching and linking up the outback children of Australia by means of:

(1) A more thorough correspondence and home department scheme; (2) The use of wireless and motor car missions; (3) The distribution of suitable literature. For the latter purpose the convention recommended that the State railway authorities be approached with the view of securing free carriage of such literature."

LIBRARY BROWSINGS

Do you know anything more important than to see exactly how to put our Christian truths into the life in such a way that all men shall know us by our fruits? We talk a great deal about Christianity and of the religious life in ourselves and in society, but the great need of the world is the actual living of Christian truths. It is not enough to have truths in the memory; unless they are in the life, we are not Christians.—Walter B. Murray.

Am I a Just Steward?

By Orville D. Ullom, Stewardship Superintendent

For some of us the Christmas season is one of especial joy. This should be true for all, and indeed there are many young men in our midst who have adequately proven to themselves and to others that this is possible. To the selfish individual such is not true. He is not appreciated even by himself, let alone others. But the life of the conscientious steward is the extreme opposite. His is an all inclusive life, because he loves boys and girls. He loves them, because he sees in them their possibilities and he desires to lend a hand in helping them to be what they ought to be. Now wouldn't you like to begin to do that and thus count yourself among the consecrated Stewards of our Christ? We have only to see the need and then to realize that we have the ability to meet this need. In the words of Mr. Grenfell, the Labrador doctor, it is stated thus, "I came to realize that under the shams and external of religion there was a vital call in the world for things that I could do." There are things in the world that we can do. Shall we be parasites or shall we shoulder willingly our responsibilities?

I picture for you just now two of Mr. Grenfell's observational experiences which took place during his missionary endeavors in Labrador. First, I wish to say that here is a man with a heart of love for those less fortunate than himself. He portrays vividly in action that beautiful statement which ought to be true of us all. "He was just to others before he was generous with himself." In many cases at this season of the year this, I believe, is outstandingly true, but why do we not yearn to make this a permanent motto for life? Then shall we be just stewards ministering unto our brothers and sisters even as Jesus stated his desire for us to do.

"A visit to one house of the French shore I shall not easily forget. The poor lad of 10 years had hip disease. The indescribable dirt I cannot here picture. The bed, the house, and everything in it were full of vermin, and the poor boy had not been washed since he took to bed three or four months before. With the help of a clergyman who was traveling with me at the time, the lad was chloroformed and washed. We then ordered the bedding to be burned, provided him with fresh garments, and put him into a clean bed. The people's explanation was that he was in too much pain to be touched, and so they could do nothing. We cleansed and drained his wounds and left what we could for him."

"During the summer we had trouble with a form of selfishness which I have always heartily hated—the liquor traffic. Suppose we do allow that a man has the right to degrade his body swallowing alcohol, he certainly has no right to lure others to their destruction. We soon discovered a man who was selling intoxicants to our people—girls and men. One girl found drunk on the hillside brought home to me the cost of this man to "do as he liked." He promptly declared war.

"I had been warned against landing on his premises on pain of being 'chucked into the sea.' But when I tested the matter out by landing quite alone from a rowboat, after a few wor-r-r-ds his coast born hospitality overcame him, and as his bell sounded the dinner call, he promptly invited me to dine with him. I knew he would not poison the food, and soon we were glowering at one another over his own table—where his painful efforts to convince me that he was right absolutely demonstrated the exact opposite.

These are a few among the many real situations by means of which we might picture the needs of people today and the necessity of cleaning up certain practices which exist in many communities. I ask you, young people, especially, to consider seriously at this joyous season of the year some such service for the Christ. Men need you; boys and girls need you. Be just, yes, generous, with others before you are gen-

About Junior Notes

The Junior Endeavor lesson story has been transferred from THE EVANGELIST to "Our Little Folks' Page" of THE ANGELUS, as an experiment for the new year. In the place of Miss Haun who has so satisfactorily written these lesson stories for two years, but who recently resigned, we have secured the consent of Mrs. H. W. Koontz of Masontown, Pennsylvania, to take up the work, at least for a time. Those who know Mrs. Koontz's ability along this line will agree with us that we have been fortunate in enlisting her as the writer of the Junior lessons. We are grateful to her for undertaking the work, and we feel sure our young readers of THE ANGELUS will be much interested in her stories.

It is not our purpose to leave THE EVANGELIST without something of special interest to our little folks. We hope to be able to publish quite regularly selected stories for them and thus continue to claim them as a real part of the Evangelist family.—Editor.

erous with yourself. Fine clothes, expensive automobiles, rich foods—all of these first, and then what is left over, give to the poor and needy! Is this the way? Is this the Christ spirit?

Christ is ready to convince the willing heart. He stands knocking at hearts, but we refuse to reply, "Come in." Consequently in the light of our own immediate outlook we see nothing definite in the world that we can properly accomplish. The Christ within gives a craving love to serve without. Such a life of consecration to loving service as we have had exemplified in Dr. Grenfell has its rich rewards. They are showered upon him a hundred fold and in scores of ways. Such stewardship for the Christ compels a life of trust before its God. In sharing our consecration with other hearts we learn to trust God instead of our own skill, our bank or our job. Is not such reward a thousand fold sufficient and worthwhile?

Trust in God

Call it not faith to trust in God
When ample is your store,
And when to barns already filled
The Lord is adding more.

Call it not faith to give your tenth,
While yet nine-tenths remain,
And while your offering to your Lord
Is felt not from your gain.

'Tis when the fig tree blossoms not,
Nor fruit is in the vine,
The labor of the olive fails,
Nor corn is there, nor wine.

'Tis when the flock fails from the field,
Nor herd is in the stall;
To trust in God then—that is faith,
The strongest faith of all.

John Macdonald.

Our Prayer

Our Father God, who committest the solemn trust of life; since we know not what a day may bring forth, but only that the hour for serving thee is always present, may we wake to the instant claims of thy holy will; not waiting for tomorrow, but yielding today. Lay to rest by the persuasion of thy Spirit, the resistance of our passion, indolence or fear. Consecrate with thy presence the way our feet may go; in all things draw us to the mind of Christ, that thy lost image may be traced again, and thou mayest own us at one with him and thee. Amen.—James Martineau.

Hartford, Connecticut.

Elements of Success

One of the prime elements of success in any society is activity in the general work of the church. The society is not, was not organized to be, an institution separate from the rest of the church, though sometimes it takes on that appearance. Christian Endeavor is a training school for Christians, and the church is the chief agency through which such a worker should give expression to his talents.

* * *

A society to be a success must have definite and worthy goals, not too many, for then energies are dissipated and nothing is well done. Every year accomplishment should be measured and new goals set. Set a mark and work toward it; that's the only way to get anywhere. Don't move in a circle; a merry-go-round does that. Move ahead.

* * *

Are your meetings getting stale? Sometimes they do because of lack of thought on the part of your prayer meeting committee and your leaders. If monotony has crept into your Sunday evening programs, let your president call your prayer meeting committee and your leaders for the next few weeks into conference, in order that together they may plan a series of meetings that will be different.

Dr. Gribble Nears Destination

Kinshassa, Congo Belge,
 November 9th, 1927.

Dear Evangelist Readers:

I am so glad to be thus far on my way and to have an opportunity of sending this back to you on the Belgian boat which leaves November eleventh. I wrote you last just as we were waiting near Bordeaux for the remainder of the crew and passengers. October 12th, therefore, we were well under way and consequently arrived at Matadi November fourth, only one day late. We touched and coaled at Casablanca on the Sunday following.

Our next stop was Dakar. Here also we coaled, and through some mistake lay in harbor over night. For this misdemeanor we were quarantined. The quarantine consisted in a refusal to allow passengers to disembark except at their destination. They were then required to remain six days in a hospital before being allowed to proceed to the interior. We touched at Tabou, Conakry, Cotonou, Grand Bassam, Douala, Port Gentil, Point Noire, Banana Boma and finally Matadi. An unprecedented heat wave swept across from the desert and we suffered terribly between Dakan and Conakry. Passengers on the Belgian boat passed through the same heat wave near Teneriffe. In central Africa we often sleep under several woolen blankets, but on this coast voyage we could bear scarcely the weight and heat of a cotton sheet at night, and the glare of the sun's dangerous rays augmented our sufferings by day.

I was much disappointed to find that the Changeus Reunis touches only at Souhala, the mouth of the river, and that a launch conducts the passengers from thence to the Douala port. So I saw nothing of the famous port of Douala at which in the future we are to disembark. Eighty-five passengers left us here.

Douala bids fair to become one of the most important parts of Africa and will soon supercede Dakar.

Pointe Noire also is to become an important port and will also have direct lines to the ports of South America. The railroad however is not yet finished to Brazzaville.

At Banana the ship's doctor consulted with the Belgian doctor and we were judged to have satisfied not only French but also Belgian quarantine regulations for yellow fever. We were therefore given our pilots and permitted to proceed to Boma and Matadi where we arrived November fourth.

The memory of that afternoon in Matadi will not soon be effaced. To the mission for my mail, to the bank for Belgian money, to the Douane (customs house) on Mission business to the Manucongo to see about delayed freight, to the boat to collect my baggage, to the Douane again with same, to the station to buy my ticket, back again to the boat for dinner and to sleep and off to Kinshassa at 6 A. M. the next morning. Meanwhile lunch and water for the train had to be arranged for, telegram sent to Thysville,—and it was with a sigh of relief that I settled down once more on the train bound toward Kinshassa.

I shall never forget the last night on the boat. Men peering in at the cabin porthole which unfortunately touched the wharf, rats dashing about the cabin in spite of electric light and electric fan going to frighten them away, and finally after what seemed to be a few moments of troubled sleep, the steward at the door saying, "Five o'clock, Madame."

What a contrast to the night which followed at the English Baptist Mission at Thysville, when for the first time for twenty-five nights I slept in a cool, airy room, not a hot, stuffy, rat-infested cabin.

Off again at 7:30 the next morning I arrived at Kinshassa at 3 P. M. and took a taxi to the Union Mission Hotel!

No one was expecting me as my telegram with the astonishing alacrity of Africa arrived next day! However, I was soon taking advantage of the privileges of

A CHRISTMAS PRAYER

*God bless this house on Christmas Day,
 And all who in it dwell;
 And send us work, and send us play,
 —And many a glad Noel.*

*God send us store on Christmas Day
 Of friends and health and mirth;
 And bless us with that dream away
 That blessed the world on Christmas Day—
 "Good will, and peace on earth."*

*And think ye well on Christmas Day
 That love is more than art,
 And the words of love and cheer away
 Shine well within the heart.*

*So sing we all on Christmas Day
 Old songs of Christmas cheer,
 God grant us brave, true words to say;
 Yea! help us live some better way
 In all the glad new year.
 —Charles W. Kennedy, in Scribner's.*

rest and cleanliness after the fatiguing and dirty train ride. The next morning early my baggage was unloaded and I found my steamer trunk had been left at Matadi!

A telegram, a letter, and many prayers have been sent after it. God is faithful. To the Unatra to see about boats on the Belgian side. No prospects. To Brazzaville, to find a boat will leave November 19th. Booked passage.

To the ruins of the dear old Swedish Mission. Accidentally burned October seventh. Among the things saved was the heavy mail for me from Oubangi-Chari. Took lunch with the dear missionaries, bravely living in their church and school rooms, meanwhile rallying their forces to rebuild. Back across Stanley Pool to Kinshassa, sent a telegram to Brother Hathaway, did a bit of missionary shopping and back again to the Union Hotel to find that Mr. Moody of Sona Bota had called to see me. Saw him next morning at the train. For several years he has been baptizing an average of 2000 converts a year. He said simply—"We preach, not alone in faith but in expectant faith."

To the "Colonial Belge," a department store, on an errand, then—suddenly I realized that I could do no more. Back to the Mission in a taxi, and since only resting and waiting. Mr. Collden, a young Swedish missionary, kindly volunteered to care for my business both yesterday and this afternoon. Only another evidence that while I can never count on my own strength I can always count on the Lord's.

Ahead of me yet lie the reception of the missing trunk, the passing of Brazzaville customs, the procuring of license for gun and cartridges, the presentation of passports, the adjustment of some unfinished business at the Douane—etc. He is able, though I am not, "and so we walk together, my Lord and I."

Letters from our stations speak of the Kennedys at Bossangoa, of the health of the babies, of the growth of the work. I hope to arrive at Yaloke December fourth, just one month from Matadi. The next missionaries will be able to make it from Douala to Yaloke in five days.

Faithfully yours,

F. N. GRIBBLE.

HINDU SAMMY

A regiment of British Tommies were encamped just outside a town in India, says a writer in an exchange. They were fresh from the home country, and everything was very novel to them.

One morning soon after their arrival there went trotting along the road by the camp a Hindu Christian preacher. He carried a big Bible under one arm and an umbrella under the other. Altogether he looked a quaint little figure as he ran along in the dust and the glare of the sun.

Some Tommies hailed him as he went by with an irreverent question, "Hello, Sammy! How's Jesus this morning?"

The little fellow pulled up short and looked at them with his bright, dark, piercing eyes. Then, holding up the Bible, he said slowly: "Do you sahibs mean to say that you who sent us this Holy Book talk of the Lord Jesus like that? Do the people of your great country send the Gospel to us poor heathen and yet insult the Savior?"

The men looked a bit uneasy at his words, but he went on, "You say, 'How is Jesus this morning?' Jesus Christ is the same yesterday, today, and forever."

That evening Sammy's wife was startled to see coming up the little garden path of their home, which was near the camp, two British soldiers. Her heart nearly stopped with fear, for she was sure her husband had somehow offended the great British Raj. The men inquired for her husband, and he came to the door. They at once seized him by the hand and very earnestly they thanked him for his plucky speech of the morning. "After you had gone," they said, "some of us felt ashamed, and we had a talk about it, and my mate and I went off into the woods, and—well—there we gave our hearts together to the Lord Jesus Christ. We've come to tell you so, feeling that it is all through what you said."

The dark eyes twinkled with joy, and between the white men and their brown brother there ran that current of sympathy which moves too deep for racial hindrances and grapples souls together in eternal friendship.—The Presbyterian.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Louisville, Ohio

Our church here is very sympathetic with the College, in having in the past four Ashland graduates who have served as pastors. Also being the home of the Keims, who in the earlier days were of so much help to the school when it was struggling for an existence. At the present time Brother Robert Porte, another Ashland graduate, is their pastor.

Louisville is only eight miles from Canton and located in a beautiful section of Ohio.

The church here is in a very good working condition. Brother Porte is doing good work and is well liked. We have worked together before and it was a pleasure to be with him again. As an innovation, by invitation, we went over to Canton and had dinner at Brother Vanator's home, where seven preachers gathered around an appetizing table prepared by a good preacher's wife (Sister Vanator). Among those present were, Benshoff, Vanator, Byers, Eikenberry, Sands, Porte and Bell. It was a pleasant occasion and after the meal we went to church to the revival being conducted by Brother W. C. Benshoff of Pennsylvania. We heard a good sermon, saw seven baptized and others came forward and accepted the Lord.

The people at Louisville were very kind to us and I consider did well for the College. The church here is laying plans for making some needy improvements on the buildings, which they should have for their Bible school. The total gift was $2,401.00.

W. S. BELL.

TRAVEL FLASHES

Again, I have been traveling; again, away from my work in Ashland. The redeeming feature of my getting away from this pastorate is that I have so many here who can step into my place and, so far as the pulpit work is concerned, make my absence insignificant. A pulpit committee supplies from the professors and editors and others here, and all, I presume, are happy for the arrangement. These specialists have an opportunity to unbosom themselves, and the people have an opportunity to get their viewpoint and the students get to hear once or twice, each year, most of the leaders of these activities in our church. I have believed from the start that there could be no better arrangement than this for this church and besides, it offers me a chance to get to the places that seem to need help from other sources than those available at home.

Winchester, Virginia

This vacation, it was my lot to be called to the new church at Winchester, Virginia. Here, less than two years ago, a new brick church was dedicated; here, Brother Rohart was called to be the pastor, young, both in the ministry and in the faith. Here, had dwelt, for a good many years, some of our people and some from the Church of the Brethren separated from home churches almost too long to remember all about Brethren practices and ideals. Yet, they undauntedly went to work for a church where they might relearn them and win others to them. Their achievement is like a chapter from a modern "Acts of the Apostles." They are so near out of debt that they need not worry about that. Their plant is nice, adequate and well located. The field is full of prospects and of promise. Rohart has a place in the hearts of the people and has built up one of the finest of young people's choirs I have ever heard sing. They featured all our services with choruses and part singing. The city paper gave us from eight to twelve inches of front-page space every day but two for the three weeks we were there and never deleted a line. The largest crowds they ever had (so they said repeatedly), not excepting dedication, came to hear the gospel as plainly put as I could do it, and for a solid week, distinctively Brethren doctrines and practices.

Handicaps

Usual and unusual handicaps beset us. The pastor missed an entire week with the exception of one service with a severe case of laryngitis. Millennial Dawnists barked, carped and got, one evening, the plainest and most outspoken sermon I ever preached on the Rich man and Lazarus—or Heli. Immediate results were not all we had hoped for, but there are, perhaps adequate excuses. Some wanted to await the invitation of the pastor; some, await the summer so they (who had never had immersion) could go to the warm waters of the stream; some, alas! were convinced and yet, turned back to the allurements of the world. I believe many will yet turn to the Lord and the church be much strengthened. This word just came to me from Dr. Carpenter who conducted the communion and whose interest and friendship made my going there possible: "Two more came Sunday. Four more were baptized. About seventy communed, eight of them from the outside. (There are a good many friendly Church of the Brethren folks here) ... They were greatly pleased with you and I think more will come." Praise the Lord! It was at some sacrifice that I did this piece of work, and yet, the Lord will not forget. I had to borrow money at the bank to tide myself over some obligations, but I'll get through. Virginia hospitality pays much towards this. May the Lord be with these people and give them souls for whom they pray. Will the praying Brethren please put this church on your list that "they may keep the unity of the spirit in the bonds of peace." May many Brethren churches remind themselves of their responsibility towards evangelism and keep an eye on a church but two years old, who paid all but the traveling expenses of an evangelist towards a three-week's meeting that added many to their fold and made a whole town of ten thousand people "sit up and take notice" about their stand for the whole gospel. My year is now fully dated until August and some place can claim some of that month if they will. Winchester is on my heart. You will hear from them in the future.

CHARLES A. BAME.

MANUEL AND NAPFOR, KENTUCKY

The Mission Sunday school of Grapevine is very prosperous. On November 27th we had 52 in attendance, and in the preaching service that followed Brother Kinzie addressed us with a splendid sermon. His text was taken from the sixth chapter of Genesis and was very effectively delivered. Much interest is being taken in the work by the people of the community. After about a three mile hike over the hill and back we held our Sunday school and preaching services at Napfor with an attendance of 58. Brother Kinzie's sermon was a spiritual blessing. Thursday of last week we have a most helpful cottage prayer meeting at the home of E. M. Davidson. After songs and prayer, we read the eighth chapter of Romans and gave a talk based on 2 Timothy 2:22 and 1 Timothy 6:12. These mid-week services are proving very successful.

This is a field in which we need more Brethren workers, people of the kind who will actually do something.

Yours in the work of the Master,
E. M. DAVIDSON.

CANTON, OHIO

We thought it was about time that we broadcast a few thoughts from Canton. I do not remember when the last report appeared in the Evangelist, but I do know that it has been quite a while.

There is not so much to report in the way of "startling events" but as long as a church can report progress it means that the work is going forward. There has been a marked increase in the attendance and interest in the Sunday school. When the attendance falls near the 200 mark, we begin to take stock and see where the trouble is. At a recent business meeting of the church the same efficient corps of officers was re-elected for the year 1928. Under the leadership of Brother F. B. Lindower, the school has made fine advances and we expect it to be a fine "feeder" for new members in the church.

Each branch of the church, W. M. S., S. M. M., C. E. and organized classes are functioning well. The longer we are in the new church the more we wonder how we ever succeeded in the old.

The Canton church was benefitted by entertaining the State Conference in October. No church can help but feel an impulse to go forward after it has been host to a Conference.

Brother W. C. Benshoff of Waynesboro, Pennsylvania, was our evangelist for a three weeks' campaign from October 31st to November 21st. He has already made a short resume in the recent letter to the Evangelist readers. Brother Benshoff certainly preaches the Word with power and is fearless in proclaiming that Word against the sins of the day. We feel differently about such meetings than some do. We do not like to count results by the number of accessions to the church. Of course we are glad to see the membership multiplied, and this was done, there being seventeen added to the church by baptism and one by letter, but the greatest thought in our minds is, How much was the entire church strengthened? This too, we are sure can be answered on the credit side of the ledger. We never closed a service without a feeling that God had been in our midst. The weather throughout the meetings was almost ideal. But Old Man Sickness was very much in evidence among the membership of the church. Many of those who are always in evidence whenever the church doors open were kept away because of sickness. O how the devil works when God's messengers seek to fight him. The climax of the meeting was when we gathered together around the Lord's table on Monday evening, November 21st, Brother Benshoff very graciously remained for this service, although pressing duties called him towards home. One hundred partook of this blessed ordinance. The Canton church wants to thank Brother Benshoff in this public way for the splendid service he rendered while here.

We were also materially benefitted by the presence of Mrs. Grace Slack in the early part of October. Her messages were well received and we hope at some future time to be able to have her return for a longer time with us.

In his service,
FRED C. VANATOR, Pastor.

COLUMBUS, OHIO

The sixth of November Brother G. E. Swihart of Roann, Indiana, began a revival meeting here in the First Brethren church. His messages were inspiring and given in the power of the Spirit. They were intelligent, tender and earnest, and appealed to both saint and sinner. His effort was untiring; he was already always to visit the sick and to call upon the sinners and in the homes of the membership. The attendance was not large, but sickness interfered. A number were persuaded to accept Christ through the peraching of the Word by our brother, whom we recommend as an evangelist, one who is worthy to preach the Word anywhere. After two weeks' preaching by the evangelist, our pastor, Brother Gottschal, extended the meeting through the third week, preaching the Gospel with power. The result of the three weeks' effort was seventeen souls gave up sin to follow Christ. Several of the number were Sunday school pupils. There were four reclaimed, and we hope others are counting the cost. We thank and praise God for the good done through the labors of these faithful brethren. We beg an interest in the prayers of the faithful.

MRS. E. J. HORNE.

UNIONTOWN, PENNSYLVANIA

(From the Morning Herald)

At a meeting of the official board of the First Brethren church held last night, decision was reached to build a new church edifice for the congregation on a lot which the congregation owns at Union street and Highland avenue. Work is to begin at once.

The site is at present occupied by the church parsonage which it is planned to remove to the rear of the lot, facing Union street. The board decided that a complete foundation would be constructed for the new church home first while a temporary structure suitable for remodeling into a permanent church home will be erected on the foundation, as the board did not feel it was necessary to erect a permanent building at this time.

In the meantime an effort to dispose of the old church site at Union and Bryan streets will be made, the old church building having been demolished following the sinking of the foundation and the cracking of the walls when coal was removed from underneath the structure.

A committee to lay plans for the new church building was appointed, being comprised of A. R. Umbel, moderator of the church; Roy Keller, Jonas Conway and Isaac Shriver. In addition to these men the church board is comprised of the Rev. E. Forrest Byers, the pastor; J. H. Thompson, Charles Thompson, F. P. Ebbert, Joseph Thompson, S. W. Solomon, Mrs. F. P. Ebbert, Mrs. Idella Walters, Mrs. A. R. Umbel, Mrs. J. H. Thompson and Mrs. E. F. Byers.

FALLS CITY, NEBRASKA

The writer has been delegated by our pastor to report the work from this place, and we hope to submit a report at least quarterly.

The work is progressing here under the leadership of Rev. and Mrs. Rowsey. We, too, with Paul can say: "A great door and effectual is opened unto us, and there are many adversaries." Ways and means are in progress, however, to take advantage of the open door, and to counteract the activities of the adversaries.

During the month of August our pastor and wife were granted a vacation, which was utilized in the interest of Rev. Rowsey's health, and their attendance at National Conference. During this month other members, too, of the Ministerial Association were away, and our subtle adversary grasped the opportunity to again spring the opening of Sunday movies,—this election, over three years ago, an overwhelming majority voted against it.

Rev. Clarence L. Sickel visited the church here in August, and those privileged to attend his illustrated lecture on our work in Argentina were well repaid. It is gratifying to know that splendid work is being accomplished through the labor and devotion of our workers in that part of the field.

After our regular August W. M. S. meeting, the local society held a joint picnic, at the city park, with the Hamlin and Morrill societies, including the husbands of the members of the three societies. We were happy also to have with us at that time Rev. and Mrs. Claud Studebaker of Leon, Iowa.

Immediately after Conference Rev. and Mrs. Rowsey returned and assisted in the preparation for a big Rally Day. Rev. J. G. Dodds is general superintendent of the Sunday school. Mrs. Rowsey, Mrs. John Meyers, and Mrs. Claude Stumbo, superintendent of the Intermediate, Junior and Primary departments, respectively. Mrs. Chas. Heineman, Jr., is Sunday school pianist, and also contributes largely to the success of the choir and the ladies' chorus. The choir is doing good work with Mrs. H. H. Freese as leader, and she and Mrs. Stumbo deserve commendation for faithfulness, as their homes are almost eight miles out. Miss Lorena Lewis is our efficient church pianist. The ladies' chorus is an innovation here, and is under the leadership of Mrs. Rowsey. The Senior S. M. M. has been reorganized with Mrs. Rowsey as patroness, and we now also have a junior S. M. M. with Mrs. Meyers patroness. These auxiliaries recently gathered up clothing for our Kentucky missions, and are now working on scrap-books for them for Christmas. A senior Christian Endeavor, too, has been recently reorganized with Dallas Yoder president.

Our pastor makes special effort to create a greater interest in the mid-week service. By his invitation Rev. W. H. Schaffer, of Hamlin, and at another time Rev. L. A.

Meyers of Morrill, brought us helpful messages.

On his way to the Wid-west conference, Prof. C. L. Ashbach of Ashland favored us with a visit. He brought the Sunday morning message which was preparatory for our communion service which followed that evening. We were further blessed by having with us four elders to assist in this service, besides our pastor: Rev. John Burnworth, Rev. L. A. Meyers, Morrill, Kansas; Brother Spickerman, Maryville, Missouri, and Rev. J. G. Dodds.

Miss Gertrude Leedy, General Secretary of the W. M. S., stopped here after attending the Mid-west conference and gave an inspiring talk at our local W. M. S. We also entertained members of the Church of the Brethren missionary society at this time. A week later we accepted the invitation to meet with their society, and were privileged to hear Miss Sadie J. Miller, of Waterloo, Iowa, their missionary on furlough from India. Mrs. H. H. Freese is president of our W. M. S., and is endeavoring that we shall be a banner society. Creditable local work, too, in benevolences is carried on, and Thanksgiving Day a goodly number of boxes and baskets of food were given the needy.

For a number of years Miss Florence Cleaver has had charge of our city mission, and her efforts have been instrumental in adding to our Sunday school and church roll. The mission is at a strategic point in the south and as there is no church near. For years she also has done much good among the colored people, organizing, and having charge of their Sunday school.

Our County Sunday School Convention was held in a neighboring town in November, and its theme: "The Sunday School of Today, the Church of Tomorrow", gave inspiration for a number of able addresses. Rev. Rowsey's address was repeated by request at a Sunday evening service, it is timely and I wish that it might be reproduced in the "Evangelist."

Besides meeting our financial obligations, special day offerings, etc., the parsonage has been reroofed, and other repair work on both it and the church building has recently been done.

Our Sunday school is busily engaged in preparing a pageant for the Christmas service, and as we approach this happy season we cannot help but contrast the superior happiness of Christians observing this event, with those who celebrate it from a selfish motive. Our deepest sympathy especially goes out to the children, innocent victims of parents promoting atheism. Regardless of the A. A. A. ravings against God, and the Bible, they do, however, recognize the fact of Jesus birth every day "In the year of our Lord."

HOW ASHLAND COLLEGE WILL COMMEMORATE HER FIFTIETH ANNIVERSARY

1928 ushers in the fiftieth anniversary of the founding of Ashland College. To those who are directly connected with the school this means the completion of a half century of work as a Christian institution... a half century in which thousands of young men and women have been prepared for the leading of Christian lives.

It will be the aim of the Ashland College authorities to celebrate the school's golden anniversary in a fitting manner. Probably the most important thing on this program of celebration will be the publication of the yearbook, "Pine Whispers", which will come off the press next spring.

The whole purpose of the 1928 annual will be to commemorate this birthday of Ashland College. Whole pages of the book will be devoted to a complete history of the school. Even in such matters as the art theme which the book will embody, the commemorative idea of the book will be dwelt upon.

The 1928 "Pine Whispers" will not simply be the yearbook for 1928 but will cover the entire 50 years of work that Ashland College will have completed. It will be a book for the alumni of former years and for the patrons of the school, in whose hearts may burn a flame of honest pride in Ashland College.

An extraordinarily competent staff has been placed in charge of the printing of the 1928 yearbook. They have been at work since the beginning of school. A paid artist has been engaged by the staff for the execution of the numerous drawings and other art embellishments which will have a large place in the book.

In order to make the publication of this book possible, the staff is conducting a widespread campaign among the alumni and patrons of the school for subscriptions and advertising. A unique idea which is almost bound to take well, was the offering of the columns of the book to the various churches of the brotherhood to allow them to insert "good will" messages to the school.

It was the idea of the staff in doing this to invite the various churches to renew or confirm their brotherly relationship with their school. The church of Long Beach, California, has already responded, expressing a desire to be represented in the 1928 yearbook with a whole page in which they set forth their "good will" message for Ashland College.

More information may be had on this matter by corresponding with the Business Manager of the 1928 Pine Whispers, Ashland College, Ashland, Ohio.

BRIGHTON CHURCH

Our church here at Brighton is progressing under the able leadership of Rev. J. W. Brower who is serving his third year as pastor.

We have a splendid Christian Endeavor society with a membership of about 60 young folks. They have just finished a contest and are anxiously waiting for the banquet to be served by the losing side. In October we observed Rally Day. It is with grateful hearts we look back upon that eventful day. At Sunday school 97 were present. A short program was rendered by the children and then an appropriate sermon by our pastor. About 150 folks enjoyed the big basket dinner after which the afternoon program was enjoyed. The male chorus, numbering about 20, members of different churches (some of them of the Brethren church) sang a number of very fine songs which were indeed appreciated. Rev. McKeen, pastor of the Burr Oak M. E. church, had charge of the devotions. The speech was delivered by Judge Carlin of Angol. He gave a wonderful message.

Our W. M. S. is alive and active. On Saturday evening before Thanksgiving, the ladies gave a social for their families at the Old School House (I might mention here that Brighton has a beautiful new school, so we use the old one for social affairs). An enjoyable evening was spent with games, readings, songs, serving refreshments at the close.

We held our Communion service November 20, with about 50 members participating. It was a service long to be remembered, a spirit of love and fellowship was felt in the hearts of those present. The Communion service alone,—reminding us of Christ's love for us, how he suffered and died that we might live,—should make us truly thankful we are of the "Household of Faith." Oh, that we may be loyal and true to him, serving him as we never have before!

We are in the midst of a Christmas program at present, doing our best for the Lord at this busy season.

Our young folks are going Carol singing again this Christmas eve, hoping to bring a little cheer to the sick and shut-ins of our community. Praise the Lord for the young folks!

Pray for us, that we may be faithful.

BESSIE DIETRICK GROVE,

Corresponding Secretary.

The atheist seeks to build his life on a foundation of air. There can be nothing solid, for him, on which to build.

If all church members were real Christians there might be less war. There would be enough Christian force in most of the nations of the world to exert a strong influence on national policies and international relations. This would lessen the chances for misunderstanding and war. The probability of war would be further lessened by a definite stand against it by Christians who seek to educate the world away from the use of war for the settlement of misunderstandings to a reign of the Prince of peace.

LOVE GIFTS FOR THE KING

Mrs. Merle Hunter

Soon we shall come to enjoy Christmas Day, the day on which the most precious, the most priceless and the most loved of all heaven's treasures was given—as a love-gift to humanity—the baby Jesus. You all know the beautiful story; but now I am wondering if we can't make up another story in which you and I shall be the bearers of love gifts. We shall tell this story in the form of a fairy-tale, won't that be nice? You all love real stories—but I know you love "real fairy tales," too.

Once upon a time in a far away land lived a noble young prince. He lived in a large stone castle, with high turrets, and narrow windows, barred with iron rods. It did not look comfy and inviting as does your home and mine. But inside, all was beautiful. The prince's mother, had made the large bare rooms a veritable fairyland for her dear young prince. And in this atmosphere of quietness, and simplicity, the young Prince Beautiful grew to manhood. But he was lonesome, for he had no other children to play with; often his heart ached for a little brother or sister with whom he could play. But the only other friend he possessed besides his mother was an old man, his tutor, who taught him to play well the harp and flute, to shoot accurately with the bow and arrow, and to sing beautifully glad songs of joy.

One day he decided he should go down to the little village that lay snugly in the valley; that he should go in search of adventure. But I wonder just what kind of adventure it proved to be? Was it to kill dragons and lions, to conquer giants and enemies? No, indeed. Perhaps his boyish fancy once wafted him into these realms of "make believe"—but now he wanted to search for something that would quiet the burning lonesomeness within his little heart. So he set forth resolutely. As he wound his way down hill he met an old man whose clothes were tattered and dirty, who held out his hands for a few chance coins, and into the outstretched palms Prince Beautiful dropped five shining gold pieces. How happy was the old man; but ah! how happy was our hero! For he had learned the first lesson of helpfulness and love. The pain in his breast did not ache quite so fiercely now.

He went on and on until he came to the outskirts of the village. Here he met a group of urchins playing in the narrow street. He watched them closely for a time, and then asked if he too might join them in their game. So another drop of sorrow was gone from his heart, for he had won the confidence and love of children and now he was not quite so lonesome!

So on and on he went, stopping here to pilot an old man or woman upon his or her journey and there singing a happy song beneath the window of a poor little sick boy, giving shining and bright coins to needy ones whom he met, until evening called him to retrace his steps homeward.

I wonder what kind of a happy heart, he,

Prince Charming, possessed that night? I wonder if love and kindness did not reflect from his eager hungry heart and face? I wonder if his smile was not sweeter because he had made others happy that day? Just wonder most of all, what a wonderful story he had to tell his mother that evening. Can you guess?

Wouldn't we like to be Prince Charming? Wouldn't we like to give our time, our talents, our money, our praises, our hearts, and most of all—all our love—to Jesus by helping other boys and girls to be happy and gay?

Wouldn't it be a grand adventure to try to be a Prince Charming in our homes, in school, in church, and in play? I wonder if we cannot try to make our little gifts of love, the sweetest and best part of our lives? If so, then we have made Jesus happy, for that is the great mission he has for boys and girls, to make people sweet and loving, kind and true. May we all learn that "It is more blessed to give than to receive."

SUNDAY SCHOOL ORDERS

At ten o'clock, Saturday morning the 17th, every Sunday school quarterly for which we had received orders to that hour was in the mails, so if there should be any schools that do not receive their quarterlies in time for distribution the last Sunday in the quarter the fault will not be ours; but it will be because the order was not sent to us in time.

Of course there is some congestion in the mails during the Christmas season which might cause some delay in a few instances, but we are quite sure everything left the Ashland Post Office promptly.

The Brethren Evangelist

We have received a number of renewals from our Honor Roll churches since our last report of such, one being received in this morning's mail, but we will not report them until a little later.

The point we want to make in this corner today is, the importance of pressing to a conclusion the matter of new subscriptions as a result of our sending out hundreds of papers to a number of our churches for the last three months for advertising purposes. Has our advertising been in vain? Or has the efforts of the pastors who have distributed these papers been in vain? I am afraid this will prove to be true in a very large sense unless a following up with personal suasion is diligently applied.

To assist in this matter we have mailed out subscription blanks to all to whom we have been sending these papers and we trust these blanks may be returned to us in a couple of weeks with a generous increase of Evangelist subscriptions.

Conference Minutes

We have received remittances from a number of pastors to whom Conference Minutes were mailed, and there has been some demand for more copies. They can be sold, if a slight effort is made to do so.

We still have a few copies on hand which we will be glad to mail to any one at twenty-five cents each.

Christmas

We wish all our readers a merry Christmas and a Happy New Year, and the only Christmas present we ask is a THOUSAND new subscriptions to the Evangelist.

Is that asking too much? If you think so, tell us why.

world, the flesh, the devil, and death itself we pray with Paul for the power of the resurrection to overcome the great foe of our lives.

As we sing the beautiful anthems of the birth of our Lord into this world we know in our hearts he went back to the Father's glory and throne where he faithfully performs the office of interceding for us. Always for us, day or night, in sickness or health, in sorrow or joy.

And we have a longing, a hope in our hearts, to see this same Jesus coming again as the disciples saw him go away into heaven. As we sing about the angels heralding his entrance into his humiliation to seek and to save the lost from sin another song springs up in our souls, this same Jesus will come again with the glory of the Father, and call up the believers both living and dead from the dominion of sin to meet him in the air; and so shall we ever be with the Lord. As we sing, "As Shepherds Watched their Flocks by Night", we also sing with David,

"My soul waiteth for the Lord more than they that watch for the morning."

Christ has been born in our hearts, and he is in us the hope of Glory.

"Come, then, and added to thy many crowns,
Receive yet one, the crown of all the earth,
Thou who alone art worthy. It was thine
By ancient covenant, ere nature's birth;

And thou hast made it thine by purchase since
And overpaid its value in thy blood."

The Christmas Star

By Ona Lee Sams

Every year we have the Christmas story, and it never grows old. Every year we feel the same sweet thrill on Christmas Eve, with its gladness and its sorrows, when we think that many years ago a tiny heart began to beat, a heart that bled to save all mankind in the long years to come, in Eternity. Who among us has not tried to vision the Christmas star on that night? We try to imagine its brilliance in the dusky, oriental sky. And how happily this, of all heaven's stars must have twinkled, for did it not help disseminate the most glorious tidings of all time—the birth of the Babe of Bethlehem, the lowly Nazarene?

With memories of the first Christmas star, we must keep in our minds that we still have this wonderful sign. We know now of his birth, his life, his death and resurrection, and today the star that watches over us, guides us and inspires us is the Star of Promise that he's coming again. Radiant star of a wonderful promise! May this shine in our hearts as did the Christmas Star of old! May it guide us now, as did the first one guide the wise men—to the Babe of Bethlehem!

Things By the Way---V

By A. D. Gnagey, D.D.

Time—What Is It?

Time—all time is but a speck of eternity which God hands to us each morning and which we hand back to him at night stained or unstained. Like ancient Gaul, all time is divided into three parts, past, present, and future. But is not that an arbitrary division? There is a past, and there is a future,—the one lives in memory, the other in our faith and hope. But the present exists only in our consciousness. Speaking accurately, the present is an imaginary moment only. It does not exist in reality. The line that separates your farm from your neighbor's has no width,—it is an imaginary line which has length only. The moment of time between the future and the past we call present, but it is an imaginary moment. It is a line over which the future passes to become past. That which was future when I began this paragraph is now the past, and it is securely, inexorably in the hands of God,—no longer in ours, and never will be again. The future is uncertain, the present is forever fluctuating. the past only is secure. Time is measureless: the past, because there is too much of it; the present, because there is not enough of it; the future, because it is inexhaustible.

What is the practical value of all this? Has it any? Very much, indeed. We cannot change the past. It is inexorably fixed. It is all wasted energy to worry and fret over it. It is out of our control. The future only is ours. While these imaginary moments we call the present pass from the future into the past we build life and character. With these bits of time destiny is determined. Will these moments become rich treasures for you and me, securely laid up in the past? We are not allowed a year at a time; not even a day,—just a moment, an imaginary moment at that, yet upon our treatment of these moments everything depends. We are building LIFE, we are forming CHARACTER, with bits of time too small to measure. It becomes fearfully and awfully disturbing as we think of the rapidity with which these moments pass across the narrow plane of human existence. "The character of each man's past is determined by the character of his present. Events that have come cast their sheen or their shadow behind. We begloom or glorify our past by the style and conduct of our living in the present." Let us be thoughtful, and serious, as the clock upon the wall ticks out the old year and ticks in the new. "Happy is the man whose past and present and future are trusted to the faithful hands of Jesus."

"He Done His Best"

Among the most beautiful and impressive thoughts ever carved upon a memorial stone was the tribute to the life and character of an Arizona prospector who died in the hills. The men had worked and bunked together in the mountains and on the plains for years. In sunshine and in storm; in prosperity and through the discouragements of hard luck, they had shared the fortunes of the wild western battlefield. One day the deadly pneumonia laid hold of the miner who had shared his meal and blankets with even the patient burro that had carried their "grub stake" of flour and bacon and beans over the snowy range. He turned his face to the wall of the spruce log cabin and bid his partner goodbye before he crossed "over the range." And the grief-stricken partner, in an effort to perpetuate his name and memory, carved upon the huge boulder which marked his last resting place these words: "He done his best." That was all; but what a tribute, coming from the heart of the friend who carved it on the rude tomb with the drill and pick they had used together when they sought to wrest fortune from the miserly rocks of the solitary hills. The poor grammar does not detract from the lofty sentiment and the fine tribute from the one who knew him best.

As the year 1927 goes out, and we stand on the threshold of the new year, looking backward rather than forward for a moment, dare we honestly hope that the words carved on that rude tomb in the far west, would be a fitting tribute to our name and memory? Have we "done" our best? Jesus never paid a worthier tribute to any human being than, when in substance, he said that of Mary of Bethany, "She hath done what she could" are words that should stir the heart of all Christian womanhood. It is a noble monument Jesus of Nazareth erected to the memory of Mary of Bethany. Shall he ever be able to say that of you and me?

Weigh Yourself

At this time of the year merchants and business men take an inventory of their stock. It is a wise thing to

The New Year

By J. D. Templeton

*I am the New Year, and I come to you unstained, Fresh from the hand of God.
Each day, a precious pearl, to you is given
That you must string upon the silver thread of Life.
Once strung can never be unthreaded but stays
An undying record of your faith and skill.
Each golden minute link you then must weld into the chain of hours
That is no stronger than its weakest link.
Into your hands is given all the wealth and power
To make your life just what you will.
I give to you, free and unstinted, twelve glorious months
Of soothing rain and sunshine golden;
The days for work and rest, the nights for peaceful slumber.
All that I have I give with love unspoken.
All that I ask—you keep the faith unbroken!*

—Success Magazine (New York)

do. It is imperative that men should know whether they are gaining or losing in a material way. But would it not be equally wise to take stock of their intellectual and spiritual gains or losses? It is said that on a single free scale in front of an Indianapolis retail store, an average of 800,000 persons a year weigh themselves. The estimated population of the city is 372,000. The count was made with a recording device over a period of six years. It is an average record of 5,000 a day. What is it all about? What is the idea of this weighing of human bodies? The answer lies in the universal curiosity of man about himself. People are interested in themselves, but mostly in a material way. It is quite easy to take a measurement of the body, height and weight, but not quite so easy to take a measurement of the mind's gain. The body is more obvious than the mind, and for that reason gets most of its owner's attention. It is a good habit, this habit of weighing oneself, but it should not be confined to the body; an inventory of our spiritual condition and capacity for usefulness is of still greater importance. It is a religious duty to keep well, to be scrupulously concerned about our physical health, but we need also to take an inventory of our mind capacity, and soul capacity. What has been our mental growth during this year of grace, and what have been our spiritual gains? The sum total of what we do, and of what we say, and of what we think, and of what we believe is an exponent of our character, and character is a matter of supreme importance.

When New Year Comes

Have you any old grudge you'd like to pay,
Any wrong laid up from a bygone day?
Gather them all now, and lay them away
When New Year comes.

Hard thoughts are heavy to carry, my friend,
And life is short from beginning to end;
Be kind to yourself, leave nothing to mend
When New Year comes.

In this little poem by William Lytle I have changed the word "Christmas" to "New Year" which destroys neither the rhythm nor meter.

The Unseen Captain of 1928

By E. A. Duker

Again, we approach a New Year, and as we do so, we anticipate, we hope, we desire, that as we enter and continue day after day, that we shall do well, both in things temporal and spiritual. As a result of our failures of the past year, failures by doing the wrong thing or by doing nothing at all, we are anxious for the new unit of time, better known as the New Year, that in it we may write a better record, knowing that as we do so, our own lives will be happier, the lives of those we touch will be happier, and eternity will be sweeter.

As the bells formally announce the change from the old to the new, people will differ in their evaluation of the passing year, according as they feel that the old year has dealt kindly, or otherwise with them. But regardless of their attitude towards the receding year, there will be a common question in their minds relative to the new year, i. e., "What does the New Year hold for me? What of the year 1928? Will it bring joy or sorrow? Does it hold prosperity or failure for me? Is it nights of weeping, or deep joys?" We, like Joshua, out of the experiences of the past have learned that the future holds conflicts. Joshua had traveled many, many days and months and years with Moses as he led the children of Israel, and had seen the conflicts of his fellowmen with varied opponents resulting in both successes and failures.

"As captain of the host of the Lord am I now come," said the stranger to Joshua. It was at this point that Joshua had assumed the leadership of the people, and while behind him lay the wilderness with its fiery serpents, its hunger and thirst, and as well the God given manna; in front of him and his people lay the great unexplored and uncertain future. Here is where this word from the Book links itself with us today. As for Joshua, so for us, there will be plains of easy travel and there will be strong walled Jerichos. We, like him, will find ourselves crying out, wanting to know whether the approaching forms are from the Lord or from Jericho. And while the vision that came to Joshua did reveal to him a most wonderful fact, yet it did not pull aside the curtain of the future and show the future's holdings. It seems to be a human tendency to want to know the future before we approach it, but along with the many other definite principles that God ordained, he has willed that only as the hour unfolds itself may we know its gifts to us. The facts remain, however, regardless of human tendencies, that if we will but learn these God-given principles—and they are unchangeable—and then direct our lives to co-ordinate with them, our efforts to anticipate are quite unnecessary.

You will recall that Joshua was informed that he who came was "Captain of the host of the Lord", and while this did not mean that there would be no struggle, nor disappointments, nor that they should lay claim to the promised land without effort, it did reveal the presence of God and his interest in their labors. And while you and I do wonder about and hope for what the year of 1928 contains for us, we, too, know that the curtain will not be drawn back for us, but we need to learn with Joshua the presence of God and his interest in our efforts. Yes, we need to recall not only these words from the Old Testament, but the more recent words of God as given by his Son, and our Savior, the words of our second, Matthew 28:20, "Lo, I am with you always", and while we crave the knowledge of the future's holdings, it seems to me that a far greater asset at this the beginning of another New Year is to know who is to be "Our Unseen Captain of 1928." What is there that can compare in value to the Christian in his struggles and conflicts, as to have the assurance of the presence of the Lord. After all that is the greatest thing that can come to us. We do not really want the revelation of what the future holds, but the consciousness of the presence of the Lord of Hosts. What could encourage us more?

The statement of Jesus which we have quoted was not the inauguration of a new principle but rather the bringing to their attention this age old truth that God lends his presence to the efforts of his children. We so often overlook these established and fixed things in life and thereby eliminate from our lives so much of happiness and encouragement. Listen, will you, to these altogether satisfying words of him who has never failed in the fulfillment of his promises,—“Lo, I am with you always.”

Dear Christian friends, we shall have fields of sunshine as well as fields of shadows, the plains as well as the trying steep, the placid waters as well as those that surge and break and toss us too and fro, these shall be much the same as in 1927, but our happiness in all these conditions will be measured by our consciousness of the presence of our Lord. The Unseen Captain of 1928 must be known to "walk and talk with me." Without doubt when the time came for Joshua with his men to use their seemingly peculiar method in conquering Jericho, those within the city could not understand their manner of attack, nor their fearless attitude in the struggle, but to those marching their conduct did not seem strange because they were conscious of the presence of the "Captain of the host of the Lord." And so as we go forward into this New Year, may our consciousness of the presence of the Lord be so effectual as to cause us to show a different attitude in our joys, and in our struggles from the attitude of those in the Jerichos of sin. May we so live as to reveal to the world the value of the presence of the Unseen Captain of 1928, and if we do, this new unit of time will be a most wonderful year for us and for our Lord.

The New Year

By George W. Truett

As we stand at the portals of another New Year season, when the Carols of Joy and Peace, and Good Will fill all the air, let me voice for you and yours, as for myself, the prayerful wish that the larger meanings of the old-time Christmas Carols may be more deeply written in our own and other lives, today, and through all days to come.

At this accustomed Season, when old friendships are renewed and new ones cemented, let us sing anew our most grateful song—that our lives have been planted in such a joyful fellowship of kindred life, with its wondrous power to gladden and uplift—for our homes and loved ones, for our friends and friendships, for the high privileges of thought and health and work—and for our highest welfare, both for today and the long tomorrow, at the hands of Infinite Love.

While the Old Year goes and the New Year comes, may we be highly resolved that no bitter thoughts and cynical complaints, no poisonous seeds of discord and ill-will, shall be carried with us into the challenging days ahead; that nothing petty or grovelling shall mar our future plans and deeds; that we will henceforth be courageously inhospitable toward that which harms mankind, and aggressively cooperative with that which helps; and that we will ever seek to leaven all the circles of life, with the spirit of the Golden Rule.

When transfiguring visions are given us on the mountain heights, may we hasten to the vales below, where human lives and humanity-lifting causes send forth their poignant plea for our worthiest help. May we wisely discern that all life's talents are given us, not for ourselves alone, but also in trust for others, and that such talents will surely work for our disaster, if we fail to employ them in unselfish service. May we acutely realize how vast a trust is our earthly life, and that its twelve brief hours shall soon be gone. May we diligently strive to fill all these hours with thinking serene and high; to do all our work with unfaltering fidelity and good cheer; to be worthily mindful of all who journey with us; and so to devote our lives in altruistic and sacrificial service, that our work shall live on beyond the day when our voices shall be hushed into the last silence. Likewise, may we realize that the tragedy of life is not poverty, pain nor hardship, but it is the shallow and dilettante interest in the highest objectives; that only by obedience to life's crowning purposes can life be abidingly happy and useful, and be finally saved from the tormenting memory of unaccepted responsibility; and that this is the only way whereby life's sunny days may be made enduring.

If in our cup shall be mixed both joy and sorrow, prosperity and adversity, may we emerge from all our ways, like gold from the refiner's fire. May our steadfast faith in the Changeless Friend keep us undismayed and unembittered, amid all the mysteries and bludgeonings that may attend our journey. May every disappointment turn into blessing, and every care uplift us as with wings. And, as we go on, may be sure that around our incompleteness flows his greatness, round our restlessness his rest, and that nothing but our own wilfulness shall ever separate us from his encompassing love. May we avoid the easy error of placing first things second, and wisely see that Eternity and Time are so inseparably blended, that both are to be faithfully reckoned with, if we are wisely to interpret either. If our hearts are sometimes sick from hope deferred; if burdens are sometimes laid upon us which test our own faith and strength, if dark anomalies arise which are beyond our ken, may we refuse to waste one hour in futile worries, in vain regrets, in idle dreams, but may we be true to the highest light we have, till brought through battle smoke and weltering struggle to life's final Sunset.

Until the final Sunset comes, may all be well with us and ours, through all the coming, changeful days. And when the Sunset fades to Dark, and we are called to say "Good Night" to those we love, may fears be gone, because the Dark shall quickly break to Dawn. And with the Morning Light, may we go above, from the Land of Loss to the Land of Love, where Love shall ever have its own, in that ampler Home where fondest dreams come true, where Life shall be commensurate with its deepest longings, and where we shall ever live on in highest service.—The Christian Index.

Threshold of the New Year

We are standing on the threshold, we are in the opened door,

We are treading on a border land we have never trod before.

Another year is opening, and another year is gone;

We have passed the darkness of the night; we are in the early morn;

We have left the fields behind us o'er which we scattered seed;

We pass into the future which none of us can read.

The corn among the weeds, the stones the surface mold

May yield a partial harvest; we hope for sixtyfold.

Then hasten to fresh labor, to thresh and reap and sow,

Then bid the new year welcome, and let the old year go—

Then gather all your vigor, press forward in the fight,
And let this be your motto, "For God and for the right."

—The Advance.

A Weak Spot

By G. W. Rench D.D.

An awkward caption, say you? Yes, but read on. I mean in our use—or rather non-use of tracts. I know that many will read no further, now that my purpose is known. But something ought to be said about this matter, and since no one else wishes to say it, the opening is left for me.

The Publication Board sensing the need of using tracts consistently appointed a Tract Committee to arouse interest in this neglected department of our work. It may not have been the best plan for our Board to do this, but there was no other agency doing this work, and since each publication must stand upon its own merits rather than upon some official stamp, we could see no harm in trying to do something in this line of work.

Last year a fine piece of agitation and education was accomplished by weekly items from the very able pen of Elder R. F. Porte. It is to be regretted that Brother Porte could not see his way clear to continue that fine work. I know some few churches were led to begin the distribution of tracts from that agitation. The plan was bearing fruit.

This leads me to say that our people through conference and otherwise have shown marked ability in originating good movements in order to advance the church of our choice, but it seems to me sometimes that we are the worst quitters on earth. We are all the time "trying out something." If there were not so very many well marked paths for us to travel, it might be some excuse to try one thing one year and another thing another year. We are everlastingly getting ready to get ready to do something, in spite of the fact that all of the older denominations have traveled over the same ground and their experience is an open book before us. Why should we be trying experiments in the Lord's work when others have tried them for us? Conference appoints a committee to study some phase of work, and before that committee can get a hold on the situation, it is supplanted by another, and that by another, until most men feel at once that there is no use spending energy on his task for he will be changed next year anyhow. This pernicious change, change, change, in the local congregation, in the district conference, in the General conference, has made us appear like a lot of amateurs, not knowing what we are trying to do. Members of committees do not take their work seriously, because its members know that but little is expected of them, and perhaps, will never be called upon for a report.

The other day I opened a religious paper which I have been taking and reading for many years, and I saw a full page advertisement headed in great staring letters like this,—

"He Picked Up a Soiled Tract

But it pointed the way to a clean life."

Then followed many testimonials as to how this Christian worker had been enlisted by the use of a tract, and how groups of workmen had been led to decide for a clean life by the little tract placed in their hands by some thoughtful Christian worker. James says, "Even so the tongue is a little member, and boasteth great things. Behold how great a matter a little fire kindleth!" I like to think of tracts as tongues, tongues without stings however, delivering their little message in love. If denounced in anger, it will not talk back. So, "Behold, how great a matter a little fire kindleth!"

The problem of "isolated members" is a real one for every congregation. The leak from the membership has been made a difficult problem by the "goody, goody, no difference what you believe, if you are sincere", stuff that has been preached to them. If each congregation would appoint a sympathetic committee on "Removed Members", a committee willing to take its work seriously, enlisting all such members in a neat book kept for that purpose, writing them regularly, sending them a tract suitable for their individual needs, enclosing mission offering envelopes, notices of communions, and above all making sure they get the Brethren Evangelist, by offering it for half price, the church paying the other half, making them feel that at each quarterly meeting their names would be reported to the congregation, with the letters written, tracts sent, etc., the pastor meeting with this committee often, offering kindly, sympathetic advice, many a family would be saved to the FAITH, TO THE FAITH, I say; and out of that family might come a Bashor or a Swihart, or a Brown, or a Dr. Gribble, or a Florence Bickel. Would not such a work be worth while? Shipshewana, Lake, Indiana.

We all of us exercise unconscious ministries. When we never dream we are affecting anybody we are touching and turning others all the time. We fret, and others feel our fretting, though never a syllable has passed our lips. We play the game, and just because we play it, folk we have never heard of play it better. We sing at midnight because God is with us, and prisoners in other cells are cheered.—G. H. Morrison.

New Year Resolve

Before making all your New Year resolutions, it would be well to thoughtfully and prayerfully read the following lines of this New Year resolution as found in the British Weekly:

"I will start afresh this New Year with a higher, fairer creed;

I will cease to stand complaining of my ruthless neighbor's greed;

I will cease to sit repining while my duty's call is clear;

I will waste no moment whining, and my heart shall know no fear.

"I will look sometimes about me for the things that merit praise;

I will search for hidden beauties that elude the grumbler's gaze;

I will try to find contentment in the paths that I must tread;

I will cease to have resentment when another gets ahead.

"I will not be eswayed by envy when my rival's strength is shown;

I will not deny his merit, but I'll try to prove my own; I will try to see the beauty spread before me, rain or shine;

I will cease to preach your duty and be more concerned with mine."

THE BRETHREN PULPIT

Success for the New Year

By W. R. Deeter

TEXT: Brethren, I count not myself yet to have laid hold; but one thing I do, forgetting the things which are behind, and stretching forward to the things which are before, I press on toward the goal unto the prize of the high calling of God in Christ Jesus.—Philippians 3:13-14.

Once more the old world stands expectant. Forgotten are the blows which Fate has struck; forgotten are our hopes that died in the bud; forgotten the bitterness of strife, and the dim spent day. Through the archway of the East, just as it came long ago, when Jesus was there with his key to unlock the glorious future with his love and goodwill to men, comes the New Year with all its hidden gifts. One promise,—yes ONE—the New Year will surely make good. It will show us into a new house where never man nor woman has set foot. In that house are 366 rooms. By the term of the lease the tenant must live and labor in each room for only one day, pass on and live in the next.

In considering one's success in the new year there is much to be learned from the lives of successful men. The life story of an eminently successful man is found in the New Testament—always successful as he understood it. He discovered it after his conversion, and realized the Christian ideal always more and more. He thinks of it as a goal to be attained by the high calling of God in Christ Jesus. Success indeed! When we are what God wants us to be, we are a success in the highest and truest sense. It is fully assured.

Saint Paul's conditions for success may not altogether be intended for the new year, yet we can see this application:

I. Forgetting the Past. "Forgetting the things which are behind."

January first is a new start. Take down the old calendar before getting away from the old; it is not possible to live in both the old and the new year, nor to look back and to go forward. "No man having put his hand to the plow and looking back is fit for the kingdom of God." Think of Lot's wife. The one who has his face to the past becomes a pillar.

How about each of those rooms? Living in just one day at a time! We move in with our own belongings—not even a new habit being a gift of any presiding fairy. If one permits any disorder, there will be no opportunity to re-arrange things. Once a room is left he cannot go back and tidy it up. As the occupant steps out the door it is locked against him forever. But are we going to make any mistake? By mustering our good desires we may have a great bundle of resolutions. If we are WISER than a year ago, we should know more just how to put them into effect so as to count much for success.

1. There are things to forget:

a. Losses. All have them more or less. Shall they disturb our nerves? Shall they block the way, or, rob us of initiative? Will they prostrate one in hopeless despair? Not if there is to be success. In that case "what cannot be cured, must be endured." Besides, some losses are necessary for larger success. The onions and garlic of Egypt were poor treasures compared to the milk and honey of the promised land. LOSSES? Let us forget them.

b. Gains. Sometimes they are more perilous than losses. It is easier for a camel to go through a needle's eye than to attain success through great gain. Newly found riches often send one farther from the goal of success than when he is poor. Gain, like loss, may be the means the Creator provides to an end—that end being his ideal for us in character and conduct, in fitness and service. Our substance is not to be hoarded, but to be kept in circulation for the Master. When held too tightly it paralyzes head, heart and hand. Desired for one's own sake, it degrades life to the level of earthly treasure that moth and rust corrupt, and keeps from the heavenly treasure. Gains should be considered as rungs in the ladder, steps in the stairway, that leads to loftier heights. Some things must be left behind, forgotten, if higher levels are to be attained.

c. Heartaches—those caused by wrongs. Leave them to God. "I will repay, sayeth the Lord." Those caused by failure. Have a Heavenly Father. He knoweth our frame, and will remember we are his children. Have a Savior. He forgives.

II. Looking Forward and Upward. "Stretching forward to the things which are before."

The forward look is "toward the goal—of the high calling of Christ." It is the only right forward look. The Golden Age is before us. The best is yet to be. Look for the best you can be and do, in the glorious future, wherein are greater things to be wrought than eye has seen, or ear heard. "Stretching forward" or "straining forward", to that goal—that is the attitude of the successful man or woman for the new year.

III. Concentration on Attaining the Goal. "This one thing I do," "I press toward the goal."

The world has no prize for the loiterer; life has no reward for the lazy; the future no victory for the indiffer-

A Happy New Year

*Faith that increaseth
Walking in light;
Hope that aboundeth,
Happy and bright;
Love that is perfect,
Casting out fear—
These shall insure thee
A happy New Year.*

*Peace in the Savior,
Rest at his feet,
Smile of his countenance,
Radiant and sweet;
Joy in his presence, ent; the New Year no success for the satisfied. There are no more worlds to conquer, no loftier heights to climb, no greater works to do, and there is no better man to be, for him who fritters time and scatters energy.

But everything awaits the man of concentration and wholehearted aim. The intense man makes himself felt; the soul on fire kindles a flame in the hearts of others.. With the high calling of true success in Christ as the goal, and all the powers of the body, soul, and spirit engaged to realize it, SUCCESS in the new year is assured. West Alexandria, Ohio.

Our Sons

By H. A. Gossard

Blood of our blood, and bone of our bone,— Stalwart or weak!—shall they be Falt'ring or brave when they face life alone?
Be slaves while they live, or be free?

Blood of our blood, and bone of our bone,
Will they, in the front ranks, be Able to conquer the Foe,—or be prone
To fear him, and cowardly flee?

Blood of our blood?—Yes, the selfsame stock!—
Sons not of fate:—they shall be Girdled with truth;—and shall stand like a rock
'Gainst things that are wrong for the free.

For them there is a battle in life;
Keen is the sword they may wield.
Theirs is a crown if they win in the strife;
The world is their broad open field.

The war's the same to son as to sire,—
Armor the same;—but the day
Is lost or won by the aim ere the fire,—
And value of gain in the fray.

They can win, if they will, by the Truth;
Nothing against it can stand.
Men of the past conquered by it,—Our youth
Can win if they heed its command.

Knowing it's human to err,—we detect
Evil's ambitious design:—
We will trust in our sons,—and correct
To pardon must then be divine.

Shall they walk in the light of their sires,—
Or grope in the dark for a trail?
Shall they kindle at our altars their fires,—
Or be forced to the way of Baal?

Lanark, Illinois.

DR. MOFFATT'S DEFENSE OF THE AUTHORIZED VERSION

Dr. James Moffatt, who is so well known as the translator of the Bible into modern English, astonished the ministerial gathering at Hampsted recently by making a surprising defense of the ancient English translation of the Bible. The great thing, he declared, was to make the Bible real to the people, and in one case he would stir their minds by using modern versions and in another by urging loyalty to the Authorized Version. In America, he said, he astonished people by beseeching them to stick to the old version. The statement apparently almost took away the breath of his hearers.—Irish Christian Advocate.

DAILY READINGS AND COMMENT

(Clip and put in your Bible for convenience)

MONDAY

IN HOMAGE TO CHRIST—Luke 10:38-42. "She had a sister called Mary which also sat at Jesus' feet." Mary bowing in deep and passionate adoration of the Lord Jesus presents us a picture of the human soul sitting apart from the world, as was John on Patmos, quietly, earnestly yearning for the "heavenlies" which fill the whole horizon. Paradoxical though it may seem, it is as one sits low at Jesus' feet drinking in the sweet words that fall from his lips, that he rises to the highest summits of delight and vision.

TUESDAY

THE WAY TO POWER—Matt. 25:20-23. "Thou hast been faithful over a few things, I will make thee ruler over many things." The way to power is through the lowlands of humility, over the rocks of difficulty and up the steep of faithfulness. The goal is not reached by a leap and a bound, but by long and arduous toil. Jesus did not discount ambition, but he did insist that leadership and power belonged to those who were willing to pay the price. One must learn to follow before he can make a good leader; he must know how to obey before he can effectively issue commands. The way Jesus pointed out, was the way he himself had walked.

WEDNESDAY

THE FLOURISHING LIFE—Gen. 49:22-24. "Joseph is a fruitful bough, a fruitful bough by a fountain; his branches run over the wall." (R. V.). Two things were characteristic of Joseph,—he was ever dreaming, and ever making his dreams come true. He never found a place of rest, or of satisfaction with what he had achieved; he was always reaching upward and onward. No place was big enough long to contain him; he filled every position in his rapid rise to the full and running over. His branches were ever spreading and running over the walls. And the source of his marvelously flourishing life was the fountain of living water in which he was rooted.

THURSDAY

THE VIRTUE OF STABILITY—Heb. 13:7-9. "Be not carried away with divers and strange doctrines." One of the outstanding elements of success is the ability to stick to a task or hold to a theory until every possibility of success has been tried out. Weakness at this point is the cause of many failures. It is especially true in religion. Instability leads to superficial faith, lopsided views of truth and disappointment in the end.

FRIDAY

WHEN JESUS SPEAKS—Luke 7:36-50. "And Jesus answering said unto him, Simon, I have somewhat to say unto thee. And he saith, Master, say on." It is well for us to do just what Simon did when Jesus desires to speak to us—say, "Master say on." What he says may not be just what we would like to hear, but it will be what is best for us. He may lay bare the scorn, the prejudice, the egotism, the self-righteousness that is in our hearts, but if we hear him patiently and sympathetically he will show us how to overcome our littleness and to rise to a measure of the stature of his magnanimity.

SATURDAY

THE COMPASSION OF JESUS—Mark 1:40-45. "And Jesus, moved with compassion, put forth his hand and touched him, and saith unto him, I will; be thou clean." Let us read again, very thoughtfully, the story of the Good Samaritan. We are touched by his tenderness and sympathy. His being "moved with compassion" is strikingly like the picture of the Master himself. That is the way the world is to learn of the compassionate heart of the Lord Jesus—by the exemplification of it in the conduct of his followers.

SUNDAY

GOD'S CHALLENGE—Mal. 3:10. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, . . . and prove me now herewith, saith the Lord of hosts." The church will never know the spiritual enrichment, the financial prosperity and the rapid advancement of the Kingdom that God has in store for that people that will accept his program until it has the courage and consecration to accept his challenge. For one thing, it will give a sense of partnership with God that will take away all thought of sacrifice and hardship.—G. S. B.

LESSON LIGHTS

Introductory Note

Mark's Gospel does not give the childhood and boyhood of Jesus. It begins with him as he is ready for his ministry and we find him in Galilee. Our lesson today finds Jesus in Capernaum and the surrounding towns of Galilee, in the month of May, A. D. 28, the second year of his ministry. On the Sabbath he preaches in the synagogue and casts out an unclean spirit. After service he goes to Simon Peter's house and cures his mother-in-law of a fever, and in the evening he healed many sick and demon-possessed that were brought to him. The Sabbath over, Jesus goes early in the morning to a private place to pray and when his disciples come upon him, he starts upon a preaching tour through Galilee.

Comments on the Text

21. They, Jesus and the four fishermen he had just called, go into Capernaum where for many months Jesus made his headquarters. It was on the northwest shore of the Sea of Galilee. And straightway on the sabbath day he entered into the synagogue. A place of assembly, like our modern church. Jesus was a good church goer, and set us all a good example.

Doubtless he preached here as he did in his home town of Nazareth, as recorded in Luke 4:16-29. The preacher was accustomed to sit while speaking to the people. Sitting gave a familiar conversational tone to his preaching as if he were talking from his heart to friends and neighbors. There were no flights of oratory, but a wonderful message, illustrated by parable and story, so simple that all could understand. He preached in every possible method by which he could reach the hearts of men.

Another example of his preaching is given in Matthew 11:28-30. "Come unto me, all ye that labor and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of me; for I am meek and lowly in heart; and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light."

22. Taught ... authority. He spoke as one who knew all things, for he did know. Scribes. The learned people of the Jews, the teachers.

23. Unclean spirit. Called unclean, because he made the man unclean, unholy, vile in body and soul.

25. Hold thy peace. The testimony of a bad spirit would injure a good cause. Even the truths a liar tells are thought to be lies.

27. A new teaching. Referring to both matter and manner. And they obey him. His miracles added authority to his words.

30. Simon's wife's mother, who apparently lived with them. There are several references to Peter's wife in the New Testament. Sick or a fever. Luke says a great fever; i. e., of a severe malignant type. There was much marshy land in the neighborhood.

31. Took her by the hand. To express his kindly sympathy and courtesy, and to make it evident that the miraculous cure came from him, Luke adds that he rebuked the fever, commanded it to go as if it were an enemy. She ministered. Showing the cure was instantaneous and complete. The period of convalescence was usually long.

32. At even (1) because the heat of the day would have been too distressing to the sick, (2) because they did not wish to vio-

A GARDEN OF DELIGHT

My books are my picture gallery. Every man has his fine recreations and elegancies allowed him by the liberal God, as well as his chores. These noble English poems, so rich, so sincere, so colored in the grain, proceeding out of a depth of nature answering to the good Saxon heart in us, these are the Pitti Palace and Vatican of me and my friends. Why should I grudge the Grand Duke of Tuscany his gallery?... To teach his own the liberal God supplies. Only accept your own. Drink deep of this enjoyment. Know your books, and brilliant souls that soared and sang, and yet kept their own law, and so tell of great Nature to you. Your native, proper muses, your own cousins and college,—they are the wild flowers that fringe your sod; but go sometimes, of a morning or evening, into this garden of delight.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

late the sacred rest of the Sabbath day. At sunset the Sabbath ended; and so they felt themselves free to act. (3) By this time the news of Christ's miraculous power, two examples of which are reported, would have had time to spread over the city. Demons. They knew his true nature, but it would injure the Gospel to have Jesus seem to be allied to evil spirits, instead of being their great foe.

34. He healed many that were sick. All of them, says Matthew. He laid his hands on every one of them (Luke).

Matthew refers to this work of Jesus as fulfilling Isaiah's picture of the promised Messiah, so that the people could see that the picture was fulfilled by Jesus in every line.

55. A desert place. The old translation "solitary" gives the better idea of the place. It was deserted, not arid. "In solitary communion with his Father he seeks what he needs after the exertions and excitement of the first two days of his ministry (at Capernaum)."

36-39. Later in the morning the four followed Jesus and found him, and told him, "all are seeking thee." Jesus had decided what he ought to do, and he said unto them, Let us go "elsewhere."

—Illustrated Quarterly.

Practical Suggestions

There is an immense amount of sickness, poverty and suffering in the world, but it may all be brought to Jesus, who is the great sympathizing, all-powerful physician.

As Jesus took hold of the hand of the fever-laden mother, the strong clasp of his hand must have convinced her of the warm human sympathy of his heart. Have you felt that reassuring grasp?

Jesus as a helper and friend will appeal to men. Hold him forth as such. But before you can do that you must experience his divine help in your own heart.

Jesus wants witnesses, but he wants the kind whose lives will enable them to be a help and not a hindrance.

Does it seem strange that our Lord should depend so much on private communion with the Father, and that there he so often sought strength and guidance? His example is a reproof to our carelessness. If he needed prayer, how much more do we!

Leprosy is a fit symbol of sin; it disfigures the body, mars the divine image and makes one an outcast among men. And man knows no cure for sin, save the renewing power of the Son of God.

"LOS ANGELES—1928"

Preparations in Los Angeles for the Tenth Convention of the World's Sunday School Association, which will be held in that city July 11-18, 1928, are going steadily forward. A local Los Angeles Convention Committee has been formed and the Chairman is Rev. Rufus von KleinSmid, D.D., L.L.D., President of the University of Southern California. W. C. Pearce, L.H.D., is the Vice-Chairman. Dr. Pearce has an interesting dual relationship. Though on leave of absence, he is Associate General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association and for the past year has been General Secretary of the Southern California Sunday School Council of Religious Education and under his able leadership marked progress has been made by that organization. Early in November Dr. Pearce had numerous conferences in Los Angeles with Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D., also Associate General Secretary of the World's Sunday School Association and in charge of the work of that organization since November 1st. While Dr. Price was in Los Angeles, a special luncheon meeting was held which was participated in by the Chairmen of the various Convention sub-committees in Los Angeles. Each man is eager for the assigned work and together the local committee is purposing to care adequately for every detail involved in being host to over 7,000 delegates, assembled from over 50 nations. The Convention session will be held in the Shrine Civic Auditorium which is usually well appointed for such a gathering. Though the auditorium will hold over 7,000 people, each person can hear distinctly wherever seated. The great annex will be used for the educational and publishers' exhibits which will be set up under the general supervision of the Exhibit Committee of which Allan Sutherland, Room 232 Witherspoon Building, Philadelphia, is Chairman.

Elkhart, Indiana

The Elkhart C. E. reports briefly. Since their President, Donald Archer, has gone to Chicago to attend college, they have elected Joyce Pittinger in his place. Some five or six of this group attended the Shipshewana Training conference last summer and the reporter says they got a lot out of it. They conducted several social outings for their society during the late summer. They are having a good attendance and showing fine interest.

Bryan, Ohio

The new Secretary, Percy Connin, at Bryan sends us a report of their recent election of C. E. officers. Space will hardly permit the full report of this election. The newly elected President is Miss Willa McDowell. This society has been represented for several years in conventions, both state and international, even district, which gives considerable impetus in maintaining such an organization for the young people of the church.

Twelve Mile, Indiana

The Corinth church, through Miss Elda Kirtland, says they are interested in Christian Endeavor and are being encouraged by their pastor, to organize one. Let us hear from other churches like this one.

Varying the Meeting

For Prayer Meeting Committees

The Oregon Endeavor Bulletin suggests the following methods for varying the Christian Endeavor meeting. It takes only a very small variation, at times, to give a new character to the meeting.

Early Bird Meeting. Hold one meeting during the summer in the morning, either as an early sunrise prayer meeting, or just before the Bible school. This will be a pleasing variation, and will leave the entire afternoon and early evening free. Many societies adopt this plan for the entire summer. It may serve to get the attendance of the members who are afflicted with the "Sunday picnic" habit.

Picnic Meeting. Hold one meeting after the morning church service (a short meeting), and then adjourn with basket lunch to a picnic grove or to the country for the afternoon.

Sunshine Meeting. Hold one during the summer with some shut-in or elderly person, if possible. This meeting can be held on Sunday afternoon or evening, or during the week. It should be well planned, very simple in form, with some music in which the person visited can join, preferably older songs, and the talks should be very short and to the point. The entire meeting should not be more than thirty minutes long. It is well to take along some flowers or some remembrance to leave. There should be also quite a number of prayers in the meeting.

It is wonderful how much enjoyment a meeting of this kind will bring to some shut-in who loves the church and is not permitted to attend the services. It also brings a blessing to the Endeavorers who attend.

Neighborly Meeting. Hold one service at least with some other society, either in your own church or a neighboring church.

Hold one meeting at the church on a Friday or Saturday evening and adjourn for a "weenie" roast or picnic of some kind. (There may be some who object to a Christian Endeavor meeting held on any other day than Sunday, but others may approve of it once in a while. Would recommend it especially for the meeting the first Sunday in a month like July, as so many people go away over the third and fourth).

Woodsy Meeting. One meeting may be held in the woods. Take a picnic dinner and go out in the country for dinner and spend the afternoon there, holding the prayer meeting late in the afternoon or early in the evening. This may be held on Sunday, and is especially good for a nature meeting.

TO ENDEAVOR SOCIETIES

The Christian Endeavor Department in The Evangelist is to be given over wholly to the promotion of the work of the National and various district unions and as well that of local societies. The space is yours to use for reports of helpful meetings and methods of committee work. When you have something good, pass it on. Send your reports to the National President, Rev. E. M. Riddle, Warsaw, Indiana. We wish also to invite and urge all district and national department officers or superintendents or committee chairmen to send brief messages at frequent intervals. Magnify your office and co-operate in making this page helpful.—Editor.

Dash to the North Pole. This meeting could be held on a week night, or on Sunday where there is no evening church service. The plans are known only by the leader or prayer meeting chairman. The members meet at the church and receive notice that the first stop will be at Labrador, Greenland, or any such place. The street address also is given. At that place further instructions are given, and the crowd makes the rounds of two or three houses, the last being the North Pole. This should be a home where there is a piano. A short, snappy meeting is held and followed by a short social time. If desired, ice cream may be served. This meeting may be adapted for a missionary meeting, and the places stopped at may be countries on the way to the country to be studied, and light refreshments in keeping with that country may be served.

Company Meeting. This meeting is better held in the church, and each member is to bring some company. It makes no difference whether it is young people, children, or adults, just so long as they bring some company. The meeting should be well planned and should include some interesting special features.

Owl Meeting. One meeting during the summer may be held late Sunday evening, or after the evening church service. This would be especially good for real warm weather, and bring out some who seem to get out too late for the regular Christian Endeavor meeting.

LAW OBSERVANCE

By Amos R. Wells

Young Christians should try to realize that Christ is in them, and that their actions, therefore, should be his actions. That means that they will obey law as he did, and aim at doing good.

The consumer of bootleg liquor is a law-breaker as much as the bootlegger is. He is worse. He bribes the bootlegger to break the law. No bootlegger could exist if no one bought his wares. The man that pays him for liquor is paying him for breaking the law. The bribe-giver is as bad as the bribe-taker.

In the sermon on the mount Christ sets forth at length, with illustrations (read Matthew, chapters 5 to 7), his principle regarding observance of law. It is not merely to do what the law demands, but to go beyond its demands. The law says, "Thou shalt not kill"; Christ says: "More than that. Thou shalt not hate", which is the root of killing. So we must keep the law and go beyond it, for good measure.

Jesus' principle is to do good to the utmost limits. That cuts out all wrong-doing toward others. Take speeding. Jesus would certainly keep within the speed limit because of the danger to others.

Many Americans think they are clever when they break the tariff laws. They buy goods abroad and bring them into this country without paying duty on them. To do that they must lie. But they lie boldly. Obviously the thing that calls for a lie cannot be right. Would Jesus make a false declaration like this?

Gilbert Chesterton says: "When a man leaps from a high cliff, he does not break the law of gravitation. He simply illustrates it." We cannot break moral laws. They break us. That is another of Jesus' principles.

All the major crimes, robbery, violence, murder, would be eliminated if we were thoroughly Christian. The principle of loving service, which is Christ's principle of living, would make such things impossible. The true way to eliminate crime is to change the heart, and that is a slow process.

A law made by our legislature is a statement of principle or of what people ought to do. But more is necessary. People must want to obey the law. The more that want to obey, the easier it will be for others to obey. Example and sentiment count.—C. E. World.

There are people, says a Negro preacher, so deaf spiritually that you must speak the deaf-and-dumb language to make them hear.

NEWS FROM THE FIELD

ASHLAND MEMORIAL ENDOWMENT CAMPAIGN

Glenford and North Georgetown, Ohio in the Endowment

Glenford, Ohio

The church here is nestled among the hills of southeastern Ohio, in a small village. The members are largely agriculturalists, among whom are some of the descendants of Alexander Mack.

Brother B. F. Owen is the pastor and divides his time between this congregation and Williamstown, which are about 150 miles apart. He has his home at Columbus, Ohio.

The church building has been remodeled and is in good shape. The membership is not large and is scattered. The church is in good working condition. Brother Owen has served them eight years as pastor and it looks as though they would be satisfied to have him continue as long as he desires.

Brother Owen gave me every aid in visiting his families and it was a pleasure to get better acquainted with him.

The total gift of the congregation to the endowment was $300.00.

North Georgetown, Ohio

This congregation is very much depleted, many of the members have moved away, as there is very little to hold the young people. They have no preaching services, but maintain a Sunday school and W. M. S. I found some excellent families still holding to the faith and keeping up the work. The building is very much out of repair. The church is located in a small town, about 12 miles from Louisville, Ohio.

Brother Porte accompanied me in making the canvas. I see no reason why this place could not have regular services and maintain its work. A little more consecration on the part of all and financial support would put it across. This is the home church of the Stoffers who have contributed some splendid church workers.

Their gift was $235.00.

The total gift of these two small congregations is $535.00.

W. S. BELL

MARTINSBURG, PENNSYLVANIA

Dear readers: we are glad to present you with a cut of our church. Those of you who are acquainted with the work here, will notice there is very little to remind you of the old church. The marvel is, by those who have seen the interior and its arrangements, how so much could be accomplished with $8,000.00.

When the building was started, the first thing we did was to raise the old part two and one-half feet to make ample room for a basement. Fifteen feet were added to the east side, the vestibule and tower were torn away from the front of the old part and a vestibule built in the corner of the new as shown in the picture. There is a balcony built in the new part with a stairway in both front and back. We have ten Sunday school rooms aside from the main auditorium and the basement. Seven of these rooms can be thrown open into the main auditorium, giving us a seating capacity of about 330. The old plastering was removed and finished alike throughout. New light oak pews, pulpit and chairs replace the old. A small annex was built in the wall on the west side toward the parsonage, thus changing the pulpit from the north end to the west side. The parsonage can be seen in part in the cut. The basement has been nicely finished and a new heating plant installed. In all it makes a very beautiful and convenient place of worship.

Rev. Charles H. Ashman, pastor of the first Brethren church of Johnstown, was chosen for the speaker at our dedicatory service. He gave us three splendid messages, morning, afternoon and evening. Brother Ashman did his part well and his service was highly appreciated. The house was well filled at all these services. We regret we could not secure his service to follow the dedication with an evangelistic meeting.

At the outset of our building program, $3,500.00 was pledged and soon paid over into the treasury. On dedication day we raised $2,000.00 in cash and $1,000.00 in pledges, leaving an indebtedness of only $1,400.00. We feel greatly encouraged over this, and are very grateful to Brother Ashman for his part in putting across the program.

Remember us in prayer, brethren, that we may "Earnestly contend for the faith which was once delivered unto the Saints."

NEWS OF THE COLLEGE

The enrollment at this writing is as follows: College, 284; Saturday, 76; Piano, 48; Voice, 25; Violin, 17; Expression, 22. Total, 472.

Dr. Bell has been a frequent visitor at the College recently as he was canvassing nearby churches; Rittman, Fair Haven, Homerville, Danville, Ankenytown, Sterling, Smithville, Springfield Center, Louisville, Middlebranch, and others. All of these churches responded well as the reports in the Evangelist show.

I went with him over the week end to Ankenytown and Danville. No one knows just the hardships he endures until he is with him for a while. Changing tires with the thermometer 8 above zero, is not just so pleasant when you stop to think about it. I did this once, he does it very often. So the churches ought to receive him kindly, as in fact they do, and make it as easy for him as possible.

More than this, much depends upon the results of his campaign, more than we fully realize. But the progress is fine and the goal seems to begin to come into sight.

The College gratefully acknowledges the receipt of a woolen comforter from the Women's Missionary Society of Mexico, Indiana.

The College had the very good fortune to hear lately Dr. Charles Goodell, secretary of the division of Evangelism of the Federation of Churches of Christ in America, of which Dr. Parkes Cadman is the president. Dr. Goodell brought us a very inspirational message full of devotion and enthusiasm.

The new gymnasium is in daily use and proves to be just what we want as it meets our requirements very fully.

Professor Anspach gave recently several addresses to nearby Parent-Teacher Associations. Also before the Wayne County High School Teachers' Association. Professor Mason has also been called on for similar services.

The thanks of the College is due to Professor Haun for his gratuitous service in managing the Glee Clubs. The Boys' Glee Club has been planning a trip to our Virginia churches during the holidays. Definite announcements will be made later.

Mrs. Monroe recently came on from California. She met with us at the last meeting of the Faculty Club where many of us met her for the first time. The College is fortunate in having with us both Professor and Mrs. Monroe.

Mrs. Srack, of Lost Creek, who made an extended visit here, has started on her trip west. We were glad to have Mrs. Srack here and welcome her back.

School closes this Thursday, (December 22) and reconvenes Tuesday, January 10, 1928.

"PINE WHISPERS" STAFF CONDUCTING RESEARCH FOR WRITING OF AN ASHLAND COLLEGE HISTORY

A great deal of research has been conducted by the editorial staff of "Pine Whispers", the Ashland College yearbook, for the writing of the brief, but complete history of Ashland College which will be embodied in the 1928 issue of the school's annual.

Since next year brings about the fiftieth birthday of Ashland College it has become the aim and purpose of this year's "Pine Whispers" to commemorate the completion of the half a century of Christian educational work of the school with the publication of an annual that would be sort of a resume of the entire fifty years that Ashland College will have completed.

Letters to all the former presidents of the school, all who are living, were mailed accompanied by questionnaires. Responses to these letters have been forthcoming with but few exceptions and the material, the intimate reminiscences of the school life of other days, have proved of untold value to the editorial staff in the preparation of the history.

Among the letters received from former presidents was a lengthy communication of Rev. S. Z. Sharp of Fruita, Colorado, who came through with a wealth of material for publication in the 1928 book.

ELKHART, INDIANA

The Elkhart church is closing her year's work in a very pleasing way. 1927 has been an outstanding year for our people. Much has been accomplished yet we realize no work is so well done but that it might have been done better and that no service is so great but that it might have been greater.

The week's services following dedication resulted in the baptism of eight persons. Our fall communion was held November 30. Not so many attended, yet a goodly number, —the services carried with it the sacredness of "that upper room."

The Sunday school is steadily growing in numbers and strength. Our several class rooms adds convenience and efficiency to the work. The regular morning and evening services are well attended by our people and friends.

The mid-week prayer service continues in interest—the attendance is usually large, it seldom falls below fifty in numbers.

In fact every department of the church and Sunday school are working with the zeal of one who has a "definite purpose." There is a united effort on the part of all—we have learned the load is easier when everyone "pushes and pulls."

May we all realize as we close our year's work and step across the threshold of 1928 that the influence of this church is no greater than the influence of its members, and that the growth of the church depends on the growth of her members, individually.

We are being weighed in the balances. "Will we be found wanting?"

MRS. EDNA NICHOLAS.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

The revival campaign closed on Sunday, December 11. Thirteen members were added to the church. Dr. Charles A. Bame, the able evangelist, met with favor on every hand. The membership of the church was greatly strengthened by his sermons. His doctrinal sermons were instructive and were highly appreciated. The additional members will add much strength to the church and others are expecting to unite with the church soon.

It was our privilege on invitation to be with the church for the communion service on Monday evening, December 12. There were about seventy at the Lord's tables and the service was impressive throughout.

On the last Sunday of the campaign 115 were present in the Sunday school. We are predicting that this church will in time become a very strong church. The pastor, Brother E. J. Rohart, deserves much credit for his faithful leadership. He is a hard worker and success is assured if the whole membership wears the whole armor of God and stays in the fight against sin and works for the salvation of souls. The revival ought to continue. Much good seed has been sown which ought to bear fruit for a long time.

May the Lord give this church many and greater victories.

G. C. CARPENTER.

MANSFIELD, OHIO

It is almost unbelievable that nine months have passed by since we have given a report of the work we love here at Mansfield. With the fine impetus given to the work in the early spring (as we reported) with Brother S. C. Henderson as leader, our attendance at all services continued especially high during the summer. The Infantile Paralysis epidemic stopped services completely for two weeks, and hindered greatly for several more. Since October 1st, we have had by far the highest attendance for any similar period of time in four years. We would not leave the impression that the gains made have been the results of our own effort. We want in the remaining part of this report to mention the special efforts contributing to this gain.

First, we would mention a gain in confidence, confidence of the community in the church, and in the message of the church, and confidence of the members in themselves that under God, and with the Holy Spirit as their guide, they can do efficient work for him. We are really surprised in our visiting to find that a goodly number of the unchurched of the community are speaking most favorably of the church and her work, and show a live personal interest. We would not have you believe we are playing to a community spirit, rather we are preaching and teaching a straightforward Gospel Message. From results we would conclude that the results have been such that God can bless them. We praise him for it.

Second, we would mention the increased spiritual zeal of the church as a contributing factor. About a year ago we began to notice a change. Homes began to put family and private devotions into their daily life, the result was soon evident. Increased interest in the regular services of the church, increased devotion to mid-week services, increased willingness to serve in any capacity, and finally increased desire to see others know of Christ and his love. Visitation teams were the outgrowth of the latter. These people going out two by two have done much to interest people in the church, and much to prepare the way for a meeting in which our most recent blessing has come. And now—

Third, we want to mention that meeting which has so wonderfully fanned to a flame our Christian zeal. We mention it third not because it is third in importance, but because it is most recent from the viewpoint of time. Dr. J. C. Beal came with us on November 28th, and continued with us for two weeks. His messages, used and empowered by God's Spirit, constitute one of the finest spiritual feasts we have ever enjoyed. The large attendance at the services attest to the appreciation of the people for his messages. People who were from other churches, those of our own church of past years who had not attended in recent years, and many new families came. Through the combined efforts of Brother Beal and the membership of the church, 46 new homes that I have never heard of before are now open to our work. One home after a lapse into inactivity for 10 years or more, has rededicated itself and is now faithful, six came by confession.

The greatest result to the church is in the developed spiritual strength. Dr. Beal's messages are such as ring true to the Word, and such as create in one the desire for, and love of the Word of God. We enjoyed so much our labor with him, and desire personally and in behalf of the church to publicly thank him, and the Evangelistic and Bible Study League which he represents for every service rendered. We shall try hard to "Carry On" in this blessed work.

Recently three Christian Endeavor Societies have been organized,—a Junior, a Young People's, and an Adult. The average attendance is from 45 to 60 as a total. I have never worked in more enthusiastic societies.

A Junior Sisterhood, with Mrs. Barnard as patroness, is doing a very acceptable work. The W. M. S. with a continually increased zeal are attempting to reach all goals. At present, as a church we are planning for another great ingathering in a few months. Pray for us, we need it and greatly desire it.

R. D. BARNARD.

MANSFIELD, OHIO

It was the writer's privilege to lead in a meeting with Rev. Barnard and his good people in Mansfield, Ohio, beginning November 28. The meeting continued for two weeks and the Lord saw fit to add his blessing to the effort.

It was a pleasure to be privileged to return to this field of labor and renew friendships made in the days past while the writer was still in Ashland, Ohio. Then, too, there was experienced the joy of forming new friendships that will be cherished in the years ahead.

The Mansfield church has had dark days in the past. Many have been the hardships and disappointments. However, a brighter day seems to be dawning for the work. Brother Barnard has manifested a real spirit of determination that is bringing results. The hopes of this church, for the future, lie in the young people. I was surprised to find so large a class of young people in the Sunday school and the Christian Endeavor society. These should be won to Christ and added to the church membership and in this way the future should be made secure. Many of the faithful members of the past years are still at their place of duty. With the Word of God presented in its purity there should be a real future for the Brethren church of Mansfield. I believe there is a field here for our people and I am convinced their opportunity lies in being true to the fundamentals of our faith.

I shall leave to the pastor the task of reporting the meeting. Suffice it to say, I again found the people hungry for the Word given in its purity. There were present in the services people from a wide section of the city, drawn together because of their love for the unvarnished truth. The opportunity for the Brethren church everywhere is furnished by the crying need of men and women for a fearless presentation of the plain message of the Book.

I enjoyed my labors with Brother Barnard. He is a fine yoke-fellow. His earnestness and willingness to sacrifice for the work to which he has given his life cannot fail of results. I long for his greatest possible success and shall rejoice as I hear of the victories achieved in the Mansfield work.

My home, while in Mansfield, was with my brother and wife. They did everything possible for my comfort. Many of the homes of the membership were opened to me. For all these kindnesses I am indeed grateful.

May the Holy Spirit very definitely lead these people in their work in this difficult field and may he see fit to give real victory.

J. C. BEAL.

WINCHESTER, VIRGINIA

First Brethren Church

God is and has been wonderfully good to the new mission church located in the heart of the apple belt, the butterfly valley as well as the gateway to the Shenandoah valley. Our wonderful Christ has showered great blessings upon us. Praises be unto our ever present, ever living God.

We have just come to the close of one of the greatest revivals Winchester has ever had. With Dr. Bame as the evangelist we went forth to conquer in the name of the Lord Jesus Christ. We shall never forget those stirring and heartfelt messages. We are sorry our church was not made larger so more could have heard him, but thanks be unto the Winchester Star, our daily paper, which gave us ample space to publish each message. Thus many homes for miles around read his sermons. A special vote of thanks is extended to the diligent stenographer whom the evangelist brought with him.

Dr. Bame's speaking ability was recognized and appreciated with great acclamations by all who heard him. While he addressed a body of 800 students in the million dollar Handley High school auditorium he received the greatest praise given to any speaker of that platform. His message was thoroughly enjoyed by all.

We believe Evangelist Bame is a fearless Gospel preacher. One who sounds forth the whole Gospel in no uncertain tone. He made all his listeners realize just why we need a Brethren church here. There is no real reason why we could not have a Brethren church in many other cities and towns of this great nation of ours. With God's help we can. As a church and brotherhood we need more men with a vision and faith to build in new centers. God give us more such men and less of those who knock and tear down without any added construction. Deliver us from self and quicken those of us who are spiritually dead so that we may respond to our opportunity and need of a greater and bigger building program. We have made great strides here as a church which is not two years old. With our pastor, Brother Rohart whom we love so well we have built a Sunday school with a membership of 174 members. We are limited now for room and crowded. We will soon have to extend our walls. As a new church we are becoming more united in every way.

As far as the visible results of our meeting are concerned there were 14 who made a new start towards God. Eleven of these were baptized. There are still many others with whom the Spirit is working. Dr. Bame's fearless and simple preaching opened the eyes of many saints whose lives are not wholly surrendered to the Lord. Some who were professors and not possessors, found a new victory in Christ over the world, the flesh and the devil. God give us more followers who walk in the spirit instead of the energy of the flesh. Amen. Let all the brethren say Amen.

CHAS. W. BUHL, Superintendent.

GRAVELTON, INDIANA

During the two weeks between November 20th and December 4th, our little rural church here at Gravelton enjoyed a feast of gospel singing and sermons. Rev. Clarence Stewart of Mexico, Indiana, and Mr. Harley Zumbaugh of Tiosa, Indiana, came to us in a special evangelistic effort at that time. The sermons which Brother Stewart brought each evening were of the very highest type and they readily found their way into the hearts of the people. Brother Zumbaugh upheld his usual honor in directing the singing each evening. The visible results were one addition to the church by letter and four by confession.

The meeting was unique in that it was in this church that Brother Stewart first learned the truths of Christianity when he was a pupil in our Sunday school. And while he has long been removed from our community, he looks back to this church as the one that gave him his first lessons in things spiritual. The entire community was glad to welcome him back and the church is very happy over the thought that her influence helped to start this one life in the right direction and into service for the Master.

The church here is very grateful for the services of these two men and for the splendid inspiration they were to both the church and the community.

MRS. CLARENCE SMITH.

MANUEL AND NAPFOR, KENTUCKY

On December 11th we had with us at Manuel Brother Thomas Allen of Combs, Kentucky, who delivered a splendid sermon after the morning Sunday school session to a large and appreciative audience. The mission school is progressing rapidly with much interest on the part of the community. The field is large and we need more help in every way. I find it a hard task to support the work, but after all these hardships I have found a great pleasure, because I am doing the will and work of the Lord, and also because I am working in a place where the true Word has not been taught. I am praying that I may be more able than ever to put a shining light in the minds and hearts of these people that they may gain eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. I trust that we may be remembered in these two fields. I have found it a great pleasure to commune with my Heavenly Father about the work elsewhere being done in the name of the Lord.

Brother Allen and I made a six mile hike to Grapevine and back to Napfor, where he preached another good sermon at two o'clock. A goodly number of folks were in attendance, and much interest was shown in the Sunday school. The work is going nicely here with the faithful assistance of Mr. L. Johnson, Mr. and Mrs. Boyd Baker, Mrs. Mann and others. Remember 1 Timothy 6:12, also 2 Timothy 2:22. Let us continue the great warfare and fight with a sound Gospel.

PADDY BEAR'S NEW YEAR RESOLUTION

By Helen A. Monsell

There was company at Paddy Bear's home. Auntie Bear and her son, Fuzzy, had come to spend Christmas and New Year's day with Paddy Bear and his folks in the blue-black cave in the heart of the woods.

Every day, while Mama Bear and Auntie Bear "visited with each other in the cave, Paddy Bear would take Fuzzy out to play. Fuzzy was bigger than Paddy Bear, and his play was often rough. When they rolled and tumbled around, he would bump into Paddy and hurt him badly. Paddy Bear, though, tried not to mind, and because Fuzzy was his guest, he always would let him choose what to play next.

That is why, on New Year's Day, when Fuzzy said, "Oh, I know what let's do—let's make New Year's Resolutions!" Paddy Bear answered, "All right", although he didn't know what a New Year's resolution was.

He was afraid Fuzzy might make fun of him if he asked about it, but he knew Mama Bear wouldn't tease.

"Wait a minute before we start," he told Fuzzy. "I want to ask Mama something."

Then he ran into the kitchen of the blue black cave, where Mama bear was making bread.

"Mama," he asked, all out of breath from running, "how do you make a New Year's resolution?"

"Why", said Mama Bear, "If, on New Year's Day, you make up your mind to do something all the rest of the year that will make you a better little bear, or will help make some one else happy, you call that a New Year's resolution."

Paddy Bear thought, for a minute or two; then he ran back to his cousin.

"All right", he called. "I know what my New Year's resolution is going to be."

"What is it?" asked Fuzzy.

"Every day I am going to go down to the spring to get the water, so that Mama Bear won't have so much work to do."

"Humph!" said Fuzzy. "I don't think that's much of a resolution."

"But I am going to do it without grumbling", said Paddy. "That's part of the resolution."

"Well, I can make one a lot better than that!" said Fuzzy. "I am going to exercise every day until I'm so strong that I can push the big rock in front of my house right down the hill!"

"My", said Paddy Bear, "that is a fine resolution!" He felt ashamed he hadn't been able to think up something big like that. Just bringing up the water every day seemed like such a little thing to do.

But just the same, every morning, after Fuzzy Bear and his mother had gone home, Paddy would go down to the spring with his two buckets, fill them with water, and carry them back to Mama Bear. At first they seemed very, very heavy. He had to stop two or three times going up the hill to rest. After awhile, though, he could carry them all the way without stopping. You see, although he didn't know it, carrying that water was very good exercise, and he was growing stronger every day.

He would often think of Fuzzy Bear. "My, I wonder if he's grown strong enough yet to push that rock down the hill! I certainly would enjoy watching him do it."

Finally, Mama Bear and Paddy started out to visit Auntie Bear. Paddy could hardly wait until dinner was over and he and Fuzzy could go out to play.

"How's your New Year's resolution?" he asked right away. "Can you push that rock down the hill yet?"

Fuzzy Bear looked sheepish. "I didn't practice more than a day or two", he said. "It was too much work. I guess I could push it, though, if I tried."

He went over to the big rock, and began to push and tug at it, but he couldn't move it even a teeny-weency bit. At last he fell back, puffing and grunting.

"It is not such a big rock, though," said Paddy Bear. "I believe I'll try it myself."

So he began pulling and tugging. And, would you believe it? Carrying that water up the hill every day for months had made his arms so strong that pretty soon—puff; pull! push—that rock began to roll down the hill!

"My, but you are strong!" cried Fuzzy, and Mama Bear and Auntie Bear, who had come out to watch, began to clap their paws.

"You see, it was a good New Year's resolution after all", said Mama Bear. "You've not only been helping me; you've been helping yourself, too."

"And you kept your resolution" Auntie Bear added. "It wouldn't have made any difference how good it was, if you hadn't kept on working over it after you had made it."

"Can you make resolutions any time but New Year's Day?" asked Fuzzy. "Because I want to make one right now just like Paddy Bear's, and I am going to keep it just as he did, too."—Child Life.

THE TIE THAT BINDS

HEARN-BRYANT—Maurice L. Hearn and Gladys V. Bryant also members of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, were united in marriage at the home of the bride's parents on the 22nd day of June, by Rev. Sherman of Asbury Park, N. J., an old friend of the family. These are most promising young people and we expect to see the Church of Christ greatly benefited as a result of this union. Many are the well wishes which their friends bear toward them.
R. PAUL MILLER.

HOWARD-BRYANT—Carlton Howard and Viola Bryant, both members of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, were united in holy wedlock at the home of the bride's parents on Thanksgiving Day. The home was most beautifully decorated and the service was conducted by Rev. Sherman of Ashbury Park, N. J., an old friend of the family. The pastor of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, assisted. R. PAUL MILLER.

FENNIMORE-KNOLL—Duncan B. Fennimore and Caroline N. Knoll, were united in marriage at a quiet wedding in the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, May 28, 1927. Mr. Fennimore is a member of a Lutheran church but Miss Knoll is a member of the First Brethren church of this city, and are a very fine young couple. A multitude were present at the wedding to wish them a most happy beginning of their wedded life. R. PAUL MILLER.

ADAMS-HOFFMAN—At a quiet home wedding Robert Adams (III) and Edna Hoffman, were united in marriage, April 6th, this year. Young Mr. Adams is a promising young business man of the city and Miss Hoffman has been many years a member of this church. We all wish them a very happy life together. R. PAUL MILLER.

KEARNS-MILLER—Richard Albert Kearns and Florence R. Miller, both members of the First Brethren church of Philadelphia, were united at a very appropriately arranged wedding in the church on the 26th day of August. This young couple have every promise of rich blessing and great fruitfulness, being both members of the church and building their home on the Cross as a foundation. A host of friends were present to wish them a most happy life. R. PAUL MILLER.

MILLS-HERMAN—On the 31st day of October Warner Mills and Miss Sophia M. Herman were united in marriage at a beautiful church wedding held in the First Brethren church of this city. While Mr. Mills is not a member of this church, yet he is a Christian, and Miss Herman being a member of this church, gives them the promise of a happy Christian home which we hope and pray will increase in blessing and fruitfulness, as the years come and go. R. PAUL MILLER.

GALLACHER-WEST—Two other members of this church, Edward F. Gallacher and Elsie M. West, were united in marriage on Wednesday evening, November 23rd, at a beautiful church wedding also held in the First Brethren church of Philadelphia. These young folks having been members of the church since their youth, drew a great host of friends to their wedding ceremony and all these extend to them their best wishes for a happy life of great service to God and man. R. PAUL MILLER.

IN THE SHADOW

STRAYER—Mrs. Mary E. Strayer, wife of John K. Strayer, died at her home in Hollidaysburg, Pa., November 13, 1927. She was sick only a few hours, and her death was attributed to complications and heart disease. She was born in Blair township near Kladder station, April 27, 1873, the daughter of Levi and Mrs. Mary DeLozier. She is survived by her husband and three sons, J. W., and R. D. Strayer of Hollidaysburg, and R. K. Strayer, Lancaster, and the following brothers and sisters: William DeLozier of Altoona, Samuel DeLozier of Blair township, Mrs. Martha Brenner of Johnstown, Mrs. Della Finnigan of Hollidaysburg and Mrs. Grace Wineland of Leamersville. Mrs. Strayer has been a long faithful member of the McKee Brethren church and will be greatly missed. The funeral service was conducted in the McKee Brethren church, by the pastor. We are certain these bereaved ones will find comfort in him who said, "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." JAS. S. COOK.

DIVELY—Mrs. Clara Leah Dively, wife of Jacob Dively, died at their home near Vicksburg, November 21, 1927. Sister Dively was seemingly enjoying good health, somewhat better than usual. Her daughter Mary, aged 17, was near death's door, and was as helpless as a baby, all summer and fall, and her mother had nursed her back to health and strength again. Mary was able to walk and care for herself in most part. About one o'clock Monday morning Sister Dively awoke seemingly short of breath and only lived a few minutes. The last thing she did before retiring for the night was to tuck Mary in bed, and assist the two smaller boys to say their prayers.

She was married to Jacob Dively in 1899. To this union were born eight children, of whom six are now living, Nellie, William, Guy, Mary, Paul, and Ray Dively. These with the father, three brothers and sisters are left to mourn their loss. Mrs. Dively was a devoted Christian mother. She was a faithful member of the McKee Brethren church, and will be greatly missed by all. Funeral was conducted in the church by the pastor. J. S. COOK.

BORT—Mrs. Helen Himes Bort, wife of D. E. Bort, died at her home in Louisville, Ohio, on October 5, 1927, after about nine months' illness. She left a family of four small daughters and her husband. Funeral services were held from the home by the undersigned. R. F. PORTE.

SUMMER—Levi Summer was a lifelong resident of Stark county. He died at his home in Louisville, Ohio on October 29, 1927 at the age of 68 years. Brother Summer had been an invalid for nearly three years as the result of a paralytic stroke. He had been a member of the Brethren church for more than 40 years. He is survived by his wife, one son, and one daughter. Funeral services from the church by the pastor. R. F. PORTE.

RHOADES—Mrs. Clara Rhoades died at her home near Louisville, Ohio, on November 13, 1927, at the age of 30 years. She was the wife of Alvin S. Rhoades who survives. Mrs. Rhoades was a member of the First Brethren Sunday school. Funeral services were conducted by the undersigned, assisted by Rev. O. N. Johns of the Mennonite church. R. F. PORTE.

TRITCH—Sister Cora Tritch, daughter of Lewis and Mary Ehrstine, was born near Taylorsburg, Ohio, October 17th, 1877 and departed this life November 29th, 1927, at the age of 50 years, 1 month and 12 days.

Sister Tritch was a member of the Dayton church for 14 years. For many years she has resided in Columbus and has been a generous supporter and faithful worker in the Columbus church. On October 24th, we anointed Sister Tritch. During her illness Brother R. E. Gotschall, pastor of our church at Columbus, was very faithful in his ministrations to Sister Tritch. He conducted a short service at Columbus, and was present and assisted in the service of the Dayton church. A devoted husband, an aged father and two brothers survive the departed. Our deepest sympathy goes out to those who have lost a noble and faithful wife, daughter, and sister. WM. H. BEACHLER, Pastor.

ZIMMERMAN—Chester A. Zimmerman of Waynesboro, Pa., passed to the great beyond November 8, 1927 at the age, within a few days, of thirty-four years. The immediate cause of his death was peritonitis, which developed from an operation for appendicitis.

Brother Zimmerman united with the Brethren church at Waynesboro, under the ministry of Dr. M. A. Witter, February 15, 1914. He continued a faithful and true Christian, ever manifesting an interest in the work of the church. At the time when death claimed him, he was assistant Sunday School Superintendent and President of the Men's Bible Class.

He is survived by his wife, one son, his parents and two brothers. In the absence of the writer, funeral services were conducted by Rev. J. M. Moore, pastor of the local Church of the Brethren. May God's blessing be with the bereaved ones. W. C. BENSHOFF.

MEREDITH—Mrs. Gladys Kimmel Meredith was born November 19th, 1898 at the Kimmel homestead near Falls City, Nebraska, and departed this life June 24th, 1927 at Fort Morgan, Colorado, at the age of 28 years, 7 months, and five days. Her passing came after an illness of about three weeks, as a result of septic pneumonia, which developed after the birth of a baby daughter.

Mrs. Meredith attended Falls City High School, Peru State Normal College, and the Conservatory of Music at Lincoln, after which she taught music in the public schools. She was married to John Meredith August 16th, 1922 and they established their home in Falls City but moved to Fort Morgan about two years ago. Mrs. Meredith has been a faithful member of the Falls City Brethren church since childhood, and while in Fort Morgan she was actively engaged in the work of the church. She is survived by her husband; her little daughter, Marilyn; her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edwin Kimmel; a sister, Esther; two brothers, Erwin, Jr., and Robert, and numerous other relatives and friends.

Funeral services were conducted by the writer, in the Falls City church, with the church packed to capacity while as many more paid their respects by standing outside during the services.

"Say not that she is dead. It is not death
To pass from out this vale of suffering and strife
Into the peace and calm which lie beyond
The Western hills—out into LIFE."

STUMP—Mrs. Harriett Stump was born July 20th, 1849 in Somerset County, Pennsylvania, and passed into the Great Beyond October 16th, 1927, at the age of 78 years, 2 months and 27 days. Her departure came as a result of a stroke of paralysis after being bedfast for almost three years.

Mrs. Stump joined the Church of the Brethren at the age of thirteen years and after moving from Pennsylvania to Falls City she became one of the charter members of the Falls City church. She is survived by eight children, five step-children, five sisters and many other relatives and friends. The children who survive her are, three sons: Cleve and Lee Stump and Louis Wise and five daughters: Mrs. Mahlon Stump, Mrs. Jake Reed, Mrs. George Price, Mrs. Jake Gible and Mrs. Paul Chapman. Her husband, Solomon Stump, preceded her in the journey through the portals called death.

Funeral services were conducted in the Falls City church, by the writer, in the presence of a large audience.

"Servant of God, well done!
Thy Glorious warfare's past.
The battle's fought, the race is won.
And thou art crowned at last."

A CHRISTMAS PRESENT

Christmas day has come and gone, leaving in its wake joy and happiness and also some disappointments and sorrows. Some people have experienced the joy of giving and others have found joy in receiving. Not many have had the experience, perhaps, of being both the giver and receiver of the same gift; but this was the experience of the Publishing House this season. Just a few days before Christmas we made ourselves a Christmas present by installing a new furnace in the basement for heating the large work room of the Publishing house, and it just works fine, which makes the employees happy.

The Brethren Evangelist

Last week we sent letters and subscription blanks to all the churches that have been receiving the special numbers of the Evangelist for the past three months urging them to secure as many permanent subscriptions to the paper as possible at this time. We are anxiously awaiting the results of the efforts to introduce the church paper into new homes that we have been making for three months. It seems the matter must be kept constantly before the membership of the church or they will forget. Let us not forget at this time, for we sincerely believe it is a Christian duty to support the official organ of the church to which we belong.

Publication Day

The FOURTH Sunday in January is the day set for the annual offering to reduce the indebtedness on the building occupied as the home for all the publications of the Brethren church. This is January twenty-second this year. At the rate the offerings have been made for the past few years it will require six years yet to complete the payment for the building. It seems to us we should be able to do a little better than that and complete it in about three years. Complete cooperation on the part of all our churches would do it. We shall go into more complete details in another issue. We are only asking you to remember the date, January twenty-second, at this time.

THE WISE FRIEND

Once upon a time—and not very long ago—there was a brother and sister who had a friend. A very special friend he was, who told them stories about men who flew through the skies over far-flung spaces of the earth; of boys and girls who had thrilling and mysterious adventures; of others who had most unusual situations confront them, yet managed to come through their tests with steadfast and courageous hearts; of wild animals in deep jungles—how they lived, hunted, and died. Such a host of things did their good friend tell them of, and how interestingly he told them!

Came the time when their friend moved away to another town. Brother and sister were saddened by his going, for they knew they would miss his cheery smile and the wonderful stories and amusing anecdotes he was so fond of telling them. Then one day the postman brought them a letter from their friend, in which he told them he was sending them The Youth's Companion so that they would not forget him, and that in it they would find just the sort of stories they had so much enjoyed hearing him tell.

And sure enough, a day or two later the magazine arrived, and brother and sister found that it truly did have just such wonderful stories of adventure and sport and mystery, and just such jokes as they loved so well. And every time that a new number of The Youth's Companion arrived, they wrote a note to their friend and told him how much pleasure the magazine gave them.

You, too, may have just that same pleasure, or give that pleasure, by means of a subscription to The Youth's Companion. Subscribers will receive:

1. The Youth's Companion—12 big monthly issues in 1928, and
2. Two extra numbers to new subscribers ordering within 30 days.

All for only $2.

3. The Companion's new book of humor "1001 One Minute Stories" also included FREE (send 10 cents to cover postage and handling).
